CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 7l. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s., mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s., japanned chairs, 2s each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 14s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. PORTSMOUTH, May 10.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Lily, 16, arrived from the Coast of Africa on Sunday, for the purpose of having THREE Courts-Martial held on her officers, which are fixed to take place on Monday, on board the Victory, the Britannia being in dock under repair. The Benbow is to go out of the basin on Monday, to make room for the Britannia: the dock in which she is repairing being required for the Queen after she is launched on Wednesday. Clio was commissioned on Tuesday by Commander C. Deere, and Revenge this morning by Lieut. Davis, for Capt. the Hon. W. Waldegrave. Curlew was paid advance yesterday, and has since gone to Plymouth to wait further orders. The Vigilant freight-brig, with the lower-deck guns of the Melville, did not sail for the Cape until yesterday. Hastings has not arrived, although hourly looked for: she is no doubt retarded by the east wind, which has been blowing a gale for the last 48 hours. Lightning and Hydra steamers are in the harbour, to attend her the moment she is announced to be in sight. Avon steamer, from Liverpool, has been here with volunteer seamen; and the Gossamer, from the same port, with 15 for the Benbow. Childers goes out of the basin next week. Queen is to be launched about noon on Wednesday, and afterwards hauled into dock to be coppered. It is rather surprising that the Blonde has not been put in commission by the Admiralty, previous to going out of office; the same observation applies to the Illustrious—report gives her to Capt. Sir Thomas Troubridge. Ships in Port—Lily at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Benbow, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Childers, Clio, Hydra, Lightning, Messenger steamers; Emerald, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, May 9.—(From our own Correspondent.)—3d.—Arrived Lightning st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. N. Williams, from Portsmouth, with Adm. Sir G. Moore, his Lady, and Capt. H. Eden; also Carron st.-v., from Portsmouth; it is said she is to be stationed here as a tug. The Hamoaze lighter arrived from Liverpool and Pembroke. Royal Adelaide, 104, was paid off this day, and the flag of Lord A. Beauclerk was hauled down at sunset. Taswell, Coxswain to Capt. White of Royal Adelaide, was presented with the Admiralty medal, and awarded a gratuity of 15*l.*, and a pension of 24*l.* per ann., for good conduct and long service; and Myrtell, Captain of the Foretop, also received a medal, a gratuity of 7*l.*, and a pension of 24*l.* per ann., for good conduct and long service. The serviceable stores and fittings of the Royal Adelaide are to be transferred to the Impregnable. A melancholy accident happened yesterday evening on board the Powerful, 84, Capt. Napier. Mr. Kent, a volunteer of the 1st class, in descending from the mizzen rigging, missed his hold, and fell on the poop, fractured his skull, and was otherwise so much injured that he survived but a short time. His remains were interred on the 9th inst. with Military honours, nearly the whole of the officers in the garrison and Navy attending. 4th—Impregnable, 101, was commissioned this day by Capt. Henry Eden, and the flag of Adm. Sir G. Moore was hoisted on board the Royal Adelaide, where it will remain until the Impregnable is rigged, the customary salutes took place as usual. 5th—Sailed Lightning st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. N. Williams, for Portsmouth. 6th—Arrived Hecate st.v. from Chatham, on her way to the Clyde, to get her machinery and boilers fixed. Mr. Henderson, Assistant to the Master-Attendant in this Dock-yard, brought her round, and will also take charge of her to her place of destination. Arrived Steale, tender to Astrea, with old stores from Falmouth, and sailed on her return to that port on 8th. 9th—Sailed Camel, lighter, with a detachment of troops to relieve those doing duty at Pendennis-castle Falmouth; 20 additional sawyers are ordered to be entered in this Dock-yard. Racehorse, 18, Com. Hon. E. A. J. Harris, is ready for sea, and will move into the Sound in a day or two; she is to proceed to Quebec, and takes out supernumeraries for different ships on that station. Harpy, 10, lately paid off at this port, is ordered to be prepared for sale. Four boys are to be added to each of the crews of the lighters employed in carrying stores from and to the different Dock-yards, and other places, in order to practice them in seamanship. Letters have been received from Hercules, 74, Captain E. Barnard, from Barbadoes, which state that she was ordered to proceed to Jamaica, and take on board the 37th regt., and convey them to Halifax, from whence she was to return to England, and may be expected the latter end of the present month. Captain Childs, Rl. Marines, is ordered to Pembroke, v. Palliser. First Lieutenant M'Carthy, Rl. Marines, has undergone a medical examination, previous to being placed on half-pay. Two fires occurred on Friday evening last, one at a chemist's, in Fore-street, Devonport, the other at a baker's, near the Dock-yard walls; by the prompt and active exertions of the military, the artificers and police belonging to the Dock-yard, they were soon extinguished, without doing very much injury. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Racehorse, Carron and Hecate steamers. In the Sound—Powerful.

MILFORD HAVEN, 8th May.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Commander Corbyn, having been appointed to the Victory at Portsmouth, for service of the ordinary, is to be superseded in the packet service at this port by Commander W. H. Higgs. The latter officer has not yet arrived, and consequently Commander Corbyn has not left. Mr. James Luke, of Pembroke Dock-yard has been appointed Principal Converter at Chatham, on a salary of 250*l.* per annum, and is to be succeeded by Mr. Pullinger, from the latter establishment, at 200*l.* This is an increase of 50*l.* per annum on the former salary at Pembroke. Notwithstanding the unsettled state of some parts of Wales, the Arsenal at Pembroke is still left unprotected. The attention of the Government ought to be directed to this important fact, over which the officers of the Arsenal have no control. The Prospero from Woolwich on her voyage to the Clyde, with the Hecate, is hourly expected to call in, and will shortly resume her duties on the station. The Monkey is then either to be sent surveying the Bristol Channel, in conjunction with the African, or to Woolwich, to be laid up. Arrived the Tortoise, lighter; and sailed the Hamoaze.

DEPTFORD, 8th May.—Parkfield convict-ship has sailed from Deptford to embark convicts from Woolwich and Sheerness. Cornwall convict-ship has sailed for Gravesend to embark convicts. Arrived Marquess of Huntly troop-ship for Quebec, and Recovery emigrant-ship, in which a party of Sappers and Miners have embarked to survey Australia. The Stakesby transport is preparing to pay off, and the Alonzo transport, clearing. Sackville for Sierra Leone, the Adm. Moorsom for Jamaica, are taking in cargoes, and the Neptune, for Australia. The two Dutch steamers remain; the double docks, bridges, caissons, &c., are under repair. All Caulkers and Mates are to be paid 7*s.* a month tool-money, when working on Her Majesty's ships, under the ship's carpenters.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.—We perceive, by an advertisement in our columns, that the friends of this excellent institution will hold their first festival on the 28th inst., and that the Earl of Yarborough, one of its most zealous patrons, has consented to take the chair. Many distinguished and influential persons have promised their presence and support.

On Wednesday se'nnight the first trial was made of the Archimedes steamer, propelled by the patent screw fixed in the dead wood of the vessel, immediately in front of the rudder, but entirely under water, thus doing away at once with paddle-wheels, boxes, and their cumbrous apparatus. The Archimedes went 10 miles per hour through the water, and 13 miles an hour with the tide, but against the wind, and steered with the greatest exactness. She started again on Saturday afternoon, and went to Gravesend in one hour and forty minutes.

It is not improbable, from the ill-health of Adm. Sir R. Stopford, that a change will shortly take place in the Mediterranean command, as it is known that the gallant Admiral has applied to be superseded.—Plymouth Herald.

GENERAL MEMORANDUM [by Rear-Adm. Sir F. L. Maitland, K.C.B.:—

"Khoratchee, 6th Feb., 1839.—It is with much satisfaction I communicate to the Captain, officers, and whole of the ship's company of the Wellesley, an extract from a letter addressed to me by Brigadier Valliant, commanding the reserve of the Army now in Scinde, dated 8th inst., after their having conveyed H.M.'s 40th reg. of Inf. from Mandarie to Khuratchee, and landed them at the latter place. I was perfectly aware that the officers and ship's company of the Wellesley, as well as of all H.M.'s ships, would, under every circumstance, when called upon for the good of the public service, put up cheerfully with inconvenience, and that every exertion would be made to render our brethren in arms as comfortable as their crowded state would admit, but it must be most gratifying for them all to know, that their exertions for this purpose have been duly appreciated in the present instance. I cannot allow this occasion to pass, without expressing my warmest approbation of the conduct of all on board the Wellesley, not only during the time the 40th reg. were embarked, but also of their active and steady exertions in putting them on shore, and the admirable manner in which they opened and maintained a fire on the fortress on the Point of Munhaira, which is highly creditable to all concerned, as, in less than an hour, they reduced to a mass of ruins a strong, well-built fort, placed in a position that rendered its destruction peculiarly difficult to effect; and, although little opposition was offered, I am satisfied that, had the fort been better armed and garrisoned, the result must have been the same, as few land batteries could have withstood the heavy and well-directed fire kept up by the Wellesley.

"FRED. L. MAITLAND, R.-Adm. and Naval Com.-in-Chief.

"To Capt. Maitland, and the Officers of H.M.S. Wellesley."

Extract from the Letter referred to.—"I cannot refrain from taking this opportunity of again expressing my grateful thanks for the very great kindness and attention I and all the officers of H.M.'s 40th reg. have received from your Excellency and Capt. Maitland, who studied all our wants; and the kindness of all the officers and persons of all ranks in the Wellesley to every individual of the 40th reg. was such as will ever be remembered with the greatest pleasure by us all.

"On board H.M.S. Wellesley, off the harbour of Khuratchee, 3d Feb., 1839."

MALTA, April 10.—The Queen Dowager departed on the 1st, in the Hastings, accompanied by the Rodney, 92, Capt. Parker, Vanguard, 80, Capt Sir T. Fellowes, Asia, 84, Capt. Usher, and Castor, 36, Capt. Collier. At 7 they cleared the harbour with a light breeze from the S.W., steering N.W.: at 9, when off St. Paul's Bay, a signal was made from the Hastings to the effect that Her Majesty commanded the company to dinner, at half-past 4, of the Captains of the respective ships. They passed Gozo at about 10. At 4 P M. they hove to, lowered their boats, and the respective Captains went on board the Hastings, except Sir T. Fellowes, who excused himself on the plea of indisposition. At 7 the ships again hove to, lowered their boats, and got the Captains on board. During the night the wind increased, and at daybreak on Tuesday they were under double-reefed topsails and foresail, with their topgallant masts and yards lowered, owing to its blowing very hard from the S E. At 8 A M. they were off Maritimo, when the Hastings made a signal—"If the Commodore wishes to part company, he can do so; the Queen bids you all farewell, and you have her best wishes." The Commodore then signalised to the other ships under his orders to haul their wind on the starboard tack, blowing at the time very strong, on which account they could not otherwise salute Her Majesty than by hoisting their ensigns. At noon it blew a perfect hurricane, such as no officer or seaman in the squadron had ever before experienced in the Mediterranean. Rodney's main-deck guns were constantly under water, and Vanguard and Asia were excessively wet indeed, no other sail could be shown than the main trysail. Rodney, Asia, and Castor split their main topsails in the act of taking them in, and several other damages were suffered by each of the ships On Wednesday the wind veered to the west, blowing so fresh as to baffle the endeavours of the ships to avail themselves of it, by getting to the windward of Maritimo and the mainland of Sicily, and reaching their anchorage in Malta Harbour on Saturday morning at 8 o'clock. The British squadron in port are busily engaged taking in four months' provisions, and it is rumoured that the ships will put to sea very shortly. Lieut. Lord Henry Russell, invalided from the Tyne, has gone home in the Hastings, and Lieut. Davy, late of Castor, takes his passage in the Firefly, to sail for England about 15th inst. Mr. Douglas, son of the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, who lately met with a serious accident whilst serving on board Conqueror, now in our Naval Hospital, is doing well.

CAPT. HEWETT AND THE DISPATCH.—This case, so far as it was made known to us, appeared to be a gross libel on Captain Hewett and the service. On Wednesday, however, Captain Hewett accepted an explanation in the Court of Queen's Bench, from the defendants, whose counsel stated—"That they had discovered that the paragraph contained a very exaggerated statement of the circumstances of the case, and that, in fact, there was nothing in the transaction which could fix on the character of Captain Hewett any imputation of cruelty."

After this, the authors of the most atrocious paragraphs on the Service may expect to escape; indeed we are sure that the penny-a-liners of "Horrors of the Lash," &c., will be most grateful to Captain Hewett, and pursue their trade with additional zeal.

A great number of foreign Naval Officers, especially Danes, Swedes, and Dutch, have just been attached to the Russian Navy actually in service.

Mr. Kent, 1st class volunteer, was killed last week by a fall from the mizen rigging of H.M.S. Powerful. See Plymouth letter.

The Mastiff and Woodlark have resumed their surveying duties in Scotland.

The following Mates passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College, Portsmouth, on Tuesday:—Mr. G. W. Boothby, Mr. W. T. Bate, Mr. M. G. H. W. Ross, Mr. H. H. M'R. Page, Mr. W. R. Rolland, Mr. H. D. Blanckley, Mr. R. R. Easto, Mr. F. Morris.

COAST GUARD.—Very great changes, we repeat, are on the eve of taking place in this service, with the view to which the clerks in the Coast Guard Office have been laboriously employed in making returns. The Asp tender, attached to the Lyme district, chased and boarded the Elisa, French smuggling vessel, on the morning of the 6th May. Her cargo, consisting of 130 tubs, have been crept up by the Asp's boath, and those of the Vulcan steamer.

33d—Prince George of Cambridge sailed for Malta on the morning of 26th ult. There was a guard of honour, consisting of a Captain and three Subalterns at the Governor's house, and at the place of embarkation. On H.R.H. embarking, a royal salute was fired by the Artillery, and another from H.M.B. Wasp. The Colonels commanding regts. and the heads of departments, together with all the officers of the garrison, were present. H.R.H. was very much attached to the 33d, he was drilled in it, did Ensign's, Lieutenant's, Captain's, Major's duty, and, finally, had the command of the regt. He was a frequent guest of the mess, together with Col. Cornewall, and was always to be seen riding or walking in company with some of the officers. The day previous to his departure, he called on every one of its officers at their respective quarters, to shake hands with them; and about a week before that, at a dinner given to the heads of the Rock, to meet H.R.H. at the 33d mess, in a speech returning thanks for his health, &c. &c., being proposed by the Governor, he said, "The civility I have received during my short sojourn here from every member of the garrison, is beyond anything, but more especially from the 33d. The 33d Regt. I shall always bear in mind as long as I am on this earth, and, if it shall please God to throw me in their way again, I shall be more than happy to meet,—but it will be, I hope, my lot, if I should not see the whole regt. at once, to meet one by one." "Brigade Order, by Brig. Valliant, Commanding Scinde Reserve.—The Brigadier commanding the reserve Scinde force cannot allow a day to pass without congratulating the troops under his command in having accomplished, in conjunction with H.M.'s Naval forces, the object for which they were sent, viz the taking possession of the sea defences protecting the harbour, as well as the town and fortress of Khuratchee, which latter has this morning surrendered. The Brigadier cannot avoid expressing his entire approbation of the soldier-like manner in which H.M.'s 40th reg. landed yesterday, under Lieut.-Col. Powell, K.H., and the subsequent disposition made for closely investing the fort, by which disposition no possible communication could be held by those in possession of the fort with the surrounding country, which was fully exemplified when the Beloochies attempted to escape from the fire kept up on the fort by Her Majesty's ship Wellesley. Lieut.-Col. Powell has expressed, in warm terms, his satisfaction with the conduct of H.M.'s 40th reg., and of his entire confidence that they would have done their duty at the posts assigned to them had they been opposed by stronger force. The Lieut.-Col. also speaks in terms equally strong of the manner in which Capt. Brett, Hon. Company's Artillery, landed his guns and brought them to position. By order, F. J. VALLIANT,

"Capt. Assist.-Act.-Adj. Gen. Scinde Reserve."

O'H., who is from Dublin, was highly esteemed by his brother officers, and respected by a numerous circle of friends, but had, for some time past been labouring under a lowness of spirits. Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—1st. Lieut. Horsford has joined on promotion.

Royal Artillery.—Captain Cookson, commanding at Trinidad, with five gunners and drivers, landed at Port of Spain on the forenoon of 2d March. The men were marched up to the barracks at St. James's. The Sovereign transport brought round detachments of Artillery for St. Kitts, Antigua and Dominica. She sailed on 6th March for St. Kitts. On the 8th, 13 minute-guns were fired from Sea Fort Battery by the Artillery under the command of Capt. Cookson, on the occasion of the death of his late Excellency Sir Geo. Hill, Bart., Governor. The flag at Sea Fort Battery was raised half-mast high, and continued so until sunset in the evening. The flags of the different vessels in port were also simultaneously struck half-mast high. The distance to Sea Fort Battery is two miles from St. James's barracks,—too great a distance for troops to march, and the guns in St. James's barracks cannot be used, the carriages being unserviceable, and although new ones have been required, none as yet have been furnished. There is no gun-shed, and the carriages are therefore exposed to wind and rain, which gives them the dry rot and they soon fall to pieces.—Serj.-Maj. Macren has been presented with a gold patent lever watch and appendages from the Montreal Volunteer Artillery, for his attention to their drill.

By arrivals from Jamaica, we have recently received information that Major Gordon and Major Sabine's cos. embarked for Woolwich, and on the 21st March sailed from Port Royal. Capt. Dunn's troop of Horse Artillery has received orders to march from Woolwich for Bristol on Monday, in consequence of the disturbances in Wales.

It is reported that Major Sabine is be one of the Commissioners for settling the Boundary Question. Lieut. C. H. Burnaby, at present attached to the company of Gentlemen Cadets, is likely to obtain the appointment of Fire-Master at Portsmouth. Lieut. Cheetham is appointed Acting Adjutant 2d batt. during the absence on leave for six months of Capt. Bassett. The officers' ball took place on Thursday evening, and was fashionably attended. About 500 persons were present.

G.O, April 27.—The Master General and Board, having approved (by letter dated 5th April, 1839) of a Staff Farrier being appointed to the Field Batteries, with the extra pay of 6*d*. per day, as the Staff Farrier of the Bl. Horse Artillery, Francis James Gordon is appointed accordingly, from the 1st instant. He will be mustered by the Staff of the reg., by the 1st batt., and be clothed as a Serjeant, with an additional chevron.

A. Dickson, D.A.G.

G.O., April 29.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of First Lieut. James Turner being posted to the 9th batt., and First Lieut. Olphert to the 8th battalion.

A. Dickson, D.A.G.

Garrison Order, April 26.—The Regimental Field Officer of the week will in future assume the superintendence of all regimental parades and duties during that period. The Adjutant on duty for the week will report to him, and receive his orders. He will also place himself in communication with the Inspector of Drills, and receive any directions he may be pleased to give.

Royal Engineers.—Capt. and Brevet-Major Victor is the Resident Engineer at Trinidad. Mr. Dunn, Clerk of Works.

On Friday afternoon last, a serious and almost fatal accident befel Second Capt. Haddeley, who has been stationed in this place for some time past. As he was taking a ride on horseback, at a smart trot, one of the stirrup-leathers gave way, which caused him to drive his spur into the horse's flank. The animal ran off at full speed, and threw his rider, who fell on his shoulder with great force. His right lung is supposed to be injured; he has been in a very precarious state, but we are happy to say that he is now considered to be doing well.—Cornwall Canadian Observer.

It is dated Chelsea Hospital, 6th May; and the Lords and others, Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, intimate to the pensioners, that "they are registered and commanded, whenever they may be called upon by any of Her Majesty's justices of the peace, acting for the above town and neighbourhood, or for the county in which the same are situate, to present themselves before such justice or justices of the peace, and produce their papers of instructions, and to follow such orders and directions as they may then receive, and to render their services as special constables, or in such other manner as may be considered expedient by the said magistrates, for the purpose of aiding in the preservation of the public peace of the said town and neighbourhood, or wherever else they may be required; and provision will be made for their payment, when so employed, under the Special Constables' Act."

Honourable Artillery Company.—As was generally anticipated, the sensible measure that was proposed, of having Serjeants from the Line to drill the members of the Honourable Artillery Company, has been rejected by the Court of Assistants. Their conduct has been preposterous; but certainly there is nothing strange in that: those who know anything about the management of the Company will say, when was it otherwise? We do really feel for the painful position an intelligent and respectable body of men like the Hon. Artillery Company are placed in by the imbecility and arrogance of the Court. Out of charity we will suppose the Court of Assistants have been actuated in their decision by disinterested and honourable feelings;—we will imagine they have acted as they have done through unsophisticated simplicity, and under the belief that the members were completely perfect in their military duties; we will then, out of kindness to the members, and by way of edification to the Court, induce an experienced officer of the Army to attend during the remaining field-days, viz., on the 16th and on the celebration of Her Majesty's birth-day who shall inspect the Company, and report on the efficiency of the Privates and the Officers.

Biographies of the Duke of Wellington.—We may say of the Duke of Wellington, perhaps, more confidently than of any other public man, that the history of his life is the history of his country for the period. The statesmen who flourished during the great transactions that have immortalised his name were none of them so conspicuous as to divide with him for a moment the attention of mankind. Even the measures that sustained his conquering arms seemed rather to have grown out of his victories than to have produced them; for they were, at first reluctantly granted to success, and were subsequently almost the necessary consequences of that success—the vigour communicated by its impulse. But there is nothing on which the mind rests with so much delight, even amid the blaze of victory and the ardour of patriotic exultation, as the humanity by which it is now universally admitted he was almost as much distinguished as by his talents and his fortune. Wars of ambition—wars of conquest and aggrandisement, are the curse of nations; but wars of principle—wars of self-defence, lose the savage character in the righteousness of the cause, and the field of battle, with all its woful accompaniments, becomes a theatre on which virtue herself has a dreadful part to play and a fearful record to commemorate. The biographers of Wellington have the gratifying task of describing the course of a hero whose character exhibits none of the sanguinary traits which represent mere brutal courage, to the disgrace of human nature; but, on the contrary, displays the most placid virtues, in connection with the most indomitable resolution.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH'S PLAN.

(Continued from p. 286).— Another grave pretext will be brought in array against these measures, and will be seized on with avidity as a redeeming clause if all the others should be found to fall short, or as a formidable opponent to establishing a system about to be finally proposed; but, unlike the foregoing contradictions, it is not only an argument be refuted, but also a system to be abolished, as being productive at once of bad feelings, encouraging dangerous conclusions, and cementing serious combination on the part of the mariners. It is not only unwise to permit its existence, but also unjust and ungenerous to the trading mariner to license its operations, and injurious to the State, &c. to perpetuate its charter. The establishment to which these observations are applied exists, it is true, and it will readily afford, it is to be anticipated, the basis of a groundless opposition; but in essence it will only prove to be a most fallacious one to the nature of the present argument. Having been unable to discover any institution for the amelioration of the trading mariners, except the above Association, which is not founded on national principles, it becomes necessary to explain and describe the sources of its means and the extent of its operations, as it will be weighed in opposite balance to the present opinions. The support of this, as being wholly and solely extracted from the wages of the mariner, it in every sense of the word becomes a private fund, although called into existence by the power of the laws, and obliged to be supplied by a levied tax on the trading marine. This self-donatory establishment must be looked on with ineffable distrust, and even indignation, by every British subject, as the effect of its workings must inevitably tend to alienate, and not reconcile, the objects of its intended support.

Yes, it is true there is a consolidated marine fund, but by whom sustained? By the trading mariners, enforced by Act of Parliament in chap. 52, 4 and 5 W. IV., and aloof from any assistance, or the slightest donation of the ship-owners, except, no doubt, in officering it with their protegés. Every mariner by this law is compelled, against his will, or without his inclination being consulted, to give 12*s.* per year out of his hard-earned and limited pittance, and 1*l.* 4*s.* from that of every Master, together with the effects of those seamen who die in foreign employ, according to sect. 25, 5 and 6 W. IV.; in return for which the visionary relief it affords cannot be obtained without a strong recommendation from his employer. The equity of these latter enactments cannot be sustained on any principle, either of national good, individual benefit, or comparison. Why should a portion of salary be exacted from our mariners more than from any other class of the people or description of trade? We might with as much propriety enforce a subscription from the members of any profession or trade, in order to be applied to their supposed wants, because they may be deemed incapable of attending to their own interests. Where is the grade in society that would submit to such an innovation on the rights—an infringement of the free will? None but the mariner, the enduring seaman of our nation, would subscribe to such a law. Yet, evil as it is, it tacitly acknowledges the vital importance of preserving and cherishing him even by forced and undue inroads on his own slender finances, while at the same time we refuse to contribute to his welfare by national and consistent measures.

A more philanthropic and patriotic institution, although also limited in its means, than the before-mentioned one, is in being, and presents a laudable instance of charity to the orphans of the seamen, most creditable to those benevolent* and exalted personages by whom it is supported, but sadly tends, when coupled with the former, to forewarn the mariner of the last sad result, not of an ill-spent life, but of an arduous and daring one, at the same time showing him poverty in the perspective, and charity as his sole dependence and reward, and arousing

> "Memory, with all her busy train,
> To swell the breast, and turn the past to pain."

How fatal and injurious to the national renown must those ideas prove when engendered in the mind of our mariner, who, naturally wandering in ideas as in habit, becomes susceptible of impressions favourable or unfavourable, and oftentimes doubt! Even the most authentic representations, the result of which (arising from an unconsciousness of the real value of his hire, or the equivalent offered for it), he expects a tenfold return; and if disappointed in his view or conjectures, he becomes a victim to distrust, and unqualifiedly doubts the virtue and honesty of both the transactor and transaction. Thus the mariner suspects the sincerity of those institutions, and doubts the purity of the principles upon which they are founded, judging their origin is based on interested motives, and not for his individual benefit. He cannot reconcile himself to practical arrangements in an abstract view, or conceive why he should not receive, as a gratuity or pension from that establishment to which his mite is contributed, a support the same as another. Nor does he admit an argument against his equal right of inheritance, or the power of laws to oblige him to surrender a portion of his pay. The measure, therefore, is obnoxious to his understanding. Therefore it becomes productive of a thousand evils; dislike, disaffection, and an undue independence of feelings is the result, and inspires a wish to banish himself from his home and country; in short, he becomes a prey to all those feelings already described. And indeed justly so, as he is thrown on his own resources, to help himself in sickness, distress, and old age. Hence, under these circumstances, he cannot with justice be called on to serve the nation in war, which does not contribute to his support and assistance in peace.—(To be continued.)

* This charity is generously and patriotically supported, in a great measure, by her gracious Majesty, and the wealth and interest of several officers high in the Royal Navy.

TRISTRAM'S SURVEY OF THE MEASURES OF THE PRESENT NAVAL ADMINISTRATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—"After a storm a lull," observed Lord Ingestrie the other day, in the House of Commons, alluding to the succession of storms and squalls which raged from all points of the compass, as the political gall veered in the boisterous pamphlets. This lull will enable me to hold a public survey on the measures of the present Naval administration, with a view to discover whether any one measure be unsound, defective, or unserviceable. Each pamphleteer has surveyed damaged stores, stranded rigging, decayed provisions, &c., in active service: he will therefore be competent in knowledge and experience to judge whether I hold this survey on the Admiralty measures complained of with strict justice and impartiality.

The Portsmouth Academy having been proved erroneous in principles, and the longitude found by the distance between the moon and a chimney-pot to be several leagues out in voyaging the learned professor's curricle on the high road from Portsmouth to the "peaceful Cam," and many degrees in navigating his experimental "donkey" on the high seas from Spithead to the roaring Ganges; their Lordships condemned and abolished the said school, instituting in its stead the "Excellent System" by which Naval and Marine officers may now learn the true art of gunnery and science of mathematics—and appointing Naval Professors in every ship "to teach the young idea how to shoot," on its own element; also Seamen Schoolmasters and Libraries for the instruction and amusement of the boys, marines, and seamen of the fleet.

The annual promotion of the most proficient of eighteen Mates studying at the Naval College—the increase of the pay of Assistant-Surgeons in charge—the entry of one Assistant-Master in each rate direct from the Merchant Service, with preference to the candidates educated in the Upper School of Greenwich Hospital, and the volunteers of the first class taking quarter-deck precedence and command immediately after the Assistant-Master, and not, as lately, after the Cooper before the mast, of the grade of a Corporal of Marines—are considerate measures. I was just thinking that the MATES (the Naval Subordinates) in the College, being of comparative rank with the Marine Subalterns, they ought to have their uniforms changed from the domestic to the executive pattern, and that one distinctive word ought also to be placed against the gentlemen Petty Officers, whilst so designated, in the Navy List, thus:—

which would prevent the possibility of an impudent and assuming Surgeon of Marines proving by an official published document, at variance with the Queen's Sea Regulations, that a Midshipman with cocked hat and sword, a Boatswain's Mate with a crown and anchor badge, and a Serjeant with his Government coatee, are of one and the same degree, situation, and equality, because by the Navy List and the Proclamation Sheet for prize money, First Class Petties and Non-Commissioned are equal personages!! The word "Quarter Deck," as above introduced into the Navy List, will call Sergeant Stripes' "attention and salute" to his superior in office, rank, and society—the Midshipman, the Quarter-deck Officer, and the ball-room gentleman.

These will be called insignificant trifles, merely for the benefit of the members of the Midshipmen's mess, and not for the Naval community at large. Just so; but it must be recollected that a Surveying Officer in the due execution of his duty, must examine every article complained of, from a cable to a rope-yarn—a mainsail to a hammock—an anchor to a marline-spike—a mainmast to a batten—a quarter of beef to a piece of pork.

The Naval Arsenals are the next items for survey.

Sir James Graham, in his political game, however well he played his cards in some points, did certainly "play the devil and turn up Jack" in the Dock-yards. This blind-hazard game was for him public censure, but lost, what he had no right to gamble with, a part of the nation's treasure,—viz., a number of her valuable shipwrights, who emigrated to American and Russian establishments, in consequence of discharging the apprentices to deserving workmen, abolishing the task or job-work, and employing the workmen but FIVE days in the week. The present Naval Administration, to win back the part of this lost treasure, has re-established the old system of apprenticeship and job-work, and obtained a grant of the legislature of 50,000*l.* per annum to employ the Dock-yard artisans six days in the week, but to recover the whole of Sir James's lost game, the classification for wages must be abolished. Every practical shipwright is a First-Class man. Every practical seaman is a First-Class man. All able seamen are paid alike in the Navy; why not all able shipwrights in the Dock-yards? Able shipwrights and able seamen are England's right hand's; then why cut off that right hand, which ever serves—never offends?

Sir James reduced the pay of the Directors of Police (Lieutenants of the Navy); Lord Minto increased it to 250*l.* per annum, and ranked those Naval Centurions with the Master-Attendants, Master-Shipwrights, Chaplains, and Surgeons. A Lieutenant of the Navy ought to be excommunicated, if he did not, in the Dock-yard, keep the step of precedence of all those mechanical, clerical, and medical gentlemen, as they are astern of him by Order in Council—Secretaries, Physicians, &c. But a Captain of Marines, Tristram, the Captain of the Dock-yard Guard, being an Esquire by commission, though junior to the Lieutenant of the Navy—the Director of Police will of course take precedence at the Superintendent's table, because a Sea-Lieutenant is a Mister only by commission. "Monsieur Le Militaire—l'escadron en arrière—l'escadre toujours en avant," as Jean Bearte exclaimed to a Brigadier-General marching to the Commodore's van at the French Court.

NEW MILITARY BRIDGES AND LIFE RAFTS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Most scrupulously refraining from availing myself (except under admission) of any invention or idea originating with others, I may be justified in subduing great reluctance, on grounds of apparent ungraciousness, in order to establish my fair, because irrefutable, claim to priority of thought in reference to constructing "Military Bridges" of the very kind described in your No. 327, folio 260, as exhibited on the Serpentine before the Duke of Wellington, the General Commanding-in-Chief, Lord Hill, and many other officers of rank, as the invention of Colonel Mackintosh, and whom, most unhesitatingly, I acquit of plagiarism, unfeignedly believing in his ignorance that the following announcement, made so long ago as 1816, formed part of a list of my then invention in outline, printed and published in that year, viz., "A new Method of constructing Bridges for Military operations. It is expected that the materials for every 100 yards of a bridge so formed will not require more than one cart or wagon on the march, instead of the long and tedious present pontoon train." I can prove that I contemplated the use of "India rubber" bags inflated, not only for that purpose, but also for soft bedding; for having proposed the latter for camp and ship use, and the objection having been started that a pin-hole, mischievously made, would convert a soft bed into a very hard one, I showed that my mode of using India rubber (for the Mackintosh cloths then were not in use) precluded such a result; for I convinced the party by running a pocket-knife through and through without any escape of air. Shortly after inflated mattresses appeared, whether owing to coincidence of thought or to misplaced confidence I cannot tell; but I am inclined to ascribe their appearance to the first; for otherwise the following conversion, and which, to my humble idea, appears as important as for bridges, would also have obtained publicity. I proposed that sailors should lie on inflated bags to fit their hammocks, berths, or cots, instead of their cot-mattresses of hair; that each inflated bed should be made with loops, seizings, or lashings of any settled kind, in order to facilitate the rapid construction of one or more rafts or floats, by passing spars through the loops and joining the whole by lashing them well together. I deeply lament that my plan was not encouraged; for it will be obvious that numbers could have availed themselves ere this of what could not but have proved a life-boat; or that single mattresses would have served to support several persons each, or assist men in carrying a line to shore. The inflation could easily be effected by means of bellows screwed to a nozzle-fitting brass socket, receiving a cork, with a cap screwed over it to prevent the escape of the cork. It NEVER is too late to think of saving life! and I yet hope that these beds will find encouragement from the Admiralty, although the objection may be made to their not being of that use in action which hair mattresses in the netting, &c., afford. Let a balance as to the lives saved by each sort of bedding decide the fate of this my ardent recommendation; and may your generous readers view with leniency the tenacity of an inventor who, although seeing his inventions used daily by others, thereby to secure rewards and distinctions, remains not only unrewarded for such aid, but even for still more important services rendered directly as well as indirectly. Why then should the desire of preserving at least the credit of having been useful to this country and to mankind be open to censure? Poor as the reward is, it is the only one which for such endeavours, and for extraordinary sacrifices, as yet has fallen to the lot of DE BERLNGER.

Stadium, Cremorne House, Chelsea, May 6, 1838.

P.S.—Although my preparations (to open this establishment prevented my troubling you with my humble thoughts on the rifle and other service themes, I have stolen a half hour hastily, yet courteously, to put in a claim to which I entreat you to grant an early publicity.

[Colonel Macintosh, Captain Straith, and Lieutenant Wall, we believe lay claim to these inventions. The Colonel writes, "that the models of a military bridge equipment are now at Woolwich for the purpose of being scrutinised by the Select Committee there, and that those scientific officers will, no doubt, decide as to who is the inventor, as well as determine upon their general merits."—ED.]

CASE OF THE HALF-PAY LIEUTENANTS, R.N.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Much has been said on the grievances of Naval officers, and ably said too; but I think that much extraneous matter has been introduced and discussed, which only tends to distract the attention of the commissioners, and turn their minds, and also that of the country, from the main point in question. I shall, in this wide field for complaint, confine myself to one section,—of the grievances, ill-usage, and, in fact, degradation, of one class of officers of Her Majesty's Navy, viz., the half-pay of the gallant Lieutenants.

In the year 1815, several ships of the line were paid off. I shall take one of which I know—a 74;—a fine young officer, of five years' standing, who had served three years in her, in the Mediterranean, as First Lieut., was, contrary to his wish and prospects, discharged. The Captain of Marines, much his junior, went on half-pay at 7*s.* per day, while the whole of his commanding officers, the Naval Lieutenants, including the first, went on shore on 5*s.* per day. The whole of the Naval officers of the fleet were served in the same way. This cannot be understood; and let me ask if it be generally known? But to make the ill-usage still more clear, the Lieutenant of Marines, who was inferior to the Captain of Marines, happened to come to his rank of Captain (or the rank came to him) within a week of the ship's being paid off; and this said Lieut. of Marines, who, it must be seen, had served in the ship the last three years in a much inferior rank, and was still subordinate to the whole of the Lieutenants of the ship—he being only three days a Captain—went on shore (his half-pay being 7*s.* per day), while his First Lieutenant, of five years' standing, and all his brother officers, went on shore on 5*s.* per day; and one of them is, I know, to this day on the 5*s.* list, although he has frequently applied for service. It is impossible to misunderstand this: it is a plain, unvarnished story; and I trust the honourable commissioners will look to it. How does it happen that officers of the same rank are so differently paid? Is it, or can it be said, that the Naval Lieutenants are in any way inferior in responsibility, respectability, or less subject to onerous duty? The second question answers itself—both being equal; but for the other two, the Naval officer has, at the least, twenty per cent. in his favour. Look to the duty of a Naval Lieut., having the charge and command of the deck of a first-rate man of war, sailing in a close line a-head in a heavy sea, and a dark night (this is an ordinary duty, and many others of the like nature I could mention). Compare it with the charge of a Captain of the Army or Marines; and if it be thought that the Naval officer is not fully entitled to the rank he holds, in God's name take it from him; but if he be entitled to the rank, which no man in his senses can doubt, why not give an equal rate of half-pay? I have used the word degrading in the foregoing, and here say, the way that the Naval Lieuts. are treated implies that they are not deserving, and that is degrading, so far as an ungrateful country can degrade men who have done their duty.

"'Bear down, d'ye see, to our Admiral's lee;'
'No, no,' says the Frenchman, 'that cannot be;'
'Then I shall jug you along with me,'
Says the saucy Arethusa."

I trust the honourable commission now sitting will see that it cannot be just for the junior Naval Lieuts. to remain one day longer on the 5*s.* list, while the officers of the Army and Marines, of the same standing, are in the receipt of 7*s.*; and should such a conclusion be come to, how is the officer who was paid off in 1815, and still on the 5*s.* list, to meet with fair play without a cheque for the difference be sent him, which will amount to nearly 1000*l.*? The reason why I have confined myself to this one of the many grievances of Naval officers is, because I know my subject (I hope some Englishmen may still take such other parts as they understand, till the whole is made plain). The officer I have referred to on the 5*s.* list, is a near relation of mine, now keeping a school, and encumbered with a large family. But I know, from his gallant bearing, a cheaper way might be found to heal his wounded feelings than the sending him a cheque for money (his undoubted right); and from what I have seen of Naval officers in general, there is in that in them which will make them, when rank offers in the service they adore (regardless of such emolument), cling to it with the same ardour they grappled with the foe when England trembled. AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN.

HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having in a letter contained in your paper of the 13th April last alluded to the mismanagement and deficiency of discipline in the Hon. Artillery Company, and having then but slightly referred to the presentation of two officers of the corps at a previous Levee, I must now call your attention to the appearance of those gentlemen at two recent Drawing-rooms, and demand, out of respect to the British arms, for the maintenance of the dignity of the Court, and the support of our noble aristocracy, whether it can be tolerated, or even pass unnoticed, that those who merely hold the rank of Captain in a Volunteer Corps, annually elected by the privates of the regiment, should be classed in the Court Circular with those who have either served their country in times of difficulty and danger, or who have attained that proud and honourable distinction by length of service at home or in a foreign clime? If those persons alluded to had been presented at the Court of her most gracious Majesty in their private capacity, no reasonable objection could possibly have been offered; but when they presume to take ground with their superiors in birth, wealth, and position in society, it is then time to denounce "this assumption of equality," so derogatory to the character of the British Army, and so injurious to the reputation of the Court.

There is already a strong feeling of dissension existing in the corps, from the unnecessary and unprecedented distinction in the uniform of the officer and private, which originated at the commencement of the late reign, when His Majesty, in obedience to the custom of his predecessors, assumed the rank of Captain-General. It must be obvious to all who are acquainted with the nature and constitution of the Hon. Artillery Company, that the exercise of a privilege which the uncertain title of Captain alone confers, must tend to strengthen that feeling of jealousy, and give rise to a spirit of rivalry, prejudicial to the existence and prosperity of this or any Volunteer Corps. It would be invidious to mention the names, business, or profession of those persons who have so unwisely figured at the late drawing-rooms, as I feel convinced that an observation from you, Sir, in your valuable and influential Journal, will be the means of preventing the repetition of a circumstance so repugnant to the feelings of the officers of the Line, and so opposed to the practice and regulation of the Court.

A MEMBER AND PRIVATE OF THE HON. ARTIL. COMPANY.

[We have been furnished with the names of the parties, but as we dislike wounding the feelings of any man, we trust this letter will be sufficient to prevent a repetition of the evil so very justly complained of.—ED.]

To Readers and Correspondents.

Having received several letters respecting that part of our notice last week of the Memoirs of the Duke of Wellington, now in course of publication, which stated that in his early campaigns he bore the name of Wesley, not Wellesley, and some of our correspondents questioning the accuracy of our statement, we now put the matter beyond dispute by presenting an autograph of the illustrious General, at the period when he had the Brevet of Colonel and the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of the 33d Regiment.

We shall return shortly to the various publications respecting the Duke.

The "Weekly Dispatch" presumes sometimes too largely on the ignorance of its readers for the belief of what it falsely asserts. Ignorant, however, as the pot-house and victualling public may be, they will scarcely swallow the assertion of last week made in that Paper, that the Duke of Wellington owes his fame to good luck, and his victories to chance! What next? The unrivalled combinations—the prophetic directions—the lightning quickness of his attacks—his skill—his patience—his tenacity of purpose—his instantaneous perception of an antagonist's error—and the might and majesty of his magnificent movements to assured victory—these all are, in the estimation of the writers of the "Weekly Dispatch," the results of luck and the upturnings of chance! To refute seriously such assertions, is nearly as absurd as to make them; but in these days the most preposterous nonsense will pass current till checked by denial, and on this account alone we have often noticed the mendacity of the "Weekly Dispatch."

We cannot answer the inquiry of "Argus" whether the last two knighthoods conferred by Lord Normanby on Capt. Burton M'Namara, R.N., and Com. Rose, of the Coast-Guard, will stand good, his Lordship having previously given all charge up to Lord Fortescue, and the latter having been sworn in before the honours were conferred.

The removal of Major Nugent from the 7th Dragoon Guards to the vacancy in the Bays, occasioned by the promotion of Major Griffiths to an Unattached Lieutenant-Colonelcy, disposes of the last supernumerary Major in the Cavalry regiments, with the exception of the 11th Light Dragoons. We have received some letters on this subject: indeed the affair has caused considerable excitement. We are assured that Major Griffiths' promotion is a much more glaring case of injustice to the Army than that of Major Hankey, on which we some time since felt it our duty so strongly to comment.

The writer of a letter from Chatham, without signature, should either give us, in confidence, his name, or state that of the old officer to whom he refers. We cannot, in fairness, be expected to act in such cases on mere anonymous communications.

A correspondent asks, what is the difference of expense between cutting in two and converting a frigate into a steamer, and building a new one of the same tonnage? The expense of lengthening a 46-gun frigate 50 feet, would be about 8,000l.: building a new vessel of that size, about 42,000l. Taking one of the last launched 46's (such as Penelope or Mermaid) the lengthened one would last as long as a new ship built at the above cost. The average time a ship may be considered to last, without a thorough repair, is twelve years. A frigate could be lengthened in three months: to build a new vessel would require at least 18 months.—Suggestions for the improvement of the rank, pay, &c., of Naval Officers, will be given in our next.

Latest Intelligence from India.—Affairs at Burmah assume a more peaceable aspect; the country itself being now agitated by internal commotions, it is supposed will induce Tharrawaddie to concoct a peace with us. Shah Soojah's troops have been sent to take Larkhanu, most of the inhabitants of which had flocked to Hyderabad to assist their chief, and, in consequence of this, the town was given up to plunder. Sir John Keane has been obliged to fall back upon Kotree, in consequence of 20,000 men having crossed the river to meet him.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1839.

We are glad to learn that the ships last commissioned are likely to be soon manned, which circumstance is the more gratifying, seeing that in the spring of the year seamen are always scarce, on account of the great demand for the Baltic and North American voyages, many of the vessels engaged in which cannot get employment in coasting or the coal trade during the winter, and are, therefore, laid up, and their crews discharged.

Some of our readers may not be aware of the increase which is gradually taking place in our mercantile tonnage; and although this has doubtless its effect in making seamen scarce, and of course greatly retards manning the Queen's ships, that is but a secondary consideration, compared to its immense importance in a national point of view; for, whatever may be said or sung, this is the real element of Naval power, and so long as these resources are on the increase, and applicable when necessity requires, they afford an undoubted evidence of commercial prosperity, and ability to maintain our position as the first of maritime nations.

The official returns for 1838 show a considerable excess of ships, tons, and men, over the preceding year; greater than has occurred at any prior time, being 600 ships, 100,000 tons, and 5000 men. A reference to the Parliamentary Reports proves also, that for the last ten years the increase has been progressive, although not so great as of late—a very gratifying reflection; for it proves that it is not owing to any temporary or fleeting cause that our navigation is increasing, notwithstanding the facility which steam has given to shorten the time of voyages, and the rivalry of foreign states, that work their ships at less expense and consequently cheaper freights.

It was apprehended by many that the extension of steam navigation would tend to destroy our coasting trade, and break up that valuable nursery for seamen. In some few cases steam vessels have certainly entirely superseded the old ones, more particularly the packets and passage vessels running round the coast. But the coal trade, the principal nursery, has been greatly increased since the general introduction of steam, for navigation and other purposes, has augmented the consumption of fuel. A reference to the register of vessels will show that we have at the present time more sailing vessels than at any former period, leaving steam vessels altogether out of the question: this, we repeat, is a gratifying reflection, when we consider that the steam vessels not only make quick passages, but, by towing and aiding the progress of sailing vessels, heretofore detained by contrary winds, greatly facilitate and shorten the voyages of these also. Every port has now steam tugs, and owners find it their interest to avail themselves of the aid which these afford, rather than let their ships lie wind-bound or beneaped, as was formerly the case.

Again, the numerous steam vessels we possess afford a new and very important element in Naval power. Three-fourths of them are capable of being armed with one or more long guns, on traversing carriages, the slides embracing several beams, and the beams themselves can be propped from the kelson. Even the smaller ones can act as tugs, or in carrying about troops, or munitions of war, or provisions for a fleet; and our great superiority in the number, as well as the excellence of these vessels, our unbounded command of fuel on both sides of the island, and our means for manufacturing machinery, place us in as great a degree above our rivals in this respect as we were formerly in regard to sailing vessels.

Considering all these things, our position will be admitted to be quite as good, if not better, than at any former period—unexampled, indeed, in the history of the world. So long as our maritime resources present this aspect, and continue on the increase, we see no reason for apprehension or alarm; on the contrary, much cause for congratulation. When the index becomes reversed, and these elements are proved to be declining, then, indeed—but not till then—we shall join in the cry of those who have been at such uncommon pains to make the world believe that our Naval ascendancy has passed away.

Speculation is rife as to what effect a change of Ministry may have on our Naval and Military Establishments. Some assert that an immediate increase to both will be made, while others insist that no additional vote will be taken for the present year. We conceive, however, that the boldly-expressed opinion of the Duke of Wellington will be instantly acted on, and that the "attempt to carry on War with Peace Establishments" will be relinquished. To what extent augmentations may take place we can scarcely conjecture,—nay, even a New Ministry cannot at once determine; but of this we feel certain, that a sufficient force will be kept on foot, if the Duke of Wellington or his friends be in power.

Flogging through the Fleet is a subject which it may doubtless be said had better rest in oblivion; a sentiment in which we so fully concur, that it is precisely with the view of having it buried in oblivion that we now advert to it, in the hope of attracting the advocacy of some influential M.P., who shall bring it forward, and obtain an official denunciation of the practice. We are not squeamish about flogging, neither are we going to play the pathetic, for there will always be found scoundrels among large bodies of men meriting severity of punishment; but Flogging through the Fleet is a severity of infliction which maims a man for life. It is not our intention to detail the process, as most of our Naval readers are but too conversant with the nature of it; we shall only advert to the fact, that such has been the custom of the service, and that that custom has not, like "running the gauntlet and keel-hauling," &c., been annulled, and we do so because we are fully aware that, although not resorted to in these times of peace, yet in the event of war, the altered state of discipline which now prevails will make severity indispensable in very many cases. True it is, that on the breaking out of war, there will be new men (in contradistinction to the officers of the olden time) in authority, men brought up under the present system; but this system, although it may be in accordance with peace procedure, will not suffice in war. The energetic measures, which active hostilities render imperative, cannot be executed without a rigid system of subordination totally at variance with the general supineness of the present day, as those officers will then discover; and, as the above is a most obnoxious species of punishment, the practice should be authoritatively discontinued, and not wait for the occurrence of a case, prior to putting a stop to it. For, let it be remembered, a Court-Martial is not a court of caprice, but a court of forms, mostly founded on, and legalised by, the "customs of the service," from which the members cannot deviate; their feelings and their humanity may dictate a different award of punishment, but their duty is imperative—and the "customs of the service" must be their guide.

But the sentence of a Court-Martial should not be left either to the feelings of humanity, or to the vagueness of "custom;" it is an awful tribunal, to be resorted to only on important occasions; and a definitive sentence of punishment, applicable to crimes of enormity, should be set forth, and on no account be left dependent upon "custom," or upon the temperament of the members.

Indeed, the whole code of Naval Articles of War requires remodelling;—out of 36 articles, no less than 21 embrace the sentence of death, and in some of them this denunciation is repeated. But what can be more preposterous than the undefined "shall suffer death, or such other punishment as the Court shall impose;" and suppose the Court to impose punishment through the Fleet, because one of the customs of the service,—would not death at the yard-arm be mercy as compared to the results of passing from ship to ship? And in regard to the Court itself, how are we to reconcile the provisions of the one regulation requiring that five ships should be in company, with the somewhat

[illegible] playing the national anthem. The Grand Duke also called upon Lord Melbourne at his residence in South-st., to express personally his gratification at his reception on his arrival in this country. On Thursday the Grand Duke and Prince Frederick Henry visited the [illegible]

"Commander of a ship of the line is but a First Lieutenant," doing duty in that capacity, treated by his Captain as such, and is so considered throughout the Fleet?

Such was not the case when that regulation was framed, and consequently five persons had reference to five officers, commanding (each) a separate vessel. Yet cases have occurred in which four ships only were in company, the First Lieutenant, commander of one of them, making the fifth member of the Court—and these proceeded with the trial of the prisoner:—we should opine, very illegally; for the First Lieutenant is, or ought to be, the representative of his Captain, who in this case thus had two voices in awarding the sentence. But whether illegal or not, the sentence is carried into execution under the influence of arbitrary power. We should be cautious of innovations.

In our last we noticed that the East India Company had obtained permission to augment their European force. We have since heard that instead of two regiments there are to be three—one at Bombay—one at Bengal—and one at Madras. It is expected that 2,000 men can be raised before the 1st December next.

The recruiting for Her Majesty's regiments in India is not proceeding as rapidly as we expected. It has been generally observed, that a very small proportion of the recruits for India has been raised in Ireland. Indeed, the number of Irishmen in Her Majesty's Army is far less than is generally supposed.—Our challenge on this subject was never answered.

Lord Howick is no longer Secretary at War;* and whoever may be his successor, we doubt if one more able, more liberal, or more just, can succeed him. In the administation of his Lordship the Army found relief from many pressing grievances; and the institution of the rotation system of reliefs, and the improved arrangements for the transport of troops, at home and abroad, are measures which will long render his name revered in the service over whose interests he so vigilantly watched.

"Let others hail the rising sun,
We bow to him whose race is run."

In the estimate we have formed of Lord Howick as Secretary at War, we have considered him apart from his politics; in them we have no part. We are of no party;—we content ourselves in being the advocates of the rights of the United Service; and we honestly and disinterestedly commend the late Secretary at War and his measures, because we believe him to have been the uncompromising friend of the British Army, and his measures to have been those best calculated to improve its condition and benefit its members.

We understand that a great want of Officers is felt in the 28th, 50th, and 80th Regiments, now in Australia. There are twenty Officers belonging to these corps at Chatham, but no means of embarking them exist, except with guards of convicts. This is hard on several Officers abroad, who are desirous of retiring and settling in the Colony, but are prevented from selling out from the paucity of Officers for duty.

We regret to state that both officers and men of the 16th Regiment have been ordered for embarkation to Bengal. The 20th and 45th—the 54th and 16th Regiments, went abroad in 1819—the two former are now at home,—the 54th had not left India in February last,—and we fear the 16th is doomed to remain some years longer abroad.

We proceed to condense this week the most interesting matter contained in the Statistical Report of Major Tulloch on Malta.

Malta.—This island is so familiarly known, that its general description, temperature, soil, &c. may be passed over. It is esteemed to be exceedingly salubrious; but Major Tulloch's Tables seem to shake our confidence in the common assertions on this subject. These show that the island is not so healthy as this country—the mortality in Malta being 1 in 39, and in England 1 in 47½ on the average of the years from 1819 to 1834. Malta, in 1813, suffered from plague, which cut off, between April and November, 4486 of the inhabitants; and in 1837 cholera carried off several thousands. Here, therefore, as at Gibraltar and other stations liable to visitations of pestilence, the ratio of mortality is difficult to fix.

The troops in Malta consist of the service companies of four Infantry regiments, two companies of Artillery, and a corps of Maltese Fencibles. The duties are merely garrison—the men mount guard twice in the week—and fatigue parties are seldom required. The barrack accommodation is ample, the buildings being extensive and solid, the works of the Knights of Malta. The hospitals are on a similarly extensive scale. The diet of the troops here is good and ample, and the low price of the necessaries of life enables the soldiers to have a breakfast and dinner-mess out of the authorised stoppage from their pay. Salt provision is issued only once a week; and this is requisite to prevent the stores of the fortress from becoming unserviceable from age. Biscuit, strange to say, is the fixed ration here instead of bread, though there is a bakery within the fortifications which could supply any quantity required. On an average of twenty years from 1817 to 1836, it appears, by comparison with former returns, that 176 per 1000 are admitted to hospital more than at Gibraltar, though the mortality is less than at that station, the deaths having averaged only 16 and three-tenths per 1000 annually. Still Malta is by no means so healthy a station as has been hitherto supposed. The sickness has been chiefly caused by diseases which seldom prove fatal, and this accounts for the extent of the mortality being less here than in Gibraltar. The troops at Malta have suffered more from fevers than those at Gibraltar, and twice as much as those in the United Kingdom. It is worthy of remark, that the same class of diseases produce similar effects in countries of which the mean temperature and local peculiarities are widely different; for in Malta we observe the deaths from fevers are about 2 and one-tenth per 1000, and that in Sweden they are 2 and three-tenths per 1000 annually. Malta does not appear to be favourable to persons afflicted with diseases of the lungs; the mortality being higher than at Gibraltar, and the admissions to hospital only one-fifth less than in the United Kingdom. The inhabitants of the island suffer from diseases of the lungs nearly as much as those of high northern latitudes; deaths in Sweden being 5 and six-tenths per 1000, or, within a mere fraction, the same as in Malta. The 7th and 94th regiments suffered severely from pulmonary affections in 1833, upwards of one-third of the whole strength having been attacked. Diseases of the liver are about twice as prevalent and thrice as fatal as among the troops in Gibraltar or the United Kingdom; but among the civil inhabitants this class of diseases is more rare than in Britain, the mortality being among the troops ten times as high. Is this great difference caused by the previous service of the soldiers in climates where liver complaints prevailed? May not this, and not their duties or course of life, be the "vera causa?" Diseases of the stomach and bowels prevail to a considerable extent, but not in an aggravated form. In the West India report it was noticed that officers were comparatively exempt from this class of diseases, and their fresh diet was suggested as the cause; the troops in Malta having fresh provision six days out of seven, and the mortality from diseases of the bowels being comparatively small—3 and six-tenths per 1000—an indirect proof of the accuracy of the former deduction is here furnished. The present report proves, we think most satisfactorily, that diseases of the bowels are intimately connected with high temperature; and consequently in tropical climates especially our soldiers should be supplied with food nutritive and easy of digestion—not as heretofore, with salt rations. Salt provisions, and not a moist climate, seem the cause; for the greatest sickness and mortality, in Malta at least, are from June to September, when one drop of rain scarcely falls on the island, while from December to March, when most rain falls, they are least. It is interesting to observe, that the ratio of admissions and deaths among the troops by diseases of the brain was almost the same as at Gibraltar and in the United Kingdom, affording evidence that a high temperature alone does not increase the number of cases; and further evidence is found in the fact, that the cases are fewest in the hottest part of the year. Dropsies are about as frequent and fatal as in the United Kingdom. The plague has often visited Malta. It prevailed in 1519, 1593, 1623, and 1663, but in these years it was neither very fatal nor of long duration. In 1675 it swept off 11,300 persons, and for 138 years did not visit the island. In April, 1813, it broke out and spread in all directions till November following. The number attacked was about 5,600, and about 80 per cent. died. The troops nearly escaped, having lost only 21, and 28 only having been attacked. The plague, like the yellow fever of Gibraltar, is not confined to any particular period of the year; for in 1663 it broke out in December and continued the whole year, and in Constantinople it is recorded that 2,000 died daily while snow was on the ground. The excellent health and low ratio of mortality among the Malta Fencibles, seem to point out the vast advantage of having in each of our foreign possession a corps raised from the natives of the place, who can perform with impunity those very duties which to the English soldier are harassing and fatal. We shall next proceed with the report on the Ionian Islands.

* This article was in type before the political events of yesterday were known.—Ed. N. & M. G.

This being about the period of assembling for the annual training the Yeomanry in various parts of the kingdom, we avail ourselves of the opportunity to direct attention to a letter recently addressed to some of the corps by an excellent Cavalry Officer, the present Brigade-Major of the Northern District.

We are satisfied that the judicious observations of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Charles O'Donnell will prove highly advantageous to such Yeomanry Corps as may be called out in aid of the Civil Power. The latter portion of his letter furnishes a programme which ought, according to Instructions, to be adopted by all Inspectors of Yeomanry; and although the directions respecting the occupying of Bulwell Common are somewhat original, we cannot doubt that they will prove most excellent in practice.

Nottingham, May 1, 1839.

Sir, Having received Lord Hill's instructions to inspect the South Nottinghamshire Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry this spring, I take leave, as the corps is about to assemble for permanent duty, to address to you the following observations, hoping, that as they are chiefly collected from the precepts and practice of officers of experience, they may be found acceptable for the information and guidance of the gentlemen of the regiment under your command.

Although few opportunities are now afforded for acquiring a practical knowledge of the various duties of Cavalry, yet it is evident much may be learnt by ordinary application during the short period of exercise, especially when that application is combined with a study of the principles, object, and intention of the various operations.

So much depends upon the readiness with which Cavalry can be brought to act, that I cannot too earnestly impress upon you the necessity of causing every Yeoman to be at all times (especially at the present period) prepared to turn out fully equipped at the shortest notice.

With this view, I would recommend that he be frequently visited at his house and in his quarters by the non-commissioned officer of his squad or troop, and occasionally by his officer, for the purpose of ascertaining that his horse is effective, and that his arms, ammunition, accoutrements, horse appointments, and clothing, are in good order, properly put up in a secure place, ready, and fit for immediate use.

Let every troop have a central point as an alarm post or place of assembly, such posts should have a communication with each other, and with the head quarters, for the ready circulation of orders; and when the regiment is together, appoint one general place of assembly for the whole.

When placed in billets in a town, endeavour to keep each troop as much together as possible, by dividing the town into as many compartments as there are separate bodies.

Have stated hours for stable duties, and require the attendance of officers and men.

On all occasions march with an advanced and rear-guard—at times flankers will be necessary. From five to six miles the hour is the ordinary rate of marching. Walk, trot, halt, and dismount alternately. Be careful not to distress the horses, particularly at a moment when it is probable that increased exertion may be required.

When precaution is necessary, do not pass a defile, wood or suspicious place, without reconnoitering it. For this purpose you can dismount a few men with carbines. With respect to field exercises and evolutions, let me recommend you to adhere strictly to the "Regulations for the Cavalry"*, which, together with "The Abstract"† of the same, are the only books of authority on the subject; and should, one or other, be in the possession of every officer and non-commissioned officer.

It is true that celerity in execution is an object of the utmost importance in all Cavalry operations, but, be it remembered, that it must not be carried so far as to create irregularity; for more time will be required to correct mistakes than is gained by the rapidity of the movement. In all movements, therefore, aim rather at steadiness than at rapidity of execution. The former begets precision and safety; the latter, with troops not disciplined, will be productive of confusion and the most fatal consequences. In the attack, however, when collision is intended, velocity is everything.

The second part of the Regulations above-mentioned, comprising "The Instruction of the Troop and Squadron," will require the greater portion of your time. It is the very framework of all manœuvres, having for its basis the movement by threes, and is especially deserving of your attention. Every officer and non-commissioned officer should be enabled to put his squadron or troop through the formations therein described.

Simplicity in construction being an object of consideration in all tactical movements, select from the third part, or "Instructions of the Regiment," the simplest manœuvres only, dispensing with such as occupy too much time in the course of instruction, and prevent sufficient attention to those which are of more utility. In their execution, employ the most simple intermediate formations; such, for instance, as the movement by threes, &c. Complicated manœuvres may be showy and attractive, but they are of little use, and are dangerous in the presence of an enemy.

The duties of light troops and of out-posts ought to be studied by Yeomanry, as from the nature of their services they may be placed in situations that require, more especially, the performance of such duties. A knowledge of the general principles upon which light troops ought to act when employed as advanced and rear-guards, patroles, reconnoitring parties, pickets, skirmishing, attacking advanced posts, and foraging parties, covering retreats, escorting convoys or prisoners, forming guards of honour, &c., would be highly desirable, and might be attained with little application and trouble.

Whenever Yeomanry are called out in times of disquietude to assist the civil power, quell disturbances, or protect property, the troops should muster with the greatest promptitude; the marches be made with circumspection as to advance and rear-guards, and the utmost precaution used to prevent surprise on all occasions.

No detachment ought to go out without an officer, who should have in his possession the General Order and Confidential Instructions of the 27th March, 1835, and a magistrate should always accompany the troops.

Better not to load, except under particular circumstances, and then firing should only be resorted to at the very last extremity? The sword is the weapon for cavalry.

When you attack, let it be with vigour and determination, and present as broad a front as the nature of the ground will allow; observing, as a general and most essential rule, to keep a portion of your force strictly in reserve. Beware of cutting up your force into detachments too small a party should not be risked, especially when there is the slightest possibility of a defeat.

In the event of any immediate apprehension of disturbance in or near a station, keep at least one-third of the detachment at all times in readiness and bridled, as a picket at one of the principal billets, or some central position, send out patroles, and, if necessary, cause a part or the whole of the force to remain saddled.

A feed of corn may be reserved for each horse, and carried with every detachment when called out but only a third or one half of the horses should be unbridled and fed at a time.

The bridles, swords, fire-arms, and accoutrements, should always be taken up by the men to their rooms at night.

Officers should make themselves acquainted with the adjacent roads to their quarters, and the country in general, also with the most direct communications to their own head-quarters, and to the detachments stationed on either side of them. After any occurrence of an extraordinary nature, a report to the proper authorities should never be omitted.

Having said thus much, I must request you, in reference to the inspection, to occupy Bulwell Common with your whole force on the morning of the 9th inst. You will be pleased to take up a position on the Common facing the south, covering in front and flanks the different approaches to it from Nottingham, and stationing advanced posts, pickets, and videttes, wherever you may judge most necessary.

I must beg of you, in the first instance, to receive me, at whichever of your outposts I may make my appearance, in the same manner as you would receive a flag of truce, and conduct me along your chain of out-posts.

Should you be opposed by cavalry, you will, on being pressed, cause your out-posts to be drawn in, and gradually falling back, under cover of skirmishers, to join the main body on the common.

In this position, prepared for the inspection, I shall trouble you, after the usual parade movements and sword exercise are gone through, to execute a few simple manœuvres; such, for instance, as the formation of columns, deployments, changes of position, throwing back and forwards the flanks, counter-marches, and line movements, &c.

I am particularly directed to ascertain whether the Adjutant and Serjeant-Major are thoroughly conversant with such details of the cavalry service as are most necessary for instructing the troops in that kind of duty they are usually called upon to perform.

With this view, I shall require the Adjutant to give instructions, in my presence, to troop officers, as to the method of drawing up and telling off their men, and as to their words of command, and places in squadron.

I shall also require the Captain, Subaltern, or Serjeant-Major, of each troop to exercise the troop before me in the common marches and formations by threes and files, in diminishing and increasing the front, in the formation of escorts, in marching off a detachment with advance and rear-guard, in linking horses, and in dismounting with fire-arms, to act on foot. To this portion of the drill, as being the most essential, my orders are to be very particular.

I am also desired to examine minutely into the state and condition of the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and horse appointments; to observe if the horses are young, active, and fit for service and, finally, to state whether the discipline of the corps is conformable to the practice of the regulars, and whether the officers and men are sufficiently acquainted with simple movements to make them act with efficiency.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
(Signed) C. K. O'Donnell, Lieut.-Colonel.

To Lieut Colonel Moore, &c. &c. &c., Commanding the South Nottingham Regt. of Yeomanry Cavalry, Nottingham.

RESIGNATION AND RESTORATION OF THE MINISTRY.

As we prognosticated on the 17th ultimo, the Jamaica question was the ground for party battle. On Monday evening, in a House of 573 members, the Ministers, owing to the defection of the extreme Radicals, had a majority of only five; and accordingly, on Tuesday they communicated to Parliament that they had tendered their resignations, and that the Queen had accepted the same.

It is said that the Queen was deeply affected when Lord Melbourne definitively informed Her Majesty that the Ministry was extinct. She wept for a long time, and deplored her situation. The Queen proposed to send for Lord Normanby; but Lord Melbourne recommended her to send for the Duke of Wellington. Her Majesty having consented to do so, the Duke, on being summoned to the royal presence on Wednesday, suggested that Sir Robert Peel should be charged with the formation of an administration. Sir Robert immediately proceeded to the Palace, and, in his interview with the Queen, Her Majesty expressed, without reserve, her regret at the change which had become necessary; but at the same time intimated her readiness to confide to the Right Hon. Baronet the power of forming an administration. In discussing the arrangements with Sir Robert, the Queen intimated that, though she claimed no share in any political appointments, yet that she should expect to have the nomination of the ladies of her household, and the female attendants on her person. To this proposition Sir Robert objected; and stated, that such a sacrifice of her feelings was necessary to satisfy the country that her Ministers thoroughly enjoyed her confidence. Her Majesty at once resisted this exaction. Her Majesty's words, we have reason to believe, [illegible] what further arrangements may take place we can scarcely conjecture,—nay, even a New Ministry cannot at once determine; but of this we feel certain, that a sufficient force will Her Majesty further remarked, that with respect to Sir Robert Peel's political arrangements, she had nothing to do but to assent to them; but that the choice of the ladies who were to surround her, and form her society, was a point she would not concede. A correspondence subsequently took place between the Queen and Sir Robert, which ended in the resignation of his authority to form a Government. The Queen then (yesterday) summoned Lord Melbourne to advise with her in this emergency. His Lordship had an interview of three hours, and, in compliance with the wishes of Her Majesty, consented again to conduct the Government. The Melbourne Administration is, therefore, restored.

The Court.

On Saturday Her Majesty received his Imperial Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Russia, upon his arrival; also his Royal Highness Prince Frederick Henry of the Netherlands upon his arrival.

The Queen gave last evening her first state ball this season at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty opened the ball with the Grand Duke of Russia, and afterwards danced with Prince Frederick Henry of the Netherlands, and also with a Russian nobleman in the suite of the Grand Duke.

The levee, intended to be held on Wednesday next, is postponed till further orders.

Her Majesty will hold Drawing-Rooms at St. James's Palace on the following days, at 2 o'clock:—Thursday, which now prevents Her Majesty's birth-day; Thursday, sable in very many cases. True it is, that on the breaking out of war, there will be new men (in contradistinction to the officers of the olden time) [illegible] being a Collar-day.

The Queen has appointed the Earl of Uxbridge Lord Chamberlain of Her Majesty's household, in the room of the Marquess Conyngham, resigned.

The Queen has appointed the Hon. A. W. Chichester to be a page of honour in ordinary to Her Majesty, vice the Right Hon. W. H. Hay, commonly called Lord Kilmarnock.

The Queen has granted permission to the brothers and sisters of the Earl of Essex to bear the same rank and precedency as they would have enjoyed had their father succeeded to the title.

The Grand Duke Alexander of Russia.—Numerous entertainments, on a scale of great magnificence, have been given during the week, in honour of the arrival of his Imperial Highness; and the Royal Dukes and most of the nobility, have paid him congratulatory visits. On Sunday, after attending Divine service at the Greek church in Welbeck-st., the Grand Duke received visits in his state apartments. After enjoying equestrian exercise in Hyde-park, his Imperial Highness and several members of his suite visited the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's-park. On Monday he visited the Colosseum, the Diorama, and the Bank of England; also Messrs. Everington's, and Messrs. Rundle and Co.'s on Ludgate-hill, and afterwards walked up the Strand as far as Northumberland House. In the evening he entertained Prince William Frederick of the Netherlands and a select party to dinner, at his hotel. On Tuesday he visited St. Paul's and the Tower, and from thence proceeded to inspect the works of the Thames Tunnel. On his way to town, his Imperial Highness visited the Surrey Zoological Gardens, afterwards the House of Lords, and in the evening his Imperial Highness and the Prince of the Netherlands, and several members of the suite, went to the Opera. On Wednesday he visited Westminster Abbey and the Bridewell of Tothill fields. A number of men were pointed out to him as being confined for debt, all for small sums. The Grand Duke remarked their wretched appearance, and, with a noble generosity, immediately gave orders for their release, his Imperial Highness causing their various debts to be discharged by one of his Attachés. The Grand Duke has also presented to the Society of Friends of Foreigners in Distress the munificent donation of 500*l.* The illustrious party then proceeded to visit Chelsea Hospital, when the whole of the veterans mustered for inspection. After expressing his satisfaction at their appearance, the party visited the Duke of York's school. The youthful soldiers and their fine band received the party, the principal corps forming into parallel lines, and passing in parade, and the band playing the national anthem. The Grand Duke also called upon Lord Melbourne at his residence in South st., to express personally his gratification at his reception on his arrival in this country. On Thursday the Grand Duke and Prince Frederick Henry visited the Royal Academy, Newgate, Christ's Hospital, and the exhibition of the model of the Battle of Waterloo at the Egyptian Hall.

"Disturbances in the Manufacturing Districts.—We are sorry to say that letters have been received in town, announcing affrays between the military and the populace in no less than three places yesterday—Manchester, Birmingham, and the Potteries. The Riot Act was read, and shots, some with fatal effect, are said to have been fired upon each occasion; but the collision was most formidable in the Potteries, where a numerous body of colliers are represented to have come in contact with the military and the police—the introduction of the latter being the cause of the riot. Many lives, we have heard, were sacrificed by the fire of the military—we will not say how many, as the account may be exaggerated."—Standard.

Rumours similar to the above were very prevalent yesterday, but we have not been able to trace them to any authentic source, and we believe that, if not altogether untrue, they are at all events much exaggerated. We have been informed that letters were received in town yesterday, written at Manchester as late as six o'clock on the previous evening, in which no allusion whatever is made to any disturbances in that district It is probable that the result will prove that the other districts mentioned are in a similar state of tranquillity.

Despatches, dated March 24, were received on Monday at the Colonial Office, from the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and from the officers administering her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. Despatches, dated March 28, from Vera Cruz, were also received at the Foreign Department; others, dated March 8, from Tampico, and others, dated March 21, from the Havannah. Despatches from Sir John Colborne, Governor of the Canadas, and from Sir George Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada, were received on Wednesday at the Colonial Office.

The Queen has appointed Mr. S. H. Sulivan, now Secretary of Legation at the Court of Sardinia, to be Secretary at the Court of Bavaria; the Hon. R. Bingham, now Secretary of Legation at the Court of Bavaria, to be Secretary at the Court of Sardinia; and Mr. F. L. Ball, now First Attaché to the Legation at Mexico, to be Secretary at Buenos Ayres. Mr. Sulivan is a son of the Deputy Secretary-at-War, and nephew of Lord Palmerston.

The Queen has appointed Oswald Wood, Esq., to be Provost Marshal of the Island of Antigua: John Mason Pooley, Esq., Provost Marshal of the Island of Grenada: and George La Coste, Esq., to be Judicial Referee and Registrar of Deeds in the Island of Trinidad.

Lord Melbourne's Private Secretary, the Hon. W. Cowper, is appointed Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital in the place of Mr. Shiel. Mr. Cowper's father, Earl Cowper, married, in 1787, Lord Melbourne's sister, and died in 1837, leaving three sons and a daughter. The present Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital was born Dec. 12, 1811.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir George P. Adams, K.G.H., is about to quit his seat Bowden, near Totnes, to reside on his estate in Somersetshire. He is an active magistrate, and not only highly respected in the district in which he has lived, but in the county at large. A subscription has been raised at Totnes, for presenting him, previous to his departure, with a piece of plate.

The Dean of Chester, Dr. George Davys, is appointed to the See of Peterborough, and the Rev. Frederic Anson to the Deanery of Chester.

Naval and Military Bible Society.—The 30th annual meeting of the society was held on Tuesday, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The Marquis of Cholmondeley presided, and among those present were Lord Mountsandford, Capt. Sir Edward Parry, &c. It appeared from the report of the Committee, that 3,944 Bibles had been forwarded to 51 different regiments, and that of such number, 857 had been afforded gratuitously. The total number of copies of the Scriptures distributed among the Army was 67,749. To the society's correspondent in the East 500 copies had been forwarded for the use of the East India Company's troops—1400 copies of the Scriptures had been sold in the metropolis to pensioners in the army. The Committee stated that they had read very gratifying accounts of the operations of the society with respect to many of our sea-ports. At Portsmouth, 13 of H.M.'s ships had been supplied with 282 Bibles and 566 Testaments. At Plymouth, 312 copies of the Scriptures had been given to men in 12 of H.M.'s vessels; and in the gross, 638 copies had been distributed at that port. At Falmouth, 1178 copies had been distributed among 27 of Her Majesty's ships. Among merchant vessels, canal boats, &c., 7431 copies had been distributed. The total number distributed during the year was 12,553, and the grand total since the formation of the society was 344,186 copies of the Word of God. The receipts for the past year were 2,804*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, and the disbursements 2,827*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* The balance in hand was 23*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*

The Earl of Stirling.—The High Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh was occupied several days last week with the trial of Lord Stirling, on a charge of forging a document with reference to his vast claims of territories in North America and Scotland. The Court unanimously acquitted him of any knowledge of the forgery, or that he uttered it as genuine, knowing it to be forged. On hearing the verdict, Lord Stirling fell forward upon the railing of the dock, but was immediately caught in the arms of his friend Col. D'Aguilar, and he was carried insensible into an adjoining apartment.

Thus ended one of the most extraordinary trials on record. Never before, probably, occurred a case in which, while there was a possibility of the prisoner's innocence, so astounding a mass of inculpatory evidence was presented to a jury; and unquestionably never before was exhibited in a British tribunal so hideous and revolting a web of fraud and villany as that which formed the subject of this proceeding—it was absolutely incredible; and it is consolatory to think that the infamous authors and agents of this deep conspiracy are not denizens of a British soil—that they are not our fellow-citizens and subjects—that they pollute not the atmosphere of Britain. Lord Stirling who, by the verdict of his fellow-men, has been the tool and the dupe of it, is a well-informed, clever, and most honourable man.

The Caledonian Mercury, in reference to this trial, says:—"The general feeling was one of great sympathy in the fate of the accused. The circumstance of Col. D'Aguilar, a gallant officer holding a distinguished situation on the staff of Ireland, having throughout the trial—day after day—taken his place in the dock with the friend of his boyhood, has also caused a common expression of respect and admiration towards this gentleman, both as a British soldier and as a man."

Death of Miss Bathurst.—This young lady, who was residing at Rome under the protection of her uncle and aunt, Lord and Lady Aylmer, rode out with them, escorted by the French Ambassador, the Duc de Laval Montmorenci. When the party arrived near the Pont di Molle, the Duke proposed leading them by a path which he had often ridden along the bank of the Tiber. The river having become swollen, portions of the bank had given way, which had rendered the path so narrow that, after pursuing it some short distance the Duke proposed retracing their steps. In endeavouring to turn her horse, Miss Bathurst backed him too near the edge of the bank, and horse and rider were plunged into the river Not one of the party could swim; nevertheless, Lord Aylmer attempted to rush into the water, and had advanced some paces when his distracted wife held him forcibly back.

The Cheltenham theatre and the Abbey-street theatre, in Dublin, were last week both consumed by fire.

Messrs. Hawkins and Frazer, convicted at the last Maidstone Assizes of an assault on Sir Charles Shaw, (as notified in this paper at the time) were sentenced on Tuesday, by the Court of Queen's Bench, to be imprisoned three calendar months, in the custody of the Marshal of the Marshalsea.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, May 7.—Lord Melbourne adverted to the vote of the House of Commons on the Jamaica Government Bill, and said that, in consequence of it, he and his colleagues had tendered their resignations, and that the Queen had accepted the same.—Lord Brougham said he should give the New Ministry, whoever they might be, an opportunity of shewing their sincerity to work out the complete emancipation of the negroes. He considered the emancipation to have been so completely decided by the Parliament and the people of the country, that no Ministry could stand 48 hours that should not carry out the working of that great measure. The vote which had been so fatal to the Administration was not to be taken as a triumph of the Whites over the Blacks.—Their Lordships adjourned till Friday.

FRIDAY, May 10.—The House was uncommonly full this evening, in anticipation of some announcement with reference to the present posture of the ministerial arrangements. The Duke of Sussex was in the House, as was also Lord Melbourne. After the transaction of some routine business, and a communication between the Lord Chancellor and Lord Melbourne, the Lord Chancellor rose and moved that the House adjourn to Monday. This motion, which was passed, as a matter of course, broke up the House, evidently to the surprise of all within its walls.

The adjournment took place amidst a prolonged eclat de rire from all sides, in which Lord Brougham joined with unusual force and vigour as he turned towards the anxious and curious visitors below the bar.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 6.—The Speaker made a communication regarding his own contemplated retirement from the chair, stating that experience had admonished him that he had no longer the strength to enable him to endure the fatigue and labour of his office, and that he had, therefore, come to the determination not to resume his seat in the chair after the Whitsuntide recess.—The adjourned debate on the Jamaica Government Suspension Bill was resumed. The debate was opened by Mr. Maclean, who opposed the Bill, and he was followed by Sir E. Wilmot (for the Bill), Mr. Grote (against the Bill), Mr. Clay (for the Bill), Mr. Warburton (for the Bill). There followed speeches from Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Gladstone, Dr. Lushington, Lord Stanley, and Lord J. Russell, in reply. The House then divided. For the second reading, 289; against it, 294. Majority 5.—The House went into Committee pro forma, and the Bill is to be further considered on Monday next.

TUESDAY, May 7.—Lord John Russell communicated to the House that, in consequence of the vote on the Jamaica Government Bill, the Ministers, seeing thereby that they had lost the confidence of the House, and could not hope advantageously to conduct the affairs of the country, had tendered their resignations to Her Majesty, and moved, in order to afford time for the appointment of successors, that the House at its rising do adjourn till Monday next. The House almost immediately afterwards adjourned.

Theatres.

Italian Opera.—Lucia Di Lammermoor becomes more and more a favourite with the very beautiful performance of Persiani. It was repeated on Saturday night to a very full house, listened to with unusual attention, and most warmly, as well as frequently, applauded. After the ballet, La Prova d'una Opera Seria was given, and in which Lablache was most rich in all manner of broad comic humours. Grisi, too, as prima donna, showed a perfectly unequivocal acquaintance with the art of laughing.—On Thursday night Pauline Garcia made her debut in the character of Desdemona. The first appearance on the stage of the sister of Malibran, understood to possess, in a high degree, the genius and talent of that incomparable artist, had excited much interest. She is a tall, elegant-looking girl, beautifully formed, and graceful in her movements and gestures. Her features are not regularly handsome; but her eyes are fine, and her countenance animated and expressive, especially of the softer emotions. In short, she was a complete impersonation of "The gentle lady wedded to the Moor."

As she proceeded in her part, it appeared that the high accounts which have been given of her genius and attainments are not exaggerated. The great and only drawback from her present means of producing effect lies in deficiency of vocal strength. Her performance sparkled with beauties, though it was unequal; but its inequalities will disappear with time and repetition, and we cannot doubt that it will reach transcendent excellence.

Haymarket.—A farce in one act, called My Wife's Dentist, was produced at this theatre on Saturday night. Its humour is in general rather too broad. The principal character was well sustained by Wrench, and the curtain fell amid applause.

St. James's.—A company of Spanish dancers appeared at this theatre on Wednesday night, for the first time in this country. The beauty of the national dances number of cases; and further evidence is found in the fact, that the cases are fewest in the hottest part of the year. Dropsies are about as frequent WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mr. Kollmann's second concert for the season, on Tuesday morning, was well attended; the rooms being literally crowded. The programme exhibited an excellent selection of classical music, which was well performed by the singers engaged, viz. Miss Birch, Miss Bruce, Miss Dolby, Madame Balfe, Begrez, Saunders, and Giubilei, the last of whom sang Largo al factotum with infinite humour. Among the instrumentalists were Puzzi, Hausmann, Willman, Wright, Sedlatzek, and Mori. Hummel's Serenade, for pianoforte, harp, violin, clarionet, and violoncello, was beautifully played by Kollmann, Wright, Hausmann, Willman, and Mori, as was also Weber's concerto for the pianoforte, with accompaniments, wherein Kollmann exhibited his perfect command of the instrument, as well as a thorough knowledge of his art. His performances were received throughout with much approbation. Miss Bruce, in Mozart's difficult aria, Non piu di fiori, gave token of great judgment and skill, united with a beautiful voice of extensive compass. This elegant cavatina, with the L'Addio by the same composer, which was given with great pathos and expression by Miss Dolby, were the vocal gems of the concert. Mr. Kollmann's patent pianoforte improves upon acquaintance.

AN EXTRAVAGANZA.—BY VICTOR HUGO.

Enfant ! si j'étais roi, je donnerais l'empire, &c.

I'd give, girl (were I but a king!),
Throne, sceptre, empire,—everything;
My people, suppliant on the knee,
My ships, that crowd the subject sea;
My crown, my baths of porphyry,—
For one sweet look from thee!

Were I a God, I'd give—the air,
Earth, and the sea; the angels fair;
The skies; the golden worlds around,
The demons, whom my laws have bound;
Chaos, and its dark progeny;
All space, and all eternity,—
For one love-kiss from thee!

Literary Notices.

The Unity of Disease analytically and synthetically proved: with Facts and Cases subversive of the Received Practice of Physic. By Samuel Dickson, M.D., formerly a Medical Officer on the Staff; Author of a Treatise on "The Prevalent Diseases of India," "The Fallacy of the Art of Physic, as taught in the Schools," &c. Simpkin and Marshall.

THIS is a very clever book; or, perhaps it might be more correct to say, that this book is the production of a very clever man. To think of subverting the "received practice of physic" is, of itself, no humble idea. To have conceived it, argues either madness, or the consciousness of superior mental power. Now, as we have carefully perused every page of Dr. Dickson's volume, without discovering a single trait of insanity, a natural inference is, that the writer well knows what he is about. Dr. D. has not succeeded in making converts of us upon all points: we consider him too much of a theorist; but there is so much that is good in his theory—so much simplicity, good sense, and apparent truth—that it is well entitled to the serious consideration of every member of the faculty. But medical men, in large practice, are not great readers—are not good students: they say (and no doubt very truly) they have not time to read. And thus a mass of conventional rules—many of them very stupid ones—descends from generation to generation; and thus, from generation to generation, the lives of thousands of human beings are annually sacrificed. We do not absolve Dr. Dickson from the charge of neglecting to read, or of not having time to read. Evidently, he has not STUDIED Hahnemann: had he read him even, he would not have quoted from him at second-hand, through the pages of Dr. Granville. Yet, in his practice, Dr. Dickson is more than half a homœopathist. The main points of difference between Dr. Dickson and the homœopathists appear to be, first, that whilst the pharmacopœia of the homœopathists is exceedingly copious, that of Dr. Dickson is vastly more restricted than that of the allopathists in general; and, secondly, that whilst the disciples of Hahnemann invariably exhibit simple medicines—that is, only one medicine at a time—Dr. Dickson exhibits his few favourite medicines (arsenic, prussic acid, quinine, opium, &c.) in combination.

Speaking of Hahnemann, Dr. Dickson says:—

"His remedies are aconite, gold, belladonna, &c.; but these are only salutary, according to him, when prescribed in the minutest possible doses,—the millionth, decillionth, and heaven knows what other infinitesimal proportion of a grain of aconite or belladonna, being an infallible remedy for the great proportion of human diseases? Can my reader, unless absolutely mystified by metaphysics, require me to enter upon the serious refutation of such absurdities?"

Now, we will take leave to say, that had Dr. Dickson understood the principles and practice of homœopathy—had he made himself acquainted with the mode of preparing homœopathic medicines—with the extent to which the known properties of given drugs are increased by that mode of preparation, and with the new properties which are developed thereby;—had he, moreover, been cognisant of the numerous "facts and cases subversive of the received practice of physic" which homœopathic practitioners have adduced, he would never have asked the above question. Whatever may be the defects of homœopathy, it is, what allopathy is not—a system.

Without particular reference to the fate of Dr. Dickson's theory, or of his practice, we are perfectly satisfied that the present "received practice of physic" is daily and rapidly losing ground; and that, a century hence, the existing opponents of what they are pleased to term innovation will be classed with the disbelievers in the circulation of the blood, the fierce declaimers against the virtues of bark, and the old-world enemies of variolous and vaccine inoculation. By the discontinuance of blood-letting alone, to which the faculty must come, thousands and tens of thousands of human creatures will be yearly withheld from the grave. And here Dr. Dickson will have the honour of standing in front of the battle. "In the course of a very extensive practice," says he,

"I have not for some years even once ordered the abstraction of blood in any manner, nor have I had cause to regret the circumstance; for, since I dropped the practice, I have met with a success in the treatment of disease generally, which, while my mind continued fettered by school-doctrines, I could not by any possibility have foreseen."

We shall now endeavour to convey to the reader some idea of Dr. Dickson's theory of the "unity of disease." Health he defines to be an equable and medium temperature prevailing throughout the body. Everything is periodical. "There can be no motion in matter without change of temperature; and no change of temperature without motion in matter."

"Disease," on the other hand, "is neither a devil to cast out, a humour to be expelled, nor an acrimony to be blunted; neither is it an acidity to be neutralised, nor a putridity to be chemically solved. It is a state to be improved—a CORPOREAL VARIATION reducible, like health, into a series of particular mutations,—mutations, in the course of which, the matter of the same body, by a simple difference in the amount of its action and temperature, occasionally alters its character and combinations."

Contrast simple disease with health, and the difference will be found to consist "in mere variation of the sum or amount of the natural corporeal action and temperature." Here is the nucleus of the theory: "INTERMITTENT FEVER IS THE TYPE OF ALL DISEASE."

"The word AGUE, synonymous with INTERMITTENT FEVER, is the phrase which popularly embraces all diseases in which the patients have chills and heats, with periodic exemption from both. We shall, in the sequel, establish that no disorder, however named or caused, is deficient in either of these respects; that, in a word, there is no morbid state that is not preceded or accompanied by alternations of temperature, or that does not exhibit remissions and paroxysms of a more or less periodic kind throughout its course."

"What is sleep but a periodical palsy of the nerves of the five senses. What is death? A permanent palsy of every organic perception. The body under disease exhibits revolutions analogous to those in health—it shows a similar tendency to alternate motion and repose, for periods more or less regular are observed to mark the approach, duration, and interval of recurrence of the morbid phases."

Generally speaking, Dr. Dickson's views are remarkably clear and to the purpose. For instance, on hypochondria and hysteria:—

"In common practice you will hear medical men say, 'Oh! there is nothing the matter with this man; he is only hypped,'—and if a female, 'she is only hysterical,' or 'she has the vapours.' Having no inflammatory entity to treat, and really not knowing what to do, the generality of practitioners content themselves with prescribing placebos or purgatives in such cases. Now, I must deprecate all this empiricism. No man or woman indulges in whims and fantasies without being positively ill. If the physician will inquire, he will find that the subject of the group of symptoms, whether termed hypochondria or hysteria, suffers from chills and heats—that exacerbation and remission characterise these diseases in every form, and that the hysteric or hypochondriac whim differs from hallucination and mania in shade merely, and the chills and heats from the cold and hot stages of fever in nothing but degree."

Dr. Dickson affects to laugh at the system of homœopathy, its infinitesimal doses, &c.; yet hear him on the subject "of calomel in doses so minute as the twelfth, sixteenth, and twentieth part of a grain:"—

"For thirteen years of my life, I have been in the habit of prescribing calomel in this manner; and I feel a pleasure in stating, that my inducement to do so was the observation of its happy effects in the practice of a gentleman who, after taking the highest rank as a surgeon in Edinburgh, has since been removed to London, where he will not receive his just reward, if he be not equally fortunate,—need I name Mr. Liston, of the North London Hospital?"

On the important subject of blood-letting, Dr. Dickson actually goes further than the homœopathist: he does not draw the lancet even in cases of apoplexy.

"Does a man fall from his horse or a height, is he not instantly bled? Has he been stunned by a blow, is not the lancet in requisition? Nay, as in the case of the murdered Malibran, has an individual fainted from exertion or exhaustion, is it not a case of fit, and what so proper as venesection? Need I say all this is wrong—all a superadded injury! In every one of these cases, the brain and nerves are already in a state of debility—there is a positive diminution of nervous influence, evidenced by the cold surface, and weak or imperceptible pulse;—there is an exhaustion, which the lancet, so far from relieving, too often converts into a state of utter and hopeless prostration. True, many have recovered who have been treated in this manner; but these were not cures—they were escapes!"

Again:—

"The long shiver of the severest ague—the burning fever—the fatal lock-jaw—the vomiting, cramps and asphyxia of cholera—the spasm of asthma and epilepsy—the pains of rheumatism—the palpitating and tumultuous heart—the most settled melancholy and madness—every species of palsy,—these—all these have I traced to loss of blood! Could arsenic—could prussic acid, in their deadliest and most concentrated doses, do more? Yet I have heard men object to use the minutest portions of these agents medicinally—men who would open a vein, and let the life-blood run, until the patient fell, like a slaughtered ox, death like and all but dead upon the floor!"

Apoplexy.—"Having in my Military Hospital no prejudices to combat; and observing the flushed and hot state of the patient's forehead and face, I determined to try the cold affusion. The result was beyond my most sanguine expectations. The first patient was laid out all his length, and cold water poured on his head, from a height. After a few ablutions, he staggered to his feet, stared wildly round him, and then walked to the hospital, where a smart purgative completed his cure. In the army I had a sufficiently extensive field for my experiments; and I seldom afterwards lost an apoplectic patient."

Having already far exceeded our usual limits on such occasions, we cannot touch, even lightly, upon Dr. Dickson's modes of remedial treatment. We should not, however, deem our notice (far too brief for the merits of the book) complete, or approaching to completeness, without the subjoined paragraphs from the "Conclusion" of the work:—

"We have proved, we hope, to the satisfaction of all but the prejudiced and the interested:—1. That the phenomena of perfect HEALTH consist in a regular series of alternate actions—each embracing a special portion of time. 2. That DISEASE, under all its modifications, is a simple exaggeration or diminution of the same actions;—and being universally alternative with a comparative state of health, strictly speaking, resolves itself into FEVER, REMITTENT OR INTERMITTENT, chronic or acute;—every kind of structural lesion or disorganization, from the caries of a tooth, to the pulmonary decomposition of phthisis, and that state of knee which is termed white swelling, being merely developments in its course. 3. That the tendency to disorganization, usually denominated acute or inflammatory, differs from the chronic or scrofulous in the mere amount of temperature and action—the former being more remarkably characterised by excess of both, and consequently exhibiting a more rapid progress to decomposition or cure; while the latter approaches its respective terminations by more subdued, and consequently slower and less obvious alternations of the same action and temperature. The slow and rapid caries of a tooth vary in nothing from the chronic and "galloping" consumptions, except in the difference of tissue involved, and the degree of danger to life, arising out of the respective offices of each. Disease, thus simplified, will be found to be amenable to a principle of treatment equally simple. Partaking of the nature of ague, throughout all its modifications, it will be best met by a practice in accordance with the proper treatment of this."

We can only add, that the cases adduced by Dr. Dickson are of a very striking nature; that their treatment, and its results, are full of strong practical interest; and that, to a great extent, they sustain the writer's theory. Dr. Dickson's volume cannot be too extensively read, either by the profession or the public at large.

Diary of the Rev. John Ward, Vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon. Edited by Dr. Severn. H. Colburn.

THE history of this publication is not the least singular and interesting feature appertaining to it. It appears that, on Dr. Severn having been appointed to the Registrarship of the Medical Society of London, he proceeded at once to investigate the contents and condition of its highly curious and valuable library; and one of the very first treasures on which he chanced to lay his fortunate hands, was a manuscript consisting of no less than seventeen duodecimo volumes, which proved on examination to consist almost entirely of the diary of a highly respectable and intelligent clergyman, who had been for thirty years the Vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon—the dates of the Diary extending from 1648 (only thirty years after Shakspeare died there) to 1679. This period moreover included, as the reader is aware, many other highly important and interesting political and social events—among others the Plague, the Fire of London, the Restoration of Charles the Second, &c. Dr. Severn's attention was, naturally enough, directed in the first instance to the discovery of any matter which this curious MS. might contain, relative to our immortal Shakspeare; and his hopes were not wholly, though greatly, disappointed in this particular; for the new facts about Shakspeare, though highly interesting and important so far as they go, are sadly limited and meagre—at least if we are to understand (which is not, however, very clear) that what we are here presented with on that topic is all that the 15 MS. volumes of Diary contain. But in regard to an infinite variety of other matters, arising out of the social and political condition of the times, this Diary may be considered as a discovery of singular interest and curiosity, and of course as a treasure-house of future information and amusement; for we can only regard the present volume as a sort of specimen of what we may hereafter expect from the same source. The information is desultory, of course, being evidently put down solely with a view to the private satisfaction of the diarist, and without the remotest view to after publication, or use of any kind—a fact which gives double value and authenticity to the present volume, and which we shall briefly describe, for the information of those readers who may desire to learn beforehand whether the nature of it is suited or not to their tastes and habit of study; though to whose tastes such a work is not suited, we can scarcely conceive. The volume opens with a preface, giving the history of the discovery above referred to. We have then a succinct biography by the editor, of the reverend diarist, who was evidently a scholar, a man of liberal views and feelings, and a person whose integrity gives promise of the most strict truth and honesty, in all which he is called upon from time to time to record in his Diary. We have then (what, to say truth, we could very well have dispensed with) a lengthened notice by Dr. Severn, of all that was known about Shakspeare and his family, before the discovery of this Diary. These details may prove a convenience to many readers; but they will be deemed a mere clog on the work by precisely those who are best qualified, both by taste and knowledge, to appreciate the rest of the publication. The foregoing matter occupies about ninety pages of Dr. Severn's volume, the remaining two hundred and thirty consisting of extracts from Mr. Ward's Diary, which are given, we regret to remark, without any dates, but merely with an intimation that they extend from 1648 to 1678. The contents of this only really valuable portion of the volume are of so various and desultory a nature that it would be impossible to classify or even describe them more specifically than we have done above: suffice it to say, that they touch upon all the social topics of the day, without, however, dwelling upon any one, and afford us innumerable "touch-and-go" notices of a vast variety of persons, many of whom are among the most famous in our land's history; and, finally, that there is no class of reader to whom they are not calculated to afford mingled amusement and information. We cannot quit this volume without regretting the unaccountable paucity of its contents, or rather the smallness of its size, as compared with the large promise held out to us in the description of the MS. from which it is taken—namely, "a series of seventeen duodecimo volumes, in the original binding, carefully and legibly written, which proved to be genuine commonplace books, extending from 1648 to 1678; a portion of time," as the editor justly adds, "fraught with intense interest to the historian, the practitioner of medicine, the student, and the philosopher." We have only to hope, in conclusion, that the serious defect in question is owing to the zealous haste with which the editor has dispensed this first instalment of his treasure; and that we shall speedily be favoured with another and larger portion of this curious work.

Rural Sketches. By Thomas Miller. John Van Voorst. We are glad to announce another very pleasant volume from the pen of Mr. Miller, who is decidedly one of the best painters of the beauties of nature in all its phases, though nature is not always the most graceful personage described by poets, and whose writings are replete with instruction and amusement. Those who have luxuriated in our author's "Day in the Woods," will not be disappointed with his "Rural Sketches:" they include Country Courtship, the Old Woodman, the Country Justice, Rural Poetry, the Country Fair, and many others. There is an originality and freshness in these essays that cannot fail in affording gratification. We will make a suitable extract—the picture of a Recruiting Serjeant at the "Country Fair:"—

In staggered Jack Straw, rolling drunk, with the Serjeant's cap on, singing—

> "If I had a beau for a soldier would go,
> Do you think I'd say no? No! not I;
> Not a sigh would I draw, when his red coat I saw,
> But a cheer I'd give for his bravery."

"What! have yo' listed, Jack?" interrogated half a dozen voices in as many tones. "I have, my lads," answered he singing—"'And I never will follow the plough tail again.' I've listed for a hofficer, an' if any o' yo's a mind to list wi' me (hiccup), I'll gi' yo' a shilling in his majester's name an' list you for full sargent." "You mean full private," said an old man, who had hitherto sat unobserved in the corner; "you mean full private, same as they'll make you when they get you up to th' regiment. I once listed thirty years agó for a Colonel, and when I got to th' regiment, and I told 'em what I'd listed for, they laughed at me, and says yo're above a Colonel; so I was above one, for our Colonel only stood five feet five, and I stood near upon six feet, so they made me a gronadier." "I don't care," answered Jack Straw, "I took his majester's money to be a hofficer (hiccup), an' be one I will, or else I'll not serve according to the articles o' war. 'Now,' says I, afore I took the money, 'Sargent,' says I, 'I list for an hofficer.' 'Yes,' says he; 'will you be Captain, Lieutenant, or Ensign?' 'Ensign,' says I. 'Very well,' says he, and he put it down in black and white; you may go into the parlour and ax him;" and away we went, John Straw, Ensign, leading the way.

In the parlour all was confusion: a good-looking rosy-cheeked girl was pulling at the arm of her drunken lover and exclaiming, "Dinna list, Tommy, dinna list; o' yo'll brake my heart: dinna list him, Mr. Soldier." "I will list," said the rough rustic; "give me a shilling to serve his most gracious majester, Mr. King William: I'll not be a clod-hopper all the born days of my life, and put up we your oas and offs." "Oh! dinna list him, Mr. Sargent!" exclaimed the girl, "for his poor old mother would run mark mad if he was to go for a soldier, and I'm sure I dare not show my face at hoam wehout him. His mother's sure to lay all the blame on me, and say as he listed for love, and then what ever am I to do?" "I'll not list him while he's tipsy," replied the Serjeant, saying a thousand pretty things to the distressed damsel, and accompanying every sentence with a knowing twinkle of the eye. By the aid of another maiden, however, the drunken swain was led off, and on throwing up the parlour-window we could perceive him and his sweetheart in the garden, she promising not to see Fred Giles again, upon condition that he no more whistled out Squire Thornton's dairy-maid.

The Serjeant still continued exhibiting his long purse, and pointing out the happiness of a soldier's life, while many a country bumpkin sat glowing beneath the sunny beams of imaginary glory, and old Mother Ward's sparkling ale. "Think but for a moment," exclaimed the Serjeant, in the true "Freies' vein," "of being exposed all the day in a hay-field, sweating beneath a scorching sun, until at night you're all as tired as dogs, while the soldier sits in his shady barracks, enjoying all manner of happiness, such as sleeping, smoking, or drinking. Then think of the chance of being promoted to an officer! Beside, there's no work to do; there's nothing after you've learnt your exercise but to keep yourself clean, and walk about all day like a gentleman. Then there's the bounty, look at that (and down went his purse upon the table); then again think of the honour of fighting for your king and country, and if you happen to have your leg shot off (here two or three winced), why, you've bread for life in a good pension. There's prize-money too, and all the honour of saying you've been in such a battle, and if you go abroad, there's wine at a penny a quart; think of that, you rogues!—and you've no horse to look after like a horse-soldier, nought but a knapsack and firelock.—Who would follow the plough when he can march beneath the glorious colours of the 42nd, to the merry fife and drum! and have plenty of sweethearts in every town, and money without working for it—eh, eh, my brave countrymen?"

"And who the devil," said the old man who had once listed for a Colonel, "will take thirteen-pence a-day to be shot at, eh? and have about twenty masters over him, eh? First comes a lance Jack,—'If you don't stir yourself, I'll report you to the Corporal;' then comes the puppy of a Corporal,—'If you don't mind, I'll lodge a complaint to the Serjeant;' then the Serjeant,—'Sir, you'll chance to see the black-hole, if you are not more attentive;' then there's drill,—'Hold your head up, or I'll put you in the awkward squad;' then another peeping down your gun-muzzle, and examining you from head to foot, to see that everything's in apple-pie order, beside as many sort of officers as there are weeds in our common. Hey, hey, my lads, soldiering's all very well to talk about, but you no sooner are one than you've had a bellyful. Be content where you are; if you don't like your master now, you can soon get another; but as for promotion, if you ever get up its to th' holberts, where they once promoted me, only for staying out we my lass after th' trumpet had sounded for all in;—what d'ye think o' that for promotion?"

The Serjeant muttered something about desertion and back-scratching, and we retired up stairs to join the dancers.

There are numerous wood illustrations of great beauty, and, altogether, it is a most charming volume.

Ryall's Portraits of Eminent Conservatives and Statesmen. Nos. 11 and 12. Dawe and Gowar.

We have repeatedly expressed our admiration of the very masterly engravings in this work, and the portraits in the present two numbers, as well as the coats of arms, are equally deserving of the highest praise. The Conservatives herein represented are the Duke of Rutland, Earl of Winchilsea, Lord Bexley, Earl of Munster, Lord Mahon, and Sir F. Trench. The memoirs, though brief, are well written, and that of Lord Munster, from which we take the closing passage, is highly interesting. We cordially agree with every word in this sketch of a most excellent nobleman:—

We see him then gallant as a soldier, arduous and persevering as a student, moderate yet consistent as a politician,—an affectionate father and attached husband,—his mind given up to liberal pursuits; when from station, fortune, and all opportunity, the wide world of pleasure was at his command;—yet, above these things, we see that which will always redound to the honour of the Earl of Munster; that placed in a position where, over the lapse of centuries, but some few are to be found who have been similarly placed,—perhaps none without grossly abusing it—he has steered clear of all those temptations which his station gave him to advance his fortunes by any other method than such as would have been adopted by the son of one born in the ordinary ranks of life. In whatever light we view the Earl of Munster—soldier, student, politician—in his domestic relations, or in his otherwise peculiarly delicate standing,—we still find him worthy of the name he bears.

The Illustrated Shakspere. Part I. R. Tyas.—This bids fair to be a cheap and excellent edition, very charmingly embellished and beautifully printed. The part before us contains the whole of the Tempest, with introductory and critical remarks on the sources from which the plot appears to have been derived. There can be no question of the success of this new undertaking of one of our most enterprising bibliopolists. "What human work so irresistibly addresses itself to human sympathies as the writings of Shakspere?"

Smith's Standard Library.—A further issue includes "Knickerbocker's History of New York," "Oliver Goldsmith's Poems and Plays," "Mrs. Inchbald's Nature and Art," "Locke on the Reasonableness of Christianity," "Thomson's Seasons and Castle of Indolence." The selection is extremely judicious; each work is beautifully printed, and extraordinarily cheap, thus supplying an excellent library of English literature at a trifling outlay.

The Aldine Magazine.—The most prominent feature in the publication this month is a paper on the "Patronage of the Arts," and vindicating the conduct of the Royal Academy. Also, reminiscences of the old booksellers, Andrew Millar, Robert Lawless, the Cadells, &c.—Letter of Whitfield—the Aldine Triumvirate—an amusing "show-up" of the "Society of British Artists"—Critical Notices of Books and Exhibitions—and a great variety of miscellaneous literary matter.

Recollections of Scenic Effects, &c. By G. S.

It gives us great pleasure to introduce to our readers a work which, though it has hitherto attracted little attention from the periodical press, will be found on examination to have singular claims on public favour. It presents itself to us in the unassuming character of "Scenic Effects of Covent Garden Theatre during the season of 1838-9;" and in this point of view it is full of merit and interest. But the quality which has induced us to point to it the particular attention of the lovers of art is, the extraordinary force and truth of expression which many of its details display, and which are as valuable as they are rare,—especially in an artist who is, we believe, still so young and new to his art as scarcely to claim (by his years and practice at least) a higher place than that of a student. The publication consists of parts; each containing three plates, and each plate representing some one "scenic effect" in one of the standard plays, the production of which has made so memorable the brief dramatic reign of our great tragic actor. As "scenic effects," we repeat, they are excellent, and deserve to rank among the most interesting records of Macready's brilliant management. But in some of the individual figures (mere outlines as they are), we trace powers of expression and of portraiture which give promise of high future excellence, and cause us to look with unusual interest and curiosity to the future career of the artist. The parts already before us include the Tempest, Richelieu, and the Lady of Lyons.

Mr. Moon, the most spirited as well as liberal of publishers, has just brought out two most superb mezzotintos. The subjects are Edwin Landseer's celebrated portrait of the dog Odin, engraved by his brother; and Harding's grand canal, Venice, inimitably engraved by Lucas. Every admirer of the arts will be gratified with these charming prints; they add to the high reputation of Landseer and Lucas, are worthy transcripts of the celebrated original paintings, and most creditable to Mr. Moon, the great patron of engravers.

East India Intelligence.

On Thursday evening a messenger arrived at the India House, bringing despatches from Bombay to 25th March, Madras, 17th; and Calcutta, 14th. The news brought are of a favourable description. Lieut. Pottinger has been restored to a good understanding with the Prince Kamran of Herat. Sir Willoughby Cotton, with two Brigades of Infantry and one of Cavalry, had advanced towards the Bolan Pass, having left Shikarpore on the 23d Feb. The Shah Soojah, with his force, was expected to leave Shikarpore the first week in March. Sir John Keane, with his division, had advanced to Larkana, between Hyderabad and Shikarpore, on 24th Feb., and intended to proceed to Dadur, at the foot of the Bolan mountains. The Sirdars had returned from a fruitless expedition to Herat, and are now stated to be favourably disposed to the British interests. Col. Frith, of the Madras Artillery, died on the 2nd March.

The latest intelligence, dated from Camp Jancedera, two stages from Shikarpore, the 24th Feb., confirms what we stated several weeks since. It appears that, at the request of the Queen and of Lord Hill, Sir Henry Fane will retain the chief command in India, and that his Excellency will make Bombay his head-quarters. Sir John Keane will continue to command the army in the field.

Jhansi.—This place has at last capitulated to the force employed against it. Preparations were about to be made on the evening of 4th Jan., for erecting a battery to break the town wall, when a report was spread that Jhansi had capitulated. This was found to be true, for, on the General going down with two regiments to take possession, not a soul was to be seen in either town or fort. Sir Thomas Aubarey has issued Division Orders, announcing the evacuation of the town and fort of Jhansi, by the Baee and her followers, and offering his best acknowledgments to the whole of the troops, both European and Native, for the readiness, zeal, and orderly conduct evinced by all ranks. The 33d reg. was ordered to remain at Jhansi, and Brigadier Stubbs, commanding the contingent, to place himself in communication with Mr. Frazer, the Governor-General's agent.

Capt. Foster, of the Engineers, has been ordered to proceed to Aden, with the general object of reporting on the improvements requisite or expedient to be made in the place, in the repair of its buildings, construction of tanks, improvement of the harbour, &c., from which we are led to conclude, that Government is anxious to lose no time in fully developing its resources as a place of trade, for which it is admirably situated, being in the immediate vicinity of the coffee and gum districts, which have hitherto found an outlet for their produce at Mocha. The present juncture is particularly favourable for Aden becoming a place of considerable trade, as the Arab merchants would then have no inducement to trade with the Egyptians, and would prefer bringing their produce to a market where they would be assured of protection, and be free from the insults and exactions of Mahomed Ali's officers to which they are now exposed, all the ports on the Red Sea being in the Pacha's possession.—Bombay Gazette, Feb. 28.

The rear column of the Army of the Indus passed Bawulpore on the 6th Jan., and the advanced columns were expected to be at Shikarpore on the 27th. Shikarpore, which is on the western side of the Indus, is expected by some to be the limit of the first campaign.

Bombay Military Fund.—Lieut.-Col. Schuler, of the Artillery, is appointed a Director of the Military Fund in the vacancy occasioned by Major Groundwater proceeding to Europe.

An address to Col. Jervis has been prepared at Poonah, by those who were brought up at the late Government Institution there, and a subscription for the purpose of presenting to that officer a piece of plate is now in progress. Col. Jervis has borne his part in many works and institutions of public utility, and his exertions have always borne the stamp of judgment and ability. The sum already subscribed is 1500 rupees.

The Court of Inquiry to investigate into the merits of the late mutiny in the 28th Bengal N I., commenced its sittings on the 21th Dec., and still continues to sit. Enough has already transpired to disprove a very absurd report that got abroad, viz., that the officers of the corps had secretly encouraged the disaffection of the men. The true cause of the act has been most clearly discovered; and it is thought that, so far from the men needing instigation, it reflected highly on their discipline that they so long suppressed the discontent they had so much cause for. The result, it is thought, will be confined to the dismissal of a few of the more prominent mutineers, and the re-establishment of the character of the corps. Major Wilkinson, it is supposed, will retain the command.—Agra Ukhbar, Jan. 19.

Camp, Khanpore, 10th Jan., 1839.—This is four marches from Ahmedpore towards Shikarpore, for which we are in full march. The town has some better houses in it than either Bhawulpore or Ahmedpore, to which state it belongs. Water is brought from the Indus, a distance of 15 miles, by a canal, which runs through the town, and expends itself in a wheel about a mile distant from it, in which wheel the cavalry horses watered, and thus for the first time drank of the waters of the Indus.

Army of the Indus.—The following is an extract of a letter from the Army, dated Khanpore, 12th Jan. "Whilst writing, we have just received a report from the Shah's camp, that the Ameers of Hyderabad have crossed the Indus with the whole force for the purpose of attacking the Bombay Army, and checking its advance on Shikarpore. The Ameers assert our placing Shah Soojah on the throne of Cabul is a mere pretext for furthering our own ambitious views, and they even seem to doubt he is with us. Of the latter they will soon have positive proof; but the system we have hitherto pursued in India is certainly sufficient to justify their suspicions that the occupation of Scinde and the whole line of the Indus is the main object of our expedition."—Military Gazette, Feb. 9.

Shah Soojah's Force.—Shah Soojah's force appears to have reached Galker on the 14th Jan., and was progressing in a most favourable manner, and would in all probability cross the Indus at a place called Uzeerpore, by a ferry, which, considering their very augmented strength, would prove a most admirable plan, and by far better than our own provinces present. The indefatigable zeal and exertions of Capt. Johnson, the Pay and Commissariat Officer, are said to be beyond all praise.—Bombay Times, Feb. 13.

In consequence of the death of Maj.-Gen. Monn, Maj.-Gen. C. A. Walker succeeds to a half-share from the off-reckoning fund from the 6th. Jan., 1839.

ON MILITARY PUNISHMENTS AND REGIMENTAL DISCIPLINE.—BY AN OLD FIELD OFFICER.

As you are obliging enough to admit the difficulties of the task you propose, and to express so favourable an opinion of my professional experience, I shall endeavour, in compliance with your request, "to point out a few of the results of our former and present system of military punishment," as they recur to my recollection, but, in considering this important subject, great allowance must be made for long-standing and rooted prejudices. Those who most strenuously oppose its further investigation, are not less humane than those who advocate the abolition of corporeal infliction; their original feelings would probably have dictated what custom (second nature) has since taught them to consider as mistaken mercy. You justly observe, that "unbiassed experience should alone decide." But supposing you had found it, are you quite sure it would command the faith it merits? Who will yield to its judgment when the highest order of military talent and authority cannot furnish satisfactory information? Even officers, who have for twenty years encountered all the vicissitudes of Troop or Company, may not have reflected much on a matter of such every-day occurrence. The common routine of regimental duties is performed as a matter of course, but seldom studied; and this interesting subject never appeared to me to have excited attention after individuals had overcome the first shock (usually a slight one) and had become gradually hardened by subsequent practice.

We must all remember many things that were formerly considered so impracticable, that to have suggested them would have affected one's reputation for common sense; yet they have since proved otherwise. Amongst those of apparently little importance we have lived to see accomplished, are the dismissal of the soldiers' tail, and the fetters imposed on the cut with nine; yet, to the old school, either would have been incredibly awful. It was hardly believed possible to dispense with such powerful auxiliaries as hair-powder, soap, and fourteen-inch queues, they were considered as necessary as arms and ammunition; their very arrangement was characteristic and mathematically precise; here too, very probably originated the punishment of the bullet; for the queue, on the slightest indication of disobedience, was condemned to carry a number of those weighty appendages, until its mutinous propensities were thoroughly subdued; and at this virtuous period of military history, all such appendages were commended, as affording occupation and innocent amusement to the soldier, keeping him out of mischief, and lending their charitable aid in disposing of the arrears of sixpence a day, which he might otherwise have been tempted to squander in elegant fopperies, or unsoldierlike extravagance, to the great detriment of true discipline. No wonder, then, that the removal of appendages, possessing such important qualities, should have been considered fatal to the character of the service, and that the decay of its glory should have been from that moment predicted—no wonder that, with the bigoted conservatives of antiquated customs and costume, it outweighed every consideration for a poor devil, who, by its removal, was enabled to march under a load of half a hundred weight, without having his head half twisted off with the friction of his appointments. Never shall I forget the morning when the order arrived from His Royal Highness, our ever-lamented Commander-in-Chief, for this apparently trifling, but really invaluable boon. It was on the eve of our embarkation for the memorable expedition to Corunna, in 1808; the men were half frantic with delight, but it was almost a death-blow to our little Commandant; he could not have been more indignant had the soldiers' queue been the rudder by which he was to have been steered into action, and the vessel without it an unmanageable wreck. I remember, too, an old Colonel, who, speaking with enthusiasm of the superior discipline of those happy days, when little cocked hats and (I believe) red breeches were equally precious, he would not hear of the bravery of Britons on all occasions, or of the advantages of increased comfort and convenience. "Sir," said he, "I was Adjutant of your old corps at Coxheath camp before you were born." This was of course unanswerable, and there are no doubt younger men than the old Coxheath Adjutant who have imbibed ideas of discipline, not less absurd or less difficult to eradicate.

Yet, unsupported by interest, unpuffed by certain management or good fortune, the most anxious, the most humane, the most talented commanding officer had much to contend with, and was frequently obliged in prudence to confine the best intentions to his own breast. In almost every regiment, there were (and possibly still are) persons ready to criticise every change of system, and to condemn every innovation as prejudicial to established customs; therefore, any attempt to ameliorate the condition of the men, if not approached with extreme caution and address, was frequently looked upon with jealousy, as affecting the privileges of intermediate ranks, although the object might, in reality, have been to afford all the authorities a wider field for their exertions in the same cause. I remember, at the conclusion of the late American war, the introduction of a sergeant's mess was much opposed under many pretences; amongst others, it was said that it placed them too much on an equality with commissioned officers, and that we should soon have to lament their conceit and extravagance. I had, however, the pleasure to hear the most decided acknowledgments of its unquestionable advantages in a very few months, and I can with truth aver the same of many other changes that improved the condition and increased the comforts and respectability of the lower ranks; for every thing that enhanced the value of promotion augmented the power to encourage and reward the deserving. That regiment was never yet commanded well, in which promotion was not highly estimated by the privates; therefore (except in atrocious cases), the reduction even of a lance-corporal is not to be treated as a slight affair, but as a very serious and painful measure; one that requires not the aggravation of further punishment. I always found that, acting on this principle, the party redoubled his exertions to regain what he had lost; but a non-commissioned officer, who had likewise suffered corporeal infliction, invariably desponded, or gave himself up to the most dissolute courses; added to which, the reluctance of the privates to become non-commissioned officers under the severer system, sufficiently proved how little value they attached to a position that increased their responsibility, without any adequate prospect of protection, or even exemption from the lowest degradation.

A Commanding Officer to have declared formerly the humane sentiments of the present day, on the subject of corporeal punishment, would have subjected him to a suspicion that he was actuated by a desire of popularity, however sincere his motives, however strong his conviction, of their sound expedience! and certain it is that the introduction of adequate substitutes required encouragement from the highest quarters; a Court-martial was then considered almost the right of the complaining party on any grave occasion, the expectation of support was implied in every charge advanced by an officer against those under him, and to refuse a Court-martial was tantamount to a refusal of the support required, and of course very unusual. With such contracted notions on the management of a large body of human beings, it could not have been a very easy matter to establish a milder and more rational system, and to persuade officers that the willingness, obedience, and respect of the soldier depended quite as much on the opinion he entertained of his Commanders, as on the harsh and revolting system of compulsion: yet I never saw a company or a corps that was commanded with impartial justice and individual encouragement, that was not content and happy, and proud of its officers; but before I enter on the course adopted of later years, allow me to revert to an earlier period, and give you my first impressions on the discipline of the army at the close of the last and commencement of the present century: this will enable you to judge of the immense and rapid improvements that humanity and good sense have since accomplished.

I joined my regiment, though a Lieutenant, a mere boy, and soon observed with the most acute pain that the tortures of a poor soldier were by no means confined to the infliction in question; particularly if he had the misfortune to offend the petty tyrant of minor authority. Never can I forget my astonishment and disgust at the incessant and sometimes ferocious application of the rattan, at parade or exercise, but especially the Adjutant's drills: he or the Sergeant-Major operated in front, while others of the drill department were not less actively employed in the rear. Woe to the unhappy limb whose muscular projection attracted the critic eye of these disciplinarians! the rattan instantly resounded on the whincing calf—the slightest outward movement was equally fatal—but deep and bitter were their inward emotions: their only support, in community of suffering: their only indemnity, in their united execration of their tormentors.

The first military flogging I attended was by no means an agreeable novelty—I did not wait to see it out. A few months however hardened me; yet I met with a severe trial in the misfortune of my own servant. He was a kind-hearted and brave old soldier, but having served long in the West Indies, where there were no temperance societies, he had taken a great fancy to rum; he had notwithstanding been selected by my excellent Commanding Officer to attend me, and his solicitude for my interest justified the choice; it was the paternal feeling an old soldier so frequently indulges for a young one. The poor fellow had served beyond the period that entitled him to his discharge; he had begun to consider himself a privileged veteran, and unhappily, when on guard, made a little too free with his favourite liquor. He was confined, tried, and (no doubt justly) sentenced, though the duty of a skeleton corps in a country town was little more than nominal: but in vain did I plead for him—all my arguments were fruitless; the only favour I could obtain was permission to be absent from his punishment. Being old in constitution, he could only take two hundred lashes (two-fifths of his sentence); they did not then kill him; they only destroyed his peace for the rest of his short and degraded existence; he sunk rapidly under the wretched state of his mind, and then received the discharge for which I had earnestly entreated, to avert the melancholy catastrophe. Poor fellow! he never held up his head again.—(To be continued.)

It is much to be regretted that the pecuniary difficulties of literary men are often unknown till after their deaths. Such appears to have been the case with the late Mr. Haynes Bayly, towards whose relief hundreds would have hastened had they known of his necessities. Might there not be an adjunct or sub-committee of the Literary Fund, to whom such delicate matters could be made known, and by them published, as propriety or necessity might dictate?

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences. five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Districhsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 16s. each.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 7l. 7s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 24s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs; old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

DR. HANCOCK'S THERMAL, SULPHUREOUS, HOT MINERAL WATER, and MEDICATED VAPOUR BATHS, 49, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-sq. The Medical Faculty, the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, are respectfully informed, that these auxiliaries for the cure of Chronic, Inflammatory, and Cutaneous Disorders, are NOW OPEN, under the approbation of the most distinguished Physicians in the Metropolis. The Artificial Thermal Waters are composed of the same ingredients as the natural Springs of Bareges, Vichy, Aix-la-Chapelle, the Sulphureous Springs of Virginia, and the Island of Nevis, being in all respects equal to these, and possessing, moreover, the advantage of increased strength, and any additions to suit particular cases. They are available for the cure of a great variety of disorders, as gout and rheumatism, dropsy, scrofula, foul scorbutic ulcers, eruptions of the skin, coughs, and diseases of the chest, lungs, and nervous system. CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove — "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear sir, yours truly, T. LAPTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 65, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

Office, No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of employing capital in the purchase and re-sale of lands in New Zealand, and the promotion of emigration to that country.

A description of these Islands, as a field for British colonisation, has been rendered unnecessary by the labours of the "New Zealand Association" of 1837, who collected and disseminated very ample information on the subject. The sole aim of that Society was to induce the Legislature to apply to New Zealand the peculiar system of colonisation which has proved so eminently successful in South Australia, and to make provision for guarding the native inhabitants from the evils to which they have hitherto been exposed by their intercourse with Europeans of every class. Her Majesty's Government, however, objected to all legislation for these ends, except on one condition, to which the Society could not assent. The proposed condition was, that the Society, which had excluded from its objects all speculation for private gain, should become a joint-stock company, and engage in undertakings with a view to profit. This condition was declined, as being at variance with the declared character of that Society; and the result has been the formation of the present Company, in a form consistent with the condition thus required by Her Majesty's Government.

The purchase and improvement of waste lands in New Zealand has been already carried on to a great extent, and with much advantage by Missionaries and others, who have settled in the country, as well as by persons residing in the adjacent Australian Colonies, and such an operation upon an enlarged scale is the proposed object of the New Zealand Land Company.

The attention and business of the Company will be confined to the purchase of tracts of land,—the promotion of emigration to those tracts directly from the United Kingdom,—the laying out of settlements and towns in the most favourable situations,—and the gradual re-sale of such lands, according to the value bestowed upon them by emigration and settlement. It is also proposed that, to facilitate the transmission of capital between England and New Zealand, the Company shall act as agents, for that purpose only.

Such an undertaking affords peculiar advantages to the employers of a large combined capital, and is further suitable to a Company, inasmuch as it can neither impede individual enterprise, nor is liable to the competition of individuals, and is capable of being managed at little expense for agency, and upon a system of fixed routine.

Very extensive tracts of most fertile land in situations highly favourable, both for agricultural and commercial settlements, have been already purchased and secured for the purposes of this Company. And an expedition has also been fitted out and despatched for surveying the coasts of New Zealand, making purchases of lands in the most eligible spots, and preparing for the arrival of a large body of settlers, whom it is proposed to establish on the Company's lands during the present year.

These important purchases, and the fitting out of the preliminary expedition, (including the purchase and equipment of a fine vessel of 400 tons,) have been effected, at a considerable outlay, by parties to whom 600 paid-up shares have consequently been assigned for a transfer of their interests.

Upon the remaining 3400 shares, a call of 10l. per share, (in addition to the deposit,) will be made at the discretion of the Directors, with not less than one month's notice; and all further calls will be made at intervals of not less than three months between each call, and of which one month's notice will be given; and no call, at any one time, will exceed 10l. per share.

The Directors are to have the entire management and control of the funds, formation, proceedings, and affairs of the Company, and are empowered to enter into any arrangements whatever which they may consider conducive to the interest of this undertaking—to prepare a Deed of Settlement for the management of the Company, and to take any steps that may be thought proper relative to an Act of Parliament or a charter in aid of their plans, application for which will be made with the least possible delay,—and generally to adopt such measures and proceedings with reference to the grants, and disposal of shares, or otherwise, as they shall consider expedient.

The shares, in the first instance, will be issued in scrip receipts, upon which will be indorsed the principal laws and regulations by which the Company is to be governed, until a Deed of Settlement shall have been entered into, or an Act of Parliament have been obtained.

Further information on every point connected with the Company may be obtained from the Secretary, at the Office, where applications for shares may be made in the following form.

2d Drags.—Captain Adams' troop has marched into Cork barracks, but hd.-qrs. and remainder of the regt. will continue at Ballincollig. Serjeant Wallace was drowned May 1st, at Ballincollig powder-mills. He went out fishing with a party, and the net having become entangled at the bottom of the river, he leaped in and dived for the purpose of freeing it; he got fastened in the meshes, and was unable to rise. Every exertion was made to extricate him, but in vain. His body was shortly after recovered, and buried May 3d in Ballincollig churchyard, with military honours. INFANTRY.

Grenadier Gds., 2d Batt.—Lieut. Hon. A. Gordon is appointed extra Aid-de-Camp to Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Macdonell, at Quebec. Two soldiers have been sentenced to four months' imprisonment, for attacking a person named Hill, a stationer, in Hyde-park on Thursday.

Coldstream Guards, 1st. Batt.—On Monday evening, shortly after the roll-call at 10 o'clock, it was reported to the Corporal of the picket at the Wellington Barracks, St. James's Park, that private Christopher Donnellan was behaving in the most outrageous manner in the barrack-room. Corporal Jeffrey, the non-commissioned officer upon duty, immediately sent a file of men to convey him to the guard-room. Upon being informed of this, he directly proceeded to load his musket, which he was enabled to do before the guard came in. Upon their entrance, it being completely dark, the lights in the barracks being extinguished at roll-call, he was seated on his bed with the loaded musket levelled at the door, and the moment the first man entered he called out, "You ——, what do you want here?" Thinking it was Corporal Jeffrey, he discharged the piece. The bullet entered the left shoulder, and came out at the right, of Henry Turner, a private of the reg., with whom the man had always been upon terms of friendship. The shot grazed the arm of another soldier, and lodged in the door of the barrack-room. Turner fell into the arms of his comrades, and the Surgeon-Major of the regt. was sent for. Donnellan was secured, and, after being heavily ironed, taken to the guard-house, in order to await the report of the Surgeon. He will then be given over to the civil power. Upon being taken to the guard-room he made use of most bitter expressions towards Corporal Jeffrey, saying, that he was only sorry that he had not shot him; he was a bad hearted fellow, and there were two or three non-commissioned officers of the regt. that he would shoot if he had the power. The prisoner has been in the regt. for nearly nine years, during which time he has borne a notoriously bad character. He has suffered punishment to the greatest extent to which it could be carried, but it had not the slightest effect upon him, and latterly Corporal Jeffrey had reported him as being drunk and absent without leave. It is not supposed that he intended to fire upon Turner, he having himself declared that the shot was intended for Jeffrey. Turner is doing well, but cannot yet be considered out of danger.

2d—A letter from India, speaking of the fate of Lieut. Sparke, Lieut. Nixon, and Dr. Hibbert (noticed in N. & M. Gazette of 27th ult.), goes on to say:—

"We all thought they had been made prisoners; however, in a few days Sir J. Keane sent a troop of 4th Dragoons to penetrate the jungle in search of the missing officers, which they did with some difficulty, and found the bodies, or rather skeletons, of our three brave fellows, close together, the gun-locks and barrels only remaining, the stocks having been burnt to charcoal. I never saw anything so fearful as the remains presented; we could only distinguish them by the rings on their fingers. Nixon was better recognised by his size, being the lowest officer in the regiment. The remains of the three were interred by us in one grave, with military honours. Sparke I lament greatly, he was an honest, good, pleasant fellow."

7th—1 comp., 40 r. and f., from Kilkenny to Killemaule, 10th and 11th May.

10th—The regt. embarked at Dublin on the evening of the 13th inst. on board the Jupiter and Nottingham st.-v., for Liverpool, where they landed on Tuesday afternoon. Capt. Shinkwin is about to retire on half-pay, and to be succeeded in his comp. by Lieut. Staunton. Capt. Shinkwin has been 27 years, and Lieut. Staunton 13 years, in the service.

12th Depot—Embarked at Cork on 7th inst. on board the Victory steamer, for Aberystwith.

Yeomanry.—On Thursday, the 9th inst., the South Nottinghamshire Yeomanry, after the usual training under their Commander, Col. Moore, were reviewed by Sir Charles O'Donnell, the Brigade-Major of the Northern District, who was accompanied by the late Lord-Lieutenant, the Duke of Newcastle. Their various evolutions were performed with great precision, and drew forth the highest commendations. The movements having been gone through, the corps formed into close column, when Sir Charles O'Donnell addressed them, and expressed his highest satisfaction and gratification, both with their general appearance, and with the extreme steadiness and precision with which they went through their movements and evolutions. "These combined," said Sir Charles, "reflected the highest credit imaginable on them—matters to which he could not but bear testimony. The zeal and ability of their Commanding Officer, Col. Moore, was most exemplary. In these times, when attempts were being made by infatuated and misguided men to disturb the peace and tranquility of the country by their endeavouring to usurp a power which they had no right to possess; in these times, he said, he recommended them to be careful of their arms—to keep them in order—and at all times to have them ready in case they should be called out. These were times when such precaution was absolutely necessary, for it was possible they might be called upon to exercise the Military skill of which they had become possessed, in defence of themselves, their homes, and, indeed, their country. We shall then see," concluded the gallant Colonel, "what the courage of the Chartists will be able to effect when opposed to the stout hearts, willing hands, and trusty arms, of the loyal and patriotic English Yeomen." Sir Charles and the noble Duke were heartily and loudly cheered on leaving the ground, and at half-past six they rejoined the officers of the regiment at the Exchange in the town of Nottingham, where the mess was provided, Colonel Moore being in the chair, having on his right the Duke of Newcastle, Major Edge, T. Nixon, Esqs. &c. On his left, Sir Charles O'Donnell, J. Wells, Esq., (the Mayor), Capt. Grant, (9th Lancers), Capt. Bolton, (5th Drag. Gds.), Lieut. Grant (Rocket Brigade), &c.

After the usual toasts, followed by the health of the Duke of Wellington, which was drank with reiterated applause, the Chairman proposed the health of the noble Duke who had inspected the regiment that day, and whom he regretted that he no longer could designate as the chief magistrate of the county. He was sure, however, that the toast would not therefore be answered with less sincerity, and he hoped to hear that sincerity evinced by three time three. A tremendous volley of cheers succeeded this announcement, which were yet augmented when his Grace rose to return thanks. After some well-merited eulogies of the reg., and of Col. Moore, the noble Duke went on to express his confident hope that, in times like these, there would not be found an officer or a man in the corps who would swerve from his duty when called upon to exercise it. Nothing should induce any of them to be disgusted, or to resign their situations. Loyalty to their Queen, fidelity to their country, a determination to uphold its laws, and to repel any attack made upon its institutions, associated as they were for all these purposes, and for attacking our foreign foes, there ought not to be a man amongst them but would suffer anything rather than resign his situation before he saw his country safe. (Continued cheering.) He hoped most fervently that they might never have to come in contact with the disaffected, who were now unfortunately becoming too prevalent; but if the time unfortunately should come when that should be the case, he hoped their duty would be done in such a way as would insure the safety and the preservation of the peace of this county. His Grace concluded by proposing the health of "Colonel Moore and the South Nottinghamshire Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry." (Three times three.) After "The health of the Brigade-Major," and some other appropriate toasts, the party separated.

The annual grand dinner of the officers of Yeomanry Cavalry, at Willis's rooms, takes place on Saturday next.

The Hereditary Grand Duke of Russia's Visit to Woolwich.—Shortly before 11 on Saturday the Grand Duke, accompanied by Prince William Henry of the Netherlands, Lord Torrington, and General Count Orloff, left Mivart's Hotel in one of the royal carriages, with two outriders, to visit Her Majesty's Arsenal, at Woolwich. Prince Bariatinsky, General Kavaline, Colonel Jouskevitch, Counseller Jonkofsky, Prince Dolgorouky, M. de Tolstoy, M. de Patkul, Baron de Lieven, and M. d'Alderberg, Attaché to the Grand Duke, and Capt. Arriens, R.N., A.D.C. to Prince William Henry of the Netherlands, followed in three carriages. An escort of the Royal Horse Artillery met His Imperial Highness at Blackheath, and conducted him by the road across the Common to the Royal Arsenal. On the cortege reaching the gate at the south-west entrance to the Barrack Grounds, the royal standard was hoisted at the Mortar Battery, and a royal salute fired by a party under the command of Capt. Anderson. The party reached the Royal Arsenal at a few minutes to 12, where His Imperial Highness was received by the Master-General, Sir H. Vivian; the Commandant of the Garrison, Lord Bloomfield; Sir A. Dickson, D.A.G., and the heads of the several departments, who conducted him through the several workshops and stores, and afterwards to the Practice Ground in Plumstead Marshes, where gun and rocket practice was displayed. A guard of honour, under the command of Brev. Major Faddy, with the band of the regiment, received His Highness on entering the Arsenal, with the usual salute. After the practice in the Marshes, the party proceeded to the Mortar Battery, near the Barracks, where mortar and howitzer practice was carried on, viz.—One round from two 10-inch and two 8-inch howitzers, and one round from the mortars, and one salvo from the mortars; after which the party proceeded to the Mess-room, where a sumptuous déjeuner à la fourchette was laid out by direction of Sir H. Vivian, for the entertainment of the princes and their party. During the time occupied in this part of the morning's proceedings, the Band of the Artillery, stationed in front of the room, performed selections from I Puritani, Lucia di Lammermoor, &c.

After the déjeuner, the princes and cortege having mounted their horses, were conducted to the Repository and Rotunda, and inspected a party at the exercise of heavy ordnance, but did not continue there long; and thence proceeded to the Common, where the Royal Horse Artillery, three troops, with six guns, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Whinyates, and three field batteries, with 12 guns, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Cleaveland, were drawn up in review order, and on the princes appearing in front, received them with a general salute, being commanded by the Commandant Lord Bloomfield. The princes, attended by the Master-General, inspected the line, which then broke into column, and marched past, the Horse Artillery by troops, the field batteries by batteries at quarter intervals, both at a walk and trot. After the batteries had trotted past, the Horse Artillery passed again at a gallop, and took up their position in rear of the original alignement, where they remained while the batteries manœuvred; which, after trotting past and gaining the front of the princes, wheeled to the left into line at full intervals—advanced and came into action to the front—limbered up to the rear—retired, and came into action to the rear—limbered up to advance from the right in close column of batteries—advanced—wheeled up to the left at quarter intervals, and formed line for action right—limbered up to the front—wheeled by batteries to the right at quarter intervals—the head of the column wheeled to the right, and the whole formed line for action to the right; limbered up to front—wheeled by batteries to the left at quarter intervals, and formed line on the leading battery for action, rear—limbered up to the front—advanced in open order, and gave the general salute. The batteries then marched to the Park, and the Royal Horse Artillery advanced, and came into action to the front—limbered up to the front, and changed front on the left gun quarter circle—the right thrown back—action—limbered up to the front, and advanced in echelon of subdivisions from the right—came into action to the left—changed the fire to the right—limbered up—formed line on No. 2 guns—changed front to the rear on the centre—advanced, and came into action to the rear—limbered up to the front, advanced, and formed line for action to the left flank en gun No. 6—limbered up to the front, advanced, dismounted the guns and carriages, came into action, limbered up, and saluted.

The princes and suite then left the ground in the carriages, escorted by a party of the Horse Artillery, for Greenwich, under royal salutes from the Royal Horse Artillery, and the party at the Mortar Battery. The Master-General was saluted on his arrival and departure by the party at the Mortar Battery.

After Garrison Order, May 11.—Lieutenant-General Lord Bloomfield has it in command from the Master-General to express his free and entire approbation of every branch, military and civil, of the Royal Artillery; and it is peculiarly gratifying to him to have received from the illustrious visitors, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Russia, and Prince William Henry of the Netherlands, the expressions of their high admiration of every department that came under their notice.

The Commandant is further charged to convey their thanks to the Master-General and the several chiefs, who directed the different services of the day, as well as to other officers employed. Lord Bloomfield cannot close these gratifying Orders, without requesting the garrison to accept his thanks for the zeal, attention, and his commendation of the efficient state of every branch of the regiment, and begs Colonel Brown will accept his acknowledgment for the assistance afforded by the Rifle brigade in keeping the ground.

THE ISLE OF THE WEST.

Dedicated to the Irish Absentees, by Capt. J. Duncan King, Unatt.

Return! O return, to the Isle of the West,
To that island so cherished of yore;
Of hearts, you will find there the bravest, the best,
And of mirth and good-humour a store.

The breeze on her shores is still passingly mild,
Though moistened too often with tears;
For of sorrow, alas! she has long been the child,

But the sunbeams of hope glid her broad yellow sands,
Now the dark clouds of sorrow have past,
For her fetters are changed into flowery bands,
With the hope they for ever may last!

Your welcome will shine in each bright beaming eye,
Undimmed by the traces of sorrow;
While the sons of Green Erin with each other vie,
To repeat their fond wish on the morrow!

From a Correspondent—Being in the habit of transacting business daily at the docks and quays, I have been compelled to observe the extraordinary quantity of Rowland's Macassar Oil and Row and's Kalydor now exported. I perceive hundreds of cases directed to all parts of the habitable world: even frozen Lapland and desert Tartary enjoy these essentials of the toilette. I think it but right, Mr. Editor, that the British public should be made acquainted with the estimation in which the above valuable articles are held abroad. A greater service cannot be done to our fair countrywomen.

Calcutta, Jan. 22d, and Cape, March 16th, by the Earl of Hardwicke, Henning, arrived at Portsmouth. Cape of Good Hope, March 4th, by the Emma, Chapman, arrived at Cowes.

Portsmouth, May 17.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Revenge was brought down alongside the Dockyard on Saturday, and has since been masted; her Captain, Commander, and some other officers, have joined and opened a rendezvous, and expect to get a few men shortly. The detachment of Marines intended for the Revenge, commanded by Capt. Calamy, is to leave Woolwich this day, and will be here in the course of next week. Benbow was moved out of the basin on Tuesday to make room for the Queen, and she is now fitting alongside the hulk in harbour; she is now only about seventy short of complement, having been very successful. Queen was launched in most beautiful style on Wednesday; no accident occurred, except to a steamer called the Transit, whose Master anchored her in a very improper position; not less than 20,000 people were collected to view the launch; she has since been hauled in the basin, and is there secured until the repairs of the Britannia are completed, which will be by the next spring-tides, when the Queen will be put in that dock to be coppered and fitted for ordinary. Hydra has gone to Spithead to wait the arrival of the Hastings. Some of the suite of Her Majesty the Queen Dowager are in the town, and, by letters they have received this morning from Lisbon, it is stated that Her Majesty was to sail from thence on the 8th inst., if the wind was fair: in that case we may expect to see her hourly. The Hydra and Lightning are to go out the moment their steam is up. Lily is at Spithead. A Court-Martial assembled on board the Victory on Monday, and continued until last night, for the trial of her First Lieutenant, Richard Fitzgerald King, upon ten charges advanced by Commander Reeve; but it appears the Commander got "little by his motion," as ONLY eight of them were not proved (one of those being deemed frivolous), and for the two others he, the Lieutenant, was admonished to be more circumspect in future. The officers (Rear-Adm. Bouverie being President) are now occupied on another Court-Martial, applied for by the same Commander Reeve, on the Surgeon, Mr. C. H. Fuller, upon three charges of alleged contempt, &c. It is doubtful if it will be over to-day or not; if this Court-Martial should terminate like the other, the attention of the Admiralty will probably be called to the subject, and lead to some inquiry as to whether it was an advisable step to send this sloop from the coast of Africa upon such an errand, it being the second time she has been moved from her station on similar grounds. Childers is fitting in the basin, but is to go out next week. Clio got her party of Marines on Tuesday, and will get to work in a few days. No one is yet appointed to the Blonde. Barrosa transport called in at Spithead yesterday from Plymouth, to put some convicts on board the prison-ship, and afterwards proceeded to Woolwich with invalids and stores. Ships in Port—Hydra and Lily at Spithead. In Harbour—Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Benbow, Excellent, Royal George yt., Childers, Clio, Lightning, and Messenger steamers, and Cracker cutter and Echo st.-v.; the former is from Jersey to get stores, and the other from Antigua this day, sent to England in consequence of requiring very extensive repair.

Plymouth, May 17.—(From our own Correspondent.) 10th—Arrived Curlew, 10, Lt.-Com. G. Rose, from Portsmouth, on her way to the coast of Africa. Racehorse, 18, Com. E. A. J. Harris, was towed out of the harbour by the Carron st.-v.: was paid wages on 13th, and sailed for Quebec on following day; she has taken out supernumeraries for the men-of-war on that station. In a heavy squall, this day, the Powerful, 84, Capt. C. Napier, lying at anchor in the Sound, parted her cables, and drove some distance, but a lighter being immediately sent off with anchors and cables, she was soon moored again. 11th—Arrived Prospero, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Wm. Hoseason, from Woolwich, and towed the Hecate, st.-v., from the Harbour into the Sound; both vessels proceeded for the Clyde the next day, where the latter is to have machinery fitted. The Prospero will return to Milford, after seeing the Hecate to the place of her destination. Vulcan, revenue-steamer, Lieut.-Com. Wm. Crispin, arrived from the eastward, and started the following day for Portsmouth. 12th—Arrived Firefly, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Joseph Pearse, from Malta, and the lady and family of Capt. Hyde Parker, of the Rodney, came passengers in her. Firefly sailed for Woolwich on 15th. Arrived Camel, lighter, from Portsmouth, with a party of the 29th reg., who, having been on duty at Pendennis Castle, they were relieved by a detachment of the 1st Royals from this garrison. 14th—Arrived Goodwill, lighter, from Sheerness, with stores for the Dock-yard. 16th—Sailed Powerful, 84, Capt. C. Napier, for Cork, to complete her crew; she proceeds from thence to Gibraltar and Malta. Messrs. Darley and Bond, shipwrights, have been promoted to Inspectors; the former goes to Pembroke, and the latter remains in this Dock-yard. Mr. Drake, shipwright, is appointed Draughtsman in Woolwich Dock-yard. Cornwallis, 74, Capt. C. Grant, is daily expected at this port, and is to be paid off, but none of her fittings are to be removed; from this circumstance it is conjectured that she will be re-commissioned as soon as her defects are made good. Malabar, 74, has had her defects made good, and will be taken out of dock the next spring-tides. This ship, on her return from America, last December, was maliciously reported in several of the Journals to be entirely rotten, and not a sound timber in her. What will the reporters of such a falsehood say now that she is ordered to be refitted as a demonstrative ship? We are informed, from good authority, that a London Company is about to be enrolled by an act of Parliament, for the purpose of constructing wet docks for the East and West India trade, at Mill Bay, situate between Plymouth and Devonport. Two gentlemen of Plymouth, of the highest respectability, have given in reports, which have been approved of, and an architect from London has surveyed the place, in order to lay the plan before the committee, which is already formed. It is proposed to deepen the bay, so that vessels of any burden will be able to unload, and will be sheltered by a breakwater to be erected outside the entrance. This, in conjunction with the Union Docks, glass works, and sugar factory, now building at Cox Side, will sufficiently prove that capitalists are looking towards this neighbourhood, as a place of importance. In Harbour: Impregnable, Belleisle, San Josef, Druid, Carron, st. v. In the Sound, Curlew.

Milford Haven, May 15th.—(From our Correspondent.)—The Prospero steam-packet, Lieut. Hoseason, arrived at this port, on Monday, from Plymouth, having in tow the Hecate for Glasgow, where she is to be supplied with machinery. The Hecate has stores on board for the dock-yard. As soon as these are discharged, the two vessels will proceed on their voyage. The Prospero will then return to Plymouth with the officers and men employed in navigating the Hecate, and thence to this port to resume her duties on the station. She will then have been absent nearly seven months. Surely her expense of coals in these voyages, much of which has been supplied from Hobbs Point, ought not to be charged to the outlay of the Milford station. In her first voyage, she had to tow the Tortoise coal depot, and now has charge of the Hecate—two specific services not at all connected with the mail duties. This should be regarded when the expenditure of the station is made up. The Monkey, too, had her supply of coal and other stores from the Milford station while employed surveying last summer. Commander Higgs arrived at Pembroke on Saturday, and superseded Commander Corbyn, of the Royal Sovereign yacht, for service of packets. Capt. Palliser, R.M., has been superseded at the Pembroke depot by Capt. Childs.

Deptford, May 16th.—Sailed Recovery, emigrant-ship, for Australia. Arrived and fitting the John Lyne, for Quebec, freight and troops. Remain fitting, Stakesby and Alonzo, transports, Adm. Moorsom for Jamaica, Neptune for Australia, Marquis of Huntley for Quebec. A Dutch steamer, in attendance on the Russian Prince, remains off Deptford Dock-yard. The Stakesby, Lt. Lugg, R.N., Agent, is discharged from the service as a transport, and will, when docked, take troops and freight to Quebec.

Mr. James, Master, R.N., has been appointed by Lord Normanby Government Assistant Emigration Agent at Liverpool, in lieu of Mr. Jones, R.N., to be Assistant Marine Surveyor to the Port.

The Speedy, cutter, Lieut. Wright, has returned to refit at Sheerness: she has been protecting the Scotch fisheries all last winter.

The Howe, 120, will shortly resume her station as flag-ship, at Sheerness, having been docked and refloated.

Capt. Meuds, and First Lieutenants Land and Elliot disembarked with the detachment of Rl. Marines, on Tuesday se'nnight, from H.M.S. Royal Adelaide, having completed three years' servitude.

The Lily, Com. Reeve, as notified in our last, arrived at Portsmouth on the 5th, from the Cape of Good Hope and Sierra Leone, with despatches from R.-Adm. the Hon. G. Elliot. She left Ascension on 2nd, and Sierra Leone on 23d March, and the Gambia on 2d April. The squadron was distributed as follows when the Lily left.—Forester, cruising off Cape Mount; Brisk, between Sierra Leone and the Gambia—a dreadful mortality has prevailed on board this vessel, she having lost all her officers, except the Commander, and sixteen of the crew, from fever; Fair Rosamond, cruising in the Bights of Benin, with the Pylades and the Scout; Termagant was off Cape St. Paul; Dolphin on her way to Logas; Bonetta and Lynx were about 80 miles from Prince's Island, for which place Harlequin had also left Sierra Leone; Saracen was expected at Sierra Leone daily. The following came home invalided:—Lieuts. J. Price and O. H. Dyke, Pylades; Mr. M. Carry, Assist.-Surg., Fair Rosamond; Mr. M. F. Bannerman, Clerk-in-charge, Termagant; and Mr. W. Thorne, Gunner, Lynx.

Portuguese Navy.—The cost of the Navy for the ensuing economical year will be 250,000*l.*, or thereabouts—a sum which may be said to be thrown away, and might as well be saved altogether, as no one has yet been able to find out for what useful purpose the naval forces of Portugal have ever been employed. In the days of Algerine piracy, instead of sending out their ships of war to protect their merchant vessels, they used to purchase a precarious safety for them, by paying tribute to the different Barbary powers, and it is not more than 14 or 15 years ago that a Buenos Ayres privateer, commanded by an Englishman of the name of Mason, used to come up every six weeks or so, and pick up the Portuguese trading vessels at the very mouth of the Tagus, at a time when there were two or three frigates, and some half-dozen sloops and brigs of war lying in the harbour. To what use the Navy is put at present it would puzzle anybody, but those in the secret, to tell; as there is not a single cruiser along the whole coast, nor on any of the tracks frequented by Portuguese merchant vessels. A ship has not been launched for 16 years, and yet there are between 800 and 900 workmen every day at the marine arsenal, whose wages, according to the estimates, amount to 28,000*l.* annually, and the cost of the materials to 23,000*l.* more—altogether 51,000*l.* Now as the keel of a 74-gun ship was laid down in 1816, and the vessel after 23 years is only half-built, she may be computed to have already stood in 23 times 51,000*l.*, or, in round numbers, one million sterling.

A Commander's out-pension of Greenwich Hospital is vacant by the recent sudden death of Commander J. Galloway, R.N., 1806.

Thursday, the 23d inst., the Queen's birth-day will be a festival or gala day at Greenwich Hospital; the usual interesting ceremony and parading of the officers, pensioners, and school-boys, will take place, and afterwards the usual supply of ale, dinners, &c.

The Grand Duke of Russia, the Prince of the Netherlands, and suite, visited Greenwich Hospital on Saturday afternoon. They were received by the Governor and officers in full uniform; the pensioners were also in the square. After inspecting those brave men in their best dress, they viewed the Painted Hall, Chapel, Schools, Dining-halls, &c., &c., and having expressed their admiration, they proceeded for London.

Since the ships last commissioned have embarked their Marines, we have received several letters from three of the divisions, complaining of the severe duty which now falls on those left in barracks; and urging that, if it is intended to employ the whole of the Naval force voted in future, it will be necessary to increase the officers particularly. We must request our correspondents to favour us more in detail with the state of the case, their guards, &c., as compared with former periods, and we will then put the matter in a shape to attract the attention of the authorities.

A paragraph has been going the round of the papers, complaining that the Bishop of Exeter's son is not promoted on account of the political opposition of his father to Government. Thus it is—one day we have complaints that patronage is applied to conciliate political opponents—and, anon, that it is bestowed on partisans only. We believe that political bias has very little to do with the matter, and although there are many Mates who have served as long or longer than Mr. Plunket, we shall have great pleasure in announcing his promotion, as we have heard he is an active talented young officer.

Matthew O'Brien, Esq., has been appointed First Instructor at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth.

Herald, 28, Capt. J. Nias (1835), arrived at Madras from Ceylon, 18th Feb.

Nautilus, 10, Lieut.-Com. Beaufoy (1821), arrived at Cape of Good Hope from Mauritius, 4th March.

Lisbon, May 6.—The Queen Dowager arrived here on Tuesday last, on board the Hastings, 74, Capt. Loch. At about noon a royal salute from the batteries at the entrance of the Tagus gave the first announcement of Her Majesty's approach. Shortly afterwards the Hastings became visible from the city, and the moment she had crossed the bar, the British squadron, consisting of the Donegal, Ganges, and Implacable, two deckers, the Daphne corvette and Espoir brig, as well as the two French frigates and the Portuguese ships of war in commission, manned their yards and fired salutes. At 2 p.m., the Hastings, having the Royal Standard of England flying at the main, came to anchor off Belem Quay, immediately after which Her Majesty was waited upon by Rear-Adm. Sir J. Ommanney, Lord Howard de Walden, and the Queen of Portugal's Chamberlain, the last-named of whom went to announce a visit from his royal mistress, who, waiving all etiquette, went at once on board with her husband to welcome her illustrious guest. The Queen Dowager did not land till the next day, when Her Majesty experienced a most brilliant reception from the Queen of Portugal, and the citizens of Lisbon.

Malta, April 17.—Rhadamanthus st., Com. Wakefield, arrived here on Monday from Plymouth and Gibraltar. Talbot, 28, Capt. Codrington, sailed on 15th for Corfu. We mentioned in our last that the ships in port were taking in four months' provisions, and that it was rumoured they would shortly put to sea. We now learn that on setting up the lower rigging of the flag ship, the same was found so rotten as to be no longer serviceable, and, consequently, she has been stripped, and cannot therefore be well ready for sea before the end of the month. The disagreement between the Commander of Juscar and some of the Mates of that vessel has been brought to a satisfactory issue without coming before a Court-Martial. H.M.S. Dido is at present employed in protecting the population of Pavo against a threatened attack of the population of Parga, the consequence of a quarrel between the two. Previous to this, Dido had been in pursuit of 13 pirates, who had committed various robberies and murders among the inhabitants of Cephalonia. They were captured at Missolonghi, and sent to Athens for trial. Dido grounded upon a mud-bank while proceeding into Missolonghi during the night, but got off again without damage. In port—Princess Charlotte, Ceylon, Asia, Vanguard, Rodney, Belleisle, Talavera, Minden, Castor, Zebra, Juscar. Steamers—Confiance, Hermes, Meyaera, Acheron, and the French steamers Mentor and Dante.

Jamaica, March 23d.—Tartarus st., Lieut. Smith, sailed on 26th ult. for Cape Hayti; Nimrod, 18, on 28th, for Havannah; Comus, on 3d March, and Wanderer, on 12th, on a cruise; Dee st.-frigate sailed on 14th, for St. Thomas's; and Sappho, 18, on the same day, on a cruise. Wanderer arrived on 28th ult., three days from Bermuda. The transport bark, Barossa, Lieut. Scrymgoour, arrived on 1st inst., with detachments of 50th, 64th, 68th, and Rl. Artill.; and the transport bark Horatio, on 4th, with troops—31 days from Cork. Charybdis arrived on 12th—four days from Carthagena; and Skipjack, on 19th, from a cruise; Hercules, 74, arrived on 18th, from Plymouth, last from Barbadoes. Serpent arrived on 10th, from Vera Cruz, last from Havannah, with 408,000 dollars on account of Government, and sailed on 14th, for Barbadoes, Hornet arrived on 14th, from Chagres, with 50,000 dollars, and returned on 19th. Cornwallis and Edinburgh were lying at the Havannah on 11th Feb.

From the Bermuda Royal Gazette, Feb. 19.—Arrived on Thursday last, H. M. st. Flamer, Lieut. Pothury, in five days from St. Thomas, with the remains of Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir Charles Paget on board. The Flamer received the body from the Tartarus, on board of which vessel he died, when on his way from Jamaica to these islands, on 29th ult. The Rev. E. Paget, and Lieut Brownlow Paget, R.N., came passengers in the Flamer. Yesterday the remains of Sir Charles were removed from the dockyard, Ireland Island, and deposited, with the customary forms and honours, in a vault in the Naval burial ground, beside the one wherein were laid the remains of that gallant officer, Admiral Colpoys. The whole was directed and arranged by Capt. Bushby, the senior naval officer of H. M. ships and vessels of war at this port. Official programme of the Procession:—Guard of Honour, Band of the 30th Regiment; Officiating Clergyman, (the Rev. J. K. Gouldney, chaplain, H. M. Naval Yard;) Clergy; his Orders (borne on a cushion by Lieut. Lawless, R.N.); the Body; (James Chimmo, Esq. R N, Capt Sir Wm. Burnaby, Bart., R.N., Col. Robinson, 30th Regt, Lieut. J. Pothury, R.N., Capt. Thos. Bushby, R.N., and Major Proctor, 30th Regt., Pall-bearers. The body was covered with a white ensign, and his distinguishing flag (the St. George's Cross) furled, with hat, gloves, and sword on the coffin. Chief Mourners—his Sons, the Rev. Edward Paget, Chaplain of Cornwallis, and Lieut. Brownlow Paget, R.N. Mourners.—Hon Robert Kennedy, Colonial Secretary, and Joseph Ballingall, Esq., Naval Storekeeper Household and Personal Surgeons, Officers of the Naval Yard, Private Friends; Seamen of Flamer, Marines of Wanderer, Seamen of Wanderer, Troops; the Governor, His Excellency Major-General Sir Stephen R. Chapman, C.B. and K C H. Minute guns commenced firing on the advance of the Procession towards the Burial-ground, by H.M.S. Wanderer, and Fort at Ireland Island. Immediately after the funeral service at the grave was ended, a salute of fifteen guns by the Wanderer, and fifteen guns by the Fort were fired—the Fort commencing when the Wanderer fired the second gun.

Oglander, Esq., Matilda, cutter, 44 tons; Lord Visc. Exmouth, Flower of Yarrow, schooner, 129 tons; Wm. S. Boyd, Esq., Young Queen, schooner, 90 tons; J. C. Ewart, Esq., Edith, cutter, 70 tons; Col. John Petre, Midge, cutter, 36 tons: A. Macdonald, Esq., Lord of the Isles, cutter, 42 tons; Lord H. Cholmondeley, Zephyr, cutter, 55 tons. Honorary members—Commander John Mac Donnell, R.N.; Capt. Sir John Hill, R.N.; Commander James Hamilton Ward, R.N.; Commander Frederick Hutton, R.N.; Commander George H. Halstead, R.N.; Commander Henry Bagot, R.N.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

SUGGESTIONS FOR INVALID OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Sympathy for the many hundreds of my brethren of the Navy, Army, and Company's service, who are enduring a perpetual state of suffering and despondency from complaints of stomach, bowels, liver, and digestive organs generally, contracted in the service by climate, hardships, or mode of living, and which, in most cases, have become aggravated, and all but incurable, by the constant use of powerful medicines, particularly that favourite remedy, though enemy to the constitution, the blue pill, or mercury,—induces me to trouble you with this short notice of the mineral waters of this place, and the facility with which all sufferers may get here, and reap immense and permanent benefit, at a very trifling expense; and I trust that, from humane motives, you will give it a place in the columns of your admirable and extensively-circulated Naval and Military Gazette. The mineral springs of Germany have been so well described by Dr. Granville, that I cannot do better than refer your readers to that interesting work for a correct account of the composition and qualities of these waters, which certainly are the safest in Germany, and infallible for the cure of all complaints of the digestive organs, stomach, liver, and everything thereunto pertaining. Congestions of every kind, as well as gout and rheumatism in all their forms, and above all for that long and fearful array of female complaints, of which I know nothing, and can not speak; but the frequent cures of which I have been ascertained to witness in the totally changed and improved appearance of the sufferers. Notwithstanding the wide circulation and popularity of Dr. Granville's work, as well as Mr. Lee's book of mineral springs, upon the continent generally, few persons, comparatively, are at all aware of their real merits, and very many who would give them a trial are deterred by the fear of the expense, or from speaking no other language but their own English; neither of these reasons should really prove an obstacle. The expense of the passage from London, by Rotterdam direct, to Mainz is extremely moderate; travelling by land to this place equally so; and living here very reasonable; though lodgings certainly, in the summer, are not so cheap as in other German towns which are not watering-places; so that any one who is living in London upon even 100*l.* a year might come here, spend the summer, and return without finding himself 10*l.* poorer than if he had remained all that time dragging his painful existence about the metropolis; and as for the language, when he gets to Rotterdam he is transferred to one of the Rhine steamers, the conductors of which all speak English, are particularly attentive, and will render a passenger every possible assistance: at most of the hotels on the Rhine English is quite familiar. Arrived at Mainz, the conductor will engage a place; the same evening in the public stage coach (eilwagen) to Frankfort, where it arrives about ten o'clock. At the White Swan, a very excellent hotel, the head waiter speaks English, and is extremely attentive, and will procure a commissioner, who also understands English, to visée passports, and take a place in the eilwagen to Wurzburg, where it arrives at seven in the morning, and at eight from the same coach-yard starts the carriage for Kissengen, arriving there at two in the afternoon; and once here, all difficulties (if any have occurred) cease. The suffering traveller has but to inquire for Dr. Welsch, the only physician who speaks English (as he does also French and Italian), from whom he is sure of receiving every assistance and attention he can expect, and under whose able and judicious auspices he will at once commence such a course of drinking and bathing as Dr. Welsch sees best adapted for his peculiar malady and constitution. From my own experience of Dr. Welsch's attention, as well as professional abilities, I cannot speak too gratefully, nor too highly of his talents, which are of the highest class, and combined with so close and penetrating observation, enable him to obtain a thorough insight of every patient's malady and constitution who puts himself under his care. Humane and conscientious as he is talented, he at once tells his patient not to take the waters if they really are not calculated for his peculiar case; and the waters are of far too powerful a nature for any one to take them prudently without the advice of a medical man on the spot. My own case was one of complicated and very obstinate derangement of the digestive organs, and everything, I believe, connected with them, of more than six years' standing. In the first instance, I had undergone a very severe medical treatment, and barely escaped with life; since then I had tried many of the most celebrated and talented physicians in England, and the Cheltenham waters, without any benefit; when last summer I consulted Dr. Granville, who sent me here. Dr. Welsch's attention was as close as I believe his treatment was judicious; he allowed of no medicine whatever; and though before I came here I had, for more than six years, been under the painful daily and almost hourly necessity of swallowing the most powerful and injuriously drastic medicines, since my arrival I have not taken any at all, and the natural functions perform themselves in a regular manner; appetite and sleep are restored; the mind rendered cheerful; and all the painful internal sensations all but entirely dissipated; and which I may reasonably expect the ensuing season will completely eradicate, and send me back to England in perfect health. The summer is just now commencing, and every preparation making for the reception of visitors, amongst whom I shall rejoice to see any of my brother officers receive the same benefit that I have myself.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—If it will not occupy too much space in your Gazette, you will confer additional obligation to your Naval and Military readers by inserting a concise prospectus, or outline, of the principles of the projected "Military and Naval Benefit Society," for the pensioning of the widows of professional subscribers, together with the contemplated establishment of schools for the education of their children. The philanthropic projectors merit the sincere thanks of their brother officers; and there cannot exist a doubt but that, as soon as the principles are made generally known, success will attend their most sanguine hopes; for every family man throughout the joint services will cheerfully submit to an occasional banyan-day, in order to save sufficient means out of his half-pay to enrol himself a subscriber. No man, Sir, can regret more than myself the adoption of any scheme which conveys a reflection or sarcasm on the vaunted liberality of the nation; but, alas! experience has taught us, that the sympathy of Britons is guided by fashion or based on ostentation, and not unfrequently on the cant of pharisaical pretensions; and that whilst female heroism becomes a lucrative display, the Coast Guard veteran may save dozens from shipwreck without exciting notice. Negro slavery, too, can open the purse-strings of the nation for the dispersion of millions; and the enlightenment of the Hindoo can extract thousands from the pockets of the pious or "Praise-God-Barebones" tribe;—yet the widows and orphans of those men who caused wealth, honour, and independence, to flow into the country, and made the name of Englishman respected among nations, are suffered to bear up for the parish workhouse, for want of sympathy, unpitied, and unaided. Nay, the little pittance to which they once were wont to look, for procuring daily bread, prior to the heartless stipulation of ten years' probation on the Commissioned List, which Naval husbands must now pass through, has been snatched from them, without a momentary dissent from the British community, or their representatives in Parliament. But the Navy has never been the fashion, though the merits of its members have always been admitted; simply because those merits have forced conviction of their reality; at the same time, the individuals, unless of the higher grades, were shunned as "sea-monsters, sea-brutes, or dead weight," the common epithets by which they are designated; and being too ingenuous to affect the cant of "passing excellence," the puritanical portion of their countrymen are ready enough to turn their backs upon them in these piping times of peace. Seeing this, let us join heart and hand to create an independent United Service Benevolent Fund of our own; and, if it be necessary, let us restore the old Catholic fast-day (now liberally expunged from the Purser's Victualling Book), Friday, as a family observance, for the benefit of appropriating that day's customary outlay to the said Fund. In the glorious cause of charity, British officers can play the martyr, and encounter privations, with as genuine a purpose as the depositors of gold rings upon the church-warden's plate when collecting for a charity, announced to be advocated on the previous Sunday. Let there be excluded from all interference in this Institution every member of the Legislature,—nay, should any individual fill a station as Director, &c., and afterwards hold office under the Crown, let him no longer have a voice in the direction;—otherwise the Institution will assuredly share the fate of the Woolwich, &c., Academies—the School Department (if established) more especially; or, at least, be subjected to the invidious distinctions already displayed at Camberwell. It is gratifying to see the Army and Navy coalescing together in amity; and I trust the only distinction discernible between them will ever be the colour of the cloth. AN OLD SAILOR.

In compliance with the wishes of our highly-esteemed friend and correspondent, we give the Rules and Regulations of the Institution:—

3d—That any member wishing to become a married subscriber, shall notify the same by letter to the Secretary, for the information of the Directors, within six months after the day of his marriage; and such notification shall be accompanied by a certificate of marriage, and also a certificate of his own and his wife's age; together with a sum of, if a Subaltern, 10 guineas—a Captain, 20 guineas—a Major, 30 guineas—a Lieut.-Colonel, 40 guineas—a full Colonel or General, 50 guineas.

(The same to apply to the corresponding rank in the Navy.)

4th—That all subscribers, not having attained the rank of Captain at 30 years old—of Major at 40—of Lieut.-Col. at 50, and full Colonel at 60,—be allowed to subscribe the same as if they had been promoted.

5th—That no officer now in commission, whether married or single, shall be eligible to become a member of this Society after the expiration of two years from this date, but by a vote of the majority of the subscribers at a general meeting, and then only by paying a fine of twenty guineas, with arrears of subscription from the date of this Institution; and, if married, the fines agreeably to resolutions 2d and 3d.

6th—That on any subscriber withdrawing his name from the Society, it shall be lawful for his wife, or any person in her behalf, to continue the subscription, the same as if her husband subscribed, provided she bears an irreproachable character, which shall be determined by a majority of the Directors.

7th—That a widow who shall have been separated from her husband on account of adultery, or who is living in a notorious state of incontinence, shall have no claim whatever on the Fund.

8th—That to widows marrying again, it shall be at the option of the Directors to pay pensions at such times and in such sums as they shall consider most beneficial to the widow, as the Fund will not acknowledge any claim but that of the pensioner herself.

9th—That the pension to the widows or children be considered unalienable; the fact of transferring or of anticipating it by any verbal agreement or written document shall be considered unlawful, and shall subject the widow or children to the forfeiture of the same.

10th—That the boys of deceased subscribers, on attaining the age of from 14 to 18 years of age, shall have, if their father were a subscriber six years, 50*l*., and 5*l*. in addition for every year he was a subscriber above six years, but such sum never to exceed 150*l*. Should a subscriber die before having subscribed six years, his children to have such sum as the Directors conceive just. These sums to be paid to such persons and for such purposes as the Directors may deem most beneficial for the boy's interests,—after this bonus has been paid, the boy to have no claim on the Fund.

11th—That the female children of deceased subscribers shall retain their pensions until married, when they shall receive a sum on the same scale as the boys in the preceding resolution, with the same limitations, restrictions, and conditions, and after marriage shall have no claim on the Fund.

12th—That no widow shall have any claim on the Fund who has not been married twelve months (to the subscriber) previous to his decease, unless such subscriber was killed in action, or died from wounds received in action subsequent to his becoming a subscriber to this Institution, or killed in the execution of his duty, or by accident—except in special cases, which shall be determined by the Directors.

13th—That no pension for widows or children shall be claimable before the expiration of three years from this date.

To a Lieut. Colonel's do. do. do. .	80	0	0

Do. do. four do.	6	0	0
Do. do. five do.	5	10
Do. do. six and upwards do. . .	5	0	0

15th—That until the Fund shall have such an income as shall make it unnecessary to reduce the above named pensions, the Directors shall fix the amount of pensions every two years, for the following two years, according to the income of the Society, and the probable claims that may arise in those two years, always reserving one-fourth of the said income to be added to the capital. All donations, legacies, &c., to be invested capital—the interest only to be available for pensions.

16th—That every office of emolument connected with the Institution, shall be held by a subscriber, who shall be elected by a majority of the members.

17th—The direction to be under the management of eighteen members, chosen by the subscribers, twelve of whom must be resident within 25 miles of London. Ex-officio directors—the Commander of the Forces, the Secretary-at-War, and the First Lord of the Admiralty.

18th—No Director, excepting those ex-officio, shall be chosen from the Trustees.

19th—That the accounts of this Institution shall be made up and signed by at least six of the Directors once in every year, when they are authorised to direct the Secretary to retain any surplus not exceeding 200*l*. in cash, to be at the disposal of the Directors for the purposes of this Society. Any surplus beyond that sum shall be added to the capital or fund stock of this Institution.

20th—That the Trustees for the time being, or any three of them, in whose names the capital or stock of the Society may happen to stand, shall and may, from time to time, jointly grant any letter or letters of attorney as occasion may require, to enable the Directors for the time being, or any person or persons in their behalf, to receive the dividends of the Society's stock for the purposes of the said Society.

21st—That no widow or child of any subscriber to this Institution shall be entitled to any pension from this Society until after the expiration of three years from the time of the member's admission as a subscriber, unless he pays three years' subscription, and the fines of marriage, at the time he becomes a member.

22nd—That every member who shall neglect to pay his subscription within one month after the expiration of half a year, shall cease to become a member of this Institution, and shall forfeit all monies thereto paid, and his widow shall have no claim upon this Society, excepting agreeably to Art. 6th.—This Article to be enforced at the discretion of the Directors, who will give all due consideration to any explanation as to why the subscription was not paid.

23rd—That all pensions derivable from this Institution shall be paid to the legal claimants without any deduction of fees, or any other payments, and shall be considered the property of the pensioner, independent of all other income she may possess, from whatever source derived, and the pensioner's receipt alone will be a sufficient acquittance.

24th—A widow pensioner marrying again to a subscriber, shall, in the event of his death, be entitled to one pension only, that of the highest rank enjoyed by either husband.

25th—That if any fraud or deceit be made use of towards this Institution, by any subscriber or pensioner, their names shall be struck off the books of this Institution, and neither shall derive any benefit from the funds of this Society.

26th—That in case of the death of any one of the Trustees, another shall be elected by the Directors, subject to the approval of a majority of the subscribers.

27th—That two half-yearly meetings shall be held in London, at such time and place as the Directors shall appoint in every year, when and where every member shall have liberty and right to be present, and to vote on all questions relative to the Society.

28th—That a general meeting be held once a year, the first Monday in June, when the Directors shall lay before the meeting all the accounts and other proceedings of the Society, as may be then and there called for. And every such general meeting shall have full power and authority to approve or disapprove of the same.

29th—That all questions involving the payment of one hundred pounds sterling, and upwards, which may not be provided for by the Rules or Regulations of this Society, or which contemplate any alteration, addition, or expunging any of the resolutions as fixed by this meeting, must be with the concurrence of at least two-thirds of the subscribers who vote on the question. Six months' notice must be given by the Secretary, in a letter to the different regiments, ships, and depots, at the expiration of which time a general meeting shall be called by advertisement in the public papers.

30th—That one-third of the Directors go out of the Direction every year; for the first and second year the names of the Directors to go out shall be decided by ballot; after the second year to go by rotation.

31st—That the proceedings of all regular and special general meetings of the Directors shall be minuted in a book kept for that purpose.

32nd—That if any of the Directors die, or resign, the other Directors shall elect and choose some other subscriber to the Institution, who shall from thenceforth be a Director.

33rd—That the Directors for the time being do order the payment of all pensions, salaries, or established expenses of this Society, as they may become due. That, when any doubts shall arise, they be authorised to withhold any such payments, and report the circumstance at the next general meeting. That they do examine the Secretary's books, and see the same properly kept; and that no monies of this Society be paid but by an order of the Chairman and at least three of the Directors, or by some general meeting of this Society.

34th—That as the funds of this Society may for some time be inadequate to pay a salary to the member who shall hereafter be appointed Secretary to this Society, it is resolved that the offer of Captain Kerr be accepted, and that he be appointed Honorary Secretary to this Institution, with an allowance of 25*l*. per ann. for office-rent and Clerk. And that all communications be addressed to him (post-paid) for the information of the Directors on all subjects connected with the Fund, at Carlton Chambers, No. 9, Regent-street, where the office for the present is established.

35th—That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Editors of the United Service Gazette and the Naval and Military Gazette, for the very ready and able manner in which they have advocated the proposition of this Fund in their respective Journals.

36th—That a book be immediately opened at the Army and Colonial Rooms of Messrs. Alexander and Kerr, to receive the names of subscribers to the Fund, and of persons making donations to it; the names of such donors shall, from time to time, be published in the Military Journals, with the amount of donations, for the information of the subscribers in general.

37th—That a letter from Baron De Bercenger, of Cremorne House, Chelsea, to the Chairman of this meeting, be taken into consideration, and his liberal offer for the use of his extensive and unique establishment for one day, this, and every succeeding year, during his possession, free of all charges of rent, &c., be accepted for the benefit of the Fund; and that the thanks of the meeting be given to the Baron for his expressions of good feeling and liberal offer.

38th—That all those Retired and Militia Officers and Civilians who came forward and advocated the proposition for the establishment of this Fund, by subscribing their names at and previous to this meeting, be allowed to become members on the same footing as officers in actual commission.

39th—That every retired officer of the United Service who may wish to become a subscriber hereafter, shall only be considered eligible provided his age does not exceed fifty years,—that he pay a fine of twenty-five guineas on entrance, and one guinea for every year his wife may be younger than himself,—that he pay up his subscription from the date of this Institution; and, if he be married subsequently to its formation, that he pay the marriage fines, &c., agreeably to Articles 2d and 3d, and produce two certificates of health, similar to those required by an Insurance Company.

40th—That the donations to the orphan boys and girls shall not be chargeable to the Fund, until the income is sufficient to pay them without encroaching on the pensions of the widows and children.

41st—That a member dying and leaving no widow, but a child or children, born in wedlock, such child or children shall be entitled to the pension of the mother (provided that the circumstances of the child or children urgently require it,) in addition to their own.

42d—That all the funds derivable from donations, subscriptions, legacies, &c. &c., shall be invested in Government Securities, in the name of twelve Trustees, chosen by the subscribers, with the addition of the Commander of the Forces, the Secretary-at-War, and the First Lord of the Admiralty (for the time being), if those officers will accept the trust.

If the majority of the Trustees are of opinion that any sum or sums of money, not exceeding one-half of the capital, could be safely invested in a more advantageous manner, it shall be lawful for them, with the consent of two-thirds of the Directors, to invest any such portion in landed property as shall by them be deemed advisable.

43d—That when the accumulated capital of this Institution shall exceed 500,000*l.*, independent of the annual income, the surplus shall be invested separately, (and agreeably to the foregoing resolutions, as respects securities,) and be allowed to accumulate until a sufficient sum is realised to institute two schools, one for boys, the other for girls, solely for the benefit of subscribers' children, under such rules and regulations as shall be deemed advisable by a majority of the subscribers,—the parent paying five pounds per annum for each child, for his or her board, lodging, and education.—All the teachers shall be elected from subscribers to this Institution (or their children) provided they are candidates, and duly qualified.—Orphans of subscribers admitted gratis.

44th—That every officer at present in commission, who shall become a subscriber previous to the expiration of two years, as mentioned in Art. 5, must pay up his arrears of subscription and marriage fines, provided he married, if in Great Britain and Ireland, two months subsequently to the Institution of the Fund; three months if in France or Germany, four in the Mediterranean or our North American Provinces; five in the West Indies; and twelve if at the Cape of Good Hope, India, or any of the Eastern countries.

45th—That a respectful memorial be addressed to Her Most Gracious Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will graciously consent to take this Institution under Her Majesty's own immediate patronage; and that Her Majesty will not allow the benefit it affords to the widow to interfere with or prejudice any claim such widow may have on the Government in right of her husband's services.

46th—That all widows of subscribers entitled to Government pensions may, if they please, refuse the pension granted by this Institution, the same shall be then given to her child or children, or any near relative named by her, and resumed by the widow when she pleases.

47th—That all officers becoming subscribers to this Institution, and afterwards retiring from the service, shall not lose the benefits to be derived therefrom from their families, provided they continue to pay up their subscription, and adhere to the rules and regulations of the Society.

48th—That one or more Fancy Dress Balls may be given in aid of the funds of this Society, at such times, and under such rules and regulations as the Directors shall appoint.

49th—That Local Committees be appointed at Edinburgh, Dublin, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Quebec, Gibraltar, and other large cities.

50th—That with reference to Art. 22, the time for payment of subscription shall be extended to six instead of one month after the half year; but for every month in arrear the Subscriber shall pay ten per cent. as a fine.

51st—That no Retired Officer shall be eligible to become a member after the expiration of two years from the date of the Institution.

[Various alterations in these articles must be expected to take place. A few more have passed this week, and which, if we have space, will be given in our next.—Ed.]

TRISTRAM'S SURVEY OF THE MEASURES OF THE PRESENT NAVAL ADMINISTRATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Former Boards of Admiralty deprived Naval Surgeons by dozens of their half-pay, and erased their names from the list of the Navy, who had "set up shop," and refused to serve afloat. The present Board, taking their former services into consideration, has bestowed upon 45 Medical Officers declining service, a liberal commuted allowance, to supply their shops annually with a new stock of vials and aquafortis, unction and leeches, drugs and bolusses!—These lords "throw not physic to the dogs."

Former Sea-Lords placed on the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital those officers who possessed the greatest interest, with a ticket of admission; the existing Sea-Lords "Resolved, that those officers only shall be eligible for the out-pension who prefer the greatest claims by services, debility, or hurts on duty;" thus reforming one of the many Naval abuses—thus conferring a nation's reward upon our veterans in war and experience, who exhibited, for their Lordships' fair and just selection, not a placeman's carte-blanche, nor an M.P.'s passe partout letter, but emaciated looks and shattered frames, from their daily and nightly watchings on the deep for years in their country's service.

The removal of the whole of the Post-Office packets to the Admiralty, and the arrangements for the conveyance of the mails, in charge of Lieutenant agents, by contract steamers, to and from the Peninsula and Halifax, are measures beneficial to the commercial world, and to the Navy in general, more especially the commissioning of the Ordinary, which empowers the Flag-Officers and Captains to preside at courts-martial, gives the officers sea time, and makes the crews available for active service. All these appointments are for five years only, to give meritorious officers a turn of employment and reward.

It is most amusing to hear and to read the numerous pretensions of officers of all ranks to the present TROOP-SHIP establishments. One writes, he first wrote to Lord Melville on the subject. Another says, "His letters in your co-tems. first drew their Lordship's attention:" and the editor of the "Hampshire" has lately promulgated that, "according to our recommendation, the Rattlesnake and Sapphire are fitting out for the conveyance of troops." I will not observe, with Byron, that these "sayings and printings are enough to make a horse sick," but to make him laugh out. Now let me ask these causers, pamphleteers, and editors, where they ever saw in print, (except in the Naval and Military Gazette, Nos. 228 and 229, the 10th and 17th June, 1837,) the irrefutable reasons that Naval martial law cannot govern, nor subject a soldier to Naval discipline, when embarked on board a vessel of war commanded by a Master of the Navy? The Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the savings of thousands per annum—the Masters, for these enviable and lucrative commands—and the militaires, for this expeditious, safe, and commodious transport of themselves and families—are wholly indebted to the present Admiralty for the existing Naval transport system, although the Army acknowledge the "general salute is due to friend Tristram," for his argufication, in the said numbers in your Gazette; proving that a sailor, by the authority of a master warranted to the command of a trooper, cannot flog a soldier.

The Marines, since the formation of their royal corps, never received so great a boon as the one conferred by Lord Minto's administration, viz., the granting of the officers rank, promotion, and retirement, similar to the Engineers and Artillery. To-day, a Captain of Sea-Lieut.'s rank—to-morrow, a Lieut.-Colonel of the rank of Post-Captain: 10 or 12 Marine-Captains have thus taken these flying-leaps of promotion; 35 First-Lieuts. promoted to Captains, and 71 Second to First-Lieuts., reducing the Second-Lieut.'s servitude to six years. Captain Calamy and some others were formerly kept fourteen years Second-Subs. The Navy List for the last month exhibits the names of 27 Captains of Marines, equal to Sea-Lieuts., who retired upon 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem; the two Brevet-Majors (I believe) 11*s.* 6*d.* under the Order in Council of 21st June, 1837; their seniority as Marine-Captains, except the two Brevets, from ten to three years only—thus receiving 1*s.* per diem more than their equals in rank, the 50 Sea-Lieuts. of the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital, whose seniority runs from 1778 to 1806; 3*s.* 6*d.* per diem more than their 175 superiors in rank, the Brevet or clinker-built Commanders of November, 1830, seniority, 1793 to 1806; 2*s.* more than 100 Retired Commanders under the Order in Council of 1816, who must have been Lieutenants from 40 to 60 years; and 6*d.* per diem more than the 150 regularly built Commanders from 1794 to 1814, of equal rank to Majors of horse and foot. These 27 Marine-Captains* receiving the same pay, 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, as 558 Post Captains, the Senior of whom are 25 years' standing, and about 470 off the rank of full Colonels, of whom 21 are distinguished C.B.'s, many Kts., K.C.H.'s and K.H.'s; honorary titles for discovery in Arctic regions, by sea and land—separate commands in battle—or other meritorious services to the Sovereign or State.

The Marines are particularly indebted to Lord Minto for keeping the other full-pay lists complete, by which 66 Marine-Captains are retired (I believe) on 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, the Brevet-Majors perhaps 1*s.* extra. The "Retired Full-pay" List for the Royal Marines, from the Colonel to the Second Sub., shows the reward for following a drum! British veteran Naval Lieuts. and Commodores, for following a whistle, are entitled only to half-pay retirement! In this DRUM-BEATING LAND the Navy may whistle for Army rights. So I'll sing, Lal de daudle, lal de diddle DUM:—

"When on full-pay with my belle, and the full-pay bottle tell,
I could meet a troop of hell at the sound of the drum." †

However, to please the TARS, I will give them a stave with something Nautic in it:—

"Sweet's the ship that, under sail,
Spreads her white bosom to the gale,
Sweet, oh sweet! the flowing can:
Sweet to poise the labouring oar,
Which tugs us to our native shore,
When the Boatswain pipes the barge to man:
Sweet sailing with a fav'ring breeze.
But how much sweeter than all these—
Is Bull's † delight, his lovely drum.

Senior United Service Club, 13th May. TRISTRAM.

* There are also 29 Marine-Captains under former Orders in Council retired on full-pay between 1781 and 1837—a little difference between 1667 and 1806.

† John Bull's

An establishment has been formed in Wellclose-square, with the best intentions of aiding and improving the condition of the mariner on his return from sea. True, its arrangements are admirable; the comforts and morals of those few seamen of any nation who become inmates of the barracks are studied with the greatest anxiety; but, alas! the course of the measures adopted is unwise, injudicious, and never can succeed over the will and disposition of the mariner—indeed, it would be ridiculous to suppose, from the nature of his life and sufferings afloat, he would become subservient to undue restrictions on shore, and even pay for these practices. The result is, it has by no means succeeded to half the extent anticipated by some of its gallant supporters and exalted patrons, notwithstanding every exertion having been made to give the mariner all that he, as a dependent or landsman, could wish, but not that he, as a free seaman, would require. Fatal to the advancement and success of this Mariner's Lodging Establishment (for such it in reality is, as he is called on to pay for its support 14*s.* per week,) has been the attempt to hold a constrained discipline over the morals, actions, and even confirmed habits of the seaman while an inhabitant within its walls! Considering the views for which the above was formed, depending in a great measure as it must on its popularity among the trading seamen, and the pecuniary resources derived from their payments, together with the measures resorted to in order to check the seaman's excess of indulgence on shore, &c., to prevent him from participating in those relaxations he is led to deem recreation and enjoyment; its misapplied means and power, although not intentionally repugnant to, are aimed to hold that authority and control over him, which must be considered, by those who have studied the seaman's natural character, as futile in its attempt, and never to be accomplished by such abortive, mistaken means. How can it be presumed that the seamen, when arrived on that shore where he contemplates relaxation after an arduous voyage, should there not only forego those enjoyments, but even pay those wages, earned by submission to restriction and confinement, to be kept in restraint, and suffer a repetition of even a more irksome discipline, having temptations and allurements within his views and offered for his acceptance? Let those proposals be offered even to paupers on shore; they reject them as innovations on their liberty, as insults to their poverty. Such means cannot gain the seamen of England; the foreigner † may be compelled, but the British seaman must be conciliated.

These are fatal and secret measures, which, in their very essence and working, tend to widen the growing gulf that separates the mariner from his country's service and his country,—that places within his grasp the axe prepared to sever the last bonds, now fast withering, which subsist between him and his brother seamen of the Royal Navy. It is at least unwise of the Legislature to continue that principal of convention, fatal alike to the mariner and the State, and ought to be abolished.

Surely this can never become the pretext of refusing to extend to our mariners what is justly due to them! Is it because they are obliged to devote their lawful earnings to an establishment from which they seldom receive support, and if so, on such a limited scale as not to be sufficient to procure common necessaries of life for even three months? How is it possible a man can exist on 5*l.* per year, or, at the outside, 7*l.*, which he receives as an equivalent for that which he pays as "enrolment money" into the "Seamen's Institution?" Infinitely superior were the prospects of the trading mariner when a portion of his pay was devoted to Greenwich; he was by that measure in some instances identified with Government, and it was an inducement to enter the Royal Navy, which was always open to him; he was certain of a suitable support in due time. True, in many instances the charity or hospital-ship for the relief of sick seamen is well and munificently supported by some members of the nobility, Royal Navy, and a portion of the public; but, alas! they do not receive that aid which such institutions ought from the shipowner and underwriters. In addition to which, that charity, with a profuseness of liberality, appropriates its funds to the relief of seamen of all nations; while our mariner, if he cannot be readily cured of his disorder, or if he is disabled, is immediately discharged from it, and turned adrift on the world and left at the tender mercies of the "Enrolment Institution," which, as before said, is supported by his means, but from which he seldom, if ever, receives an adequate assistance in his misery and want.

† On a public notice in the Hall is a complimentary epistle, stating the good conduct of American seamen while in that establishment; it is only a proof of a desire to get it generally patronised, and that it is not exclusively for British seamen, as it ought to be.

To Readers and Correspondents.

A correspondent writes, "Your account of the great Military Duke having borne and used the name of Wesley is an interesting fact. Was the patronymic Wesley or Wellesley? The noble family whose patronymic was Seymour, from fancy changed it to St. Maur. The origin of surnames is curious. A person may legally, I believe, bear any name, or spell it as he chooses; the sign manual, or Act of Parliament, rendered necessary by a will, is a source of revenue to the gentlemen of the robe and the Herald's College. That is, by the way, a curious institution, kept up, it seems, for the sale of arms, and in the whole power of the Duke of Norfolk. This is one of the institutions unvisited by reform, and whilst one-half of society use what armorial bearings they like, others pay through the nose for a grant! By the way, this might fairly be taxed, and made a source of revenue. Your further remarks on the change from Wesley to Wellesley will be looked for with interest."

"Medicus" hardly deserves notice: we have no acquaintance, direct or indirect, with the party to whom he refers; but, having said so much, we now call upon "Medicus," of the Army and Navy Club, for his name.

"W. C." is informed that Lord Fitzroy Somerset's levees are every Tuesday, and that it is necessary to communicate by letter the intention of attending, when the writer's name is placed on the list, according to the order in which his letter reaches the Horse Guards. The list never extends beyond 50 names, and the levee commences at 11 o'clock. A notice to this effect is posted at the Commander-in-Chief's office.

In our Gazette of the 4th inst. we took occasion to remark on the salutary changes in the invaliding system at Fort Pitt, Chatham. We have been since assured by a correspondent (who has furnished us with his name) that Mr. George Pratt, who has served as Deputy Purveyor of Hospitals on full-pay for the last 30 years, alone is entitled to any merit that may be due for this improvement in the system of invaliding soldiers, and that, in fact, the improvement was submitted by him to the War-Office five years ago, although not brought into use until last year. We should regret being instrumental in depriving any individual of the merit which justly belongs to him, and if we have been in error, we now willingly make the amende to Mr. Pratt: but, at the same time, in our own justification we must add that we understood the author of the plan to be Mr. Field of the War-Office, and the executives, Colonel Dixon and Captain Anderson.

"Candour" shall have our best consideration next week.

To "J. J. M." Yes, the silver medal of the Society of Arts. The invention is very clever, and the youth talented and deserving of promotion, or we should not have lauded him.

Some further communications have reached us respecting the Hon. Artillery Company, but we must defer a notice of them till next week. The Plan for Classifying and Improving the Rank, Pay, &c., of Naval Officers, is also unavoidably postponed.

In reply to "Senex," we are satisfied that the statement respecting Sir Howard Douglas and the Parliament of the Ionian Islands is extremely exaggerated, if not wholly unfounded. We have known the gallant officer many years, and can freely say that he is one in whom the service take pride.

An officer of the 76th Foot is informed that his paper is regularly forwarded by Mr. Westley of the Strand, and that the irregularity must be at Berbice.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1839.

THE recruiting of the Army, particularly of the Infantry of the Line, is a subject at this moment of pressing interest. We have devoted much attention to the question, and, without troubling our readers with the whole of our investigations, we have come to the conclusion that the present excellent recruiting system has but two defects—the double medical examination of the recruits, and the period of service being unlimited. We can give ample proof, if required, of the injury to the recruiting caused by not permitting the medical examination of the older and more practised District Surgeon to be final. Is it not absurd to send a recruit, who has been approved of by a Surgeon of extensive experience, as all District-Surgeons are, to be finally approved or rejected by some whimsical young and inexperienced Assistant-Surgeon at a Depot? This system places the District-Surgeon in a false position. It renders his decision nearly worthless, and virtually supersedes in authority the full Surgeon by his Assistant. Hundreds of fine recruits, we well know, are rejected under this regulation, who would be secured to the service were the District-Surgeon's certificate final.

With respect to the limitation of service, we feel convinced that if it were made ten years, the ranks would rapidly fill with a superior class of men, even at the present low bounty of 3*l*. So early as the year 1744, we find that even men pressed into the Army were entitled to their discharge after three years' service only, and that volunteers received 4*l*. bounty. Again, in 1756, men were enlisted for five years, and in 1778 volunteers were enlisted for three years, and men pressed for five years, or during the war. In 1806, recruits were permitted to enlist in the Infantry for periods of seven years, and this admirable regulation was in force up to 1829, since which time all recruits must engage for life. We are aware of the few objections which have been raised against limited service, but we believe that at the Horse Guards they are not considered weighty. The country would benefit by a recurrence to enlistment for limited periods—by a reduction in the pensioners; and the Army would obtain better recruits—more willing soldiers—and, from this superior class, better educated and more intelligent Non commissioned Officers.

WE are favoured with some correspondence on the subject of our last week's remarks respecting the progressive increase of our commercial marine, particularly as relates to our opinion, that steam navigation has not had the effect of decreasing the great nursery for seamen—the coasting trade.

We freely admit the authority of Sir J. Barrow, and the officers to whom our valued correspondent alludes. With all due respect, however, for these opinions, — incontrovertible on many essential points, we submit that we have the same means of drawing our deductions, namely, the annual Parliamentary Returns, and we arrive at a contrary conclusion. For we find that, putting steam vessels altogether out of the question, and taking no account of them, the sailing vessels of the United Kingdom are greatly on the increase, in coasting as well as foreign trade; and, therefore, although the introduction of steam may somewhat retard the increase, which, but for its existence, would appear more extensive, considering our augmented population, if our navigation had been carried on as heretofore, still, in the face of steam, sailing vessels are also increasing; and it is not, therefore, fair to assume that the nursery is on the decline, but only partially retarded in its advance by the introduction of this new element.

But we have also an authority—that of Mr. Charles Wood—in favour of our opinion; and that gentleman, no doubt, took proper care to test the correctness of the statements on this head in his admirable speech on the Navy Estimates. The Secretary to the Admiralty assumes the whole number of steam vessels in the United Kingdom, great and small, registered and licensed, to be about 700; and we have 600 vessels registered, and many more licensed, in the year 1838 alone—not one tenth of which are steamers.

To make this matter conclusive, a reference to the Shipping Returns shows an increase of upwards of 3000 vessels since 1828, whilst the increase of steam-vessels is about 400 in the same period—that is to say, 2600 sailing-vessels and 400 steam-vessels have been added to our Mercantile Navy in the last ten years, over and above those substituted for vessels lost or broken up, and removed from the register during that period.

A contemplation of this fact, in the face of the great facilities afforded by railroads for the transport of heavy goods heretofore carried by sea, and the certainty that, owing to the assistance rendered by steam-tugs, vessels of every description make a greater number of voyages, independent of the rapid voyages of steamers themselves;—a contemplation of this is, we repeat, most gratifying; and even did not the Parliamentary Return exhibit the increase referred to, we should be well content with maintaining the former numbers, seeing how much more is effected under altered circumstances with the same means; but the progressive increase is most remarkable, and we will venture to assert, that nothing to compare with it, and the progressive prosperity of our mercantile marine, for the last half-dozen years, is to be found in the annals of our history. Whether this applies to other interests it is not our business to inquire; we are satisfied that, so far as our statement is concerned, we are correct; and it is to be presumed that such a demand for tonnage must be produced by corresponding activity in all branches of commerce.

As we consider the annual official Table o Ships, Tons, and Men to be the real index of ou maritime strength and prosperity, we always watch the fluctuations with great interest, satisfied tha so long as an increase is perceptible, even in the face of circumstances which might well produce an apparent decline, there is cause for congratulation; and our readers may be assured, that in ou view of this, and all matters connected with ou Naval ascendancy, we are guided by deduction drawn impartially from official returns, practica observation, and an honest desire to place the true state of the case before them.

THE lately-ordered embarkations of the Draft from the several Depots of the Regiments serving in India will be completed this month, and further embarkations will probably not take place before July. We have received a pile of letters, from Officers and Men, complaining of the wretched and parsimonious accommodation, or rather the want o accommodation, afforded them. They all assert that, in every ship, efforts are too successfully made to benefit owners and private passengers to their detriment. In most cases the men are stowed away in a dark and damp orlop deck, where they must stew or rot for four months at least; while the Officers have the worst cabins of each ship assigned to them, though the full price is paid for their passages, and are told in reply to their just complaints, that "private passengers have already chosen all the good cabins, and that the Officer on duty must therefore take what the Company' Agent thinks good enough for them." We refrain from publishing, for the present (as we believe th whole of these grievances will be submitted b the Commandant at Chatham to the Horse Guards he names of Officers and ships; but we shall feel compelled, in consequence of letters we received two days ago from Deal, unless a thorough sifting of these complaints shall take place, to expose this jobbing traffic, for the information of the Horse Guards and Court of Directors. We are not aware on whom the duty of surveying ships for India, in the first place, rests; but we know that the Military Officers have no part in it. This we know too, that at least twenty letters of complaint, from Majors to drum-boys, have reached London. The Public Press can and will bring this grievance to the notice of the Court of Directors. Blame there is—on whom shall it rest?

Several Officers having directed our attention to the promotion of Lieut.-Colonel Griffiths, late Major of the Bays, we will say a few words in explanation.

By an arrangement of the Horse Guards some time since, it was determined to reduce the second Majors in all Cavalry Regiments at home; but the option was given to those Officers to remain in the Regiment as Supernumeraries, or to take promotion as Unattached Lieutenant-Colonels.—Several immediately availed themselves of the latter, and accepted this great boon of promotion, whilst others preferred continuing in their Corps as Supernumerary Cavalry Majors.

In a pecuniary point of view, those Officers were not gainers by the promotion to Lieutenant-Colonel Unattached, without purchase, inasmuch that a Cavalry Majority is worth 4575*l.*, and an Infantry Lieutenant-Colonelcy is only 4,500*l.*, being 75*l.* less.

We are not disposed to find fault with the liberal arrangement of permitting the Second Majors of Cavalry to receive the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; all we object to is the jobbing consequent on the measure. According to our judgment, when it was determined to reduce the Second Majors of Cavalry, the arrangement should have been carried at once into effect, especially as the boon was sufficiently liberal.

Had this been the case, there would have been no reason for complaint, whereas the manner of its present operation is outrageously offensive to old Officers. In the two last cases the individuals had no claim whatever from length of service, and it also so happens that they were the only Majors in their respective Regiments, and at the time when the measure should have been carried into effect were only Captains.

We should like to see a similar liberality exercised in the cases of the Second Lieutenant-Colonels of Regiments returning from India, who are invariably reduced to half-pay.

The standard height of the British Infantry is higher than that of any other nation. It has, however, varied much at different periods. In William's and Anne's reigns the minimum height was 5 ft. 5 in., and the military age appears to have been from 17 to 45! However, except during long wars, the standard has seldom been lower than 5 ft. 6 in., and we remember, not many years ago, when men were not taken by Regiments at home even at 5 ft. 7 in. Medical Officers agree that the limitation of the height would be best determined by the age Lads of 17 might be enlisted at 5 ft. 5 in.—all under 19 at 5 ft. 5½ in.—and none above that age under 5 ft. 6 in. Stamina ought to be considered of far more importance than mere height in all recruits, and particularly in those under 20; but we fear that there is often a sacrifice of strength to length in recruiting our Army. With a view to the more efficient regulation of the standard, we respectfully suggest that a return should be called for by the Adjutant-General, of the height after the age of 22 of all those men now serving who were enlisted under age, and at a height under standard, by special authority. Our own inquiries, though necessarily limited, lead us to believe that a large number of men who have been enlisted as boys or lads, under size and under age, are, when, full-grown, found serving in the flank companies of their several Regiments. The subject merits a further investigation by the Horse Guards.

In the United Service Journal for the present month, Major Tulloch has demolished the battery erected by Sir Andrew Halliday against the West India Report, the accuracy of which he assailed. We have seldom seen a more clear and conclusive refutation of a calumnious assertion of inaccuracy. Out of all the alleged cases of erroneous statement and calculation, the only one on which there seems to be any doubt is that respecting the deaths at Guiana in 1834, which may possibly be incorrect, for their accuracy depends on returns made by Sir Andrew Halliday himself, who has proved himself very little skilled in the simplest part of arithmetic—addition. We refer our readers to Major Tulloch's unanswerable letter.

Captain Simmons has this year published another Supplement to his elaborate work on Courts-Martial, containing the corrections required by the alterations in the present Mutiny Act and Articles of War. The principal points are—The power now given to Commanding Officers to send prisoners direct to Milbank; and the defined interpretation of the term "previous convictions,"—i. e., "Convictions by a Court-Martial, or a Court of ordinary criminal judicature." This is the military construction formerly put on the term, and we are glad that it has prevailed, contrary to the meaning affixed to it by the Judge-Advocate-General's Office. Captain Simmons liberally issues this Supplement gratis (to those possessing his work) at Egerton's Military Library.

The election of five Contributary Wards in the Adult Orphan Institution took place on Wednesday last, of which number four were children of Officers of the Army and Navy. Our practice is to keep this Benevolent Institution before the United Service, in order that the Orphan Children of Officers may be large sharers in its advantages.

In our last two numbers we alluded to a case which has now been decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, between Captain Hewett, commanding Her Majesty's surveying vessel Fairy, and the Weekly Dispatch newspaper. This was a case of gross libel; and as we are desirous of laying before our readers a correct statement of the facts which occurred, and which may not otherwise appear (owing to the manner in which it has been terminated), we have been at some pains to obtain the following account of it, for the correctness of which we can pledge ourselves. As in similar instances of this nature, the present seems to have arisen from the ill conduct of a worthless character (a seaman of the Fairy), named Philip Jones, who had been a constant offender from the time of his first joining that vessel, a year before. His conduct was so bad, that five warrants in the course of this interval had been made out for his punishment for gross offences which he had committed against the discipline of the service, neither of which was ever put into execution, he being as often forgiven by Captain Hewett.

While the Fairy was lying at Woolwich last winter, the man Jones had leave to go on shore, with others of the crew, to spend Christmas Day, and to return to duty on the following morning. They all returned excepting Jones, who did not make his appearance for several days afterwards, and for which repetition of a too common occurrence with this man, he was only admonished by the Commanding Officer, and his leave for the present stopped. On the evening of 4th January, Jones, with another man, was directed to land the liberty men, and, instead of returning on board, he absented himself without leave. At this time, and a few days previously, Captain Hewett, whose scientific employment usually required his attendance at the Hydrographical Office, was doing the senior officer's duty at Woolwich, in the absence of Capt. Hornby, who was on leave. Repairing on board his ship, between the hours of twelve and one (while the people of the Dock-yard were at their dinners), to transact the business of the vessel, he was disturbed from his papers by an uproar on deck, which, on inquiry, he found was occasioned by this man, Jones, who had returned on board in a state of intoxication, and was setting at defiance all attempts to quiet him; and it therefore became necessary to order him into confinement. This order was furiously resisted by Jones; and it was his conduct at this time which produced the punishment that was necessarily, although humanely, inflicted, and gave rise to the libel in the Weekly Dispatch. On being ordered to be placed in irons by the Serjeant and Corporal of Marines, Jones armed himself with a hatch-hook (a large iron instrument made for the purpose of taking up the hatches of the lower decs, and a most formidable weapon in the hands of a man in his then condition and general violent temperament), and he wielded it so successfully against these petty officers that he wounded both seriously, and there is no doubt he would have murdered them had he not been overpowered by further assistance. We learn, also, that when placed in confinement, his mutinous and blasphemous expressions kept the ship in an uproar until the evening, his threats of murder, accompanied by imprecations, being more those of a madman than a rational being. Such conduct as this clearly placed him under the first part of the 22d Article of War, which adjudges death to the person so offending, without any reservation whatever. Had he been brought to a Court-Martial for it, this must have been the consequence, as the Court could have had no alternative whatever. Capt. Hewett, however, without resorting to this extremity, which would bring down the whole weight of the above Article of War upon him, chose those means which the service places in his hands to preserve the discipline of his ship; and in conformity with established rules, the usual investigation took place on the following day upon the quarter-deck of the Fairy, and a warrant, duly signed by the Captain, was made out, sentencing him to receive thirty lashes. On the completion of this warrant, Jones was informed that he was at liberty to volunteer for any other of Her Majesty's ships if he chose, and thereby escape punishment. This he declined doing; and therefore underwent, on the next day, a portion of that punishment which he had so justly incurred, i. e., twenty-four lashes only—six being remitted, and so mercifully were these inflicted, that he returned to his duty after the dinner-hour had expired (the time chosen for the punishment) as well as if nothing had occurred, and expressing himself as being glad to have escaped so easily. The above plain and simple facts of the whole of the case were distorted, and in the Weekly Dispatch of 13th January appeared as follows, under the title of "The Brutal Flogging of a Sailor at Woolwich!"—

"On Tuesday the Royal Dock-yard at Woolwich re-echoed to the surrounding hill the piercing cries of a brave fellow, who has often dauntlessly faced the perils of the ocean. This poor fellow, 'unused to the melting mood,' except perhaps when his ship was being paid off, and appealed to in behalf of the shipwrecked widow or orphan of some brother tar, actually 'played the woman' before his shipmates when about to undergo the self-debasing torture of the cat o'-nine-tails, nor was there any absence of the imitation of the pride, pomp, and circumstance of similar Military sacrifices at the shrine of Muscovite amusement. The 'drummer beat to quarters'—the Marines were drawn up in martial army on the quarter-deck—the bayonets fixed to guard the life of the gallant Captain, should his brother seamen revolt at the sickening sight of a free-born Briton sunk beneath the emancipated black, or the sailors overturn 'the Articles of War' under which bloody code the horrible perpetrations are said to be legally inflicted. The poor culprit, John [we will endeavour to give the name of the poor fellow next week], was dragged up from 'the depths below' of the Fairy, 16 guns, surveying sloop, under the command of Capt. Hewett (one of the last year's batch of that rank), the grating was rigged,' and the women on board battened down below, with a Marine sentry over them, to prevent them from bursting their prison-house, in anticipation of the effect of the groans of the poor wretch inspiring them with masculine strength. The boatswain was ordered to 'do his duty,' and the poor fellow was 'seized up to the gratings,' his hands and arms being securely lashed with small cords to the fullest extent. While the boatswain was selecting the cats, the poor tar called out in piteous tones, such as would have touched the heart of any but one used to order such barbarity to be carried into execution, 'Oh! mercy, mercy, dear Captain! Pray pardon me, Sir!' and similar ejaculations. As well might he have attempted to produce 'spirits from the vasty deep.' The work of blood proceeded, until the reeking lashes had descended two hundred and sixteen times, with all the terrible vigour of a sturdy man; for it is well known, none but such are selected from the crew for 'Boatswain's Mates,' that they may be a terror on such occasions, according to the phraseology and practice of some gentlemen of the Navy. The very shores rang again with the cries of the miserable being, while many passing boats of all descriptions either rested on their oars, or backed their engines to learn the cause, and we are informed, he was subsequently conveyed to the Marine Hospital, where, we will acknowledge, that the experience of the Surgeon (Mr. Parkin) in these matters well qualify him for the superintendence of this and similar subjects under his humane, medicinal care, in our very river, and in a time of peace. The Dock-yard gates may be plastered with bills, from the coping to the basement, with 'Wanted, Men for the Navy,'—they will only be dead letters; and sailors, being men, will turn from them with embittered feelings and thorough disgust."—Weekly Dispatch, Jan. 13.

"The Fairy surveying sloop, 10 guns, Capt. Hewett, lying off Woolwich Dock-yard, on board of which the poor fellow was flogged last week, turns out to be Philip Jones, alias Deptford Jack. The poor fellow is doing well, after the horrid torture of the lash inflicted upon him. Ten of the hands have volunteered out of this vessel for general service."—Weekly Dispatch, Jan. 20.

Capt. Hewett, of course, immediately applied at the office of the Weekly Dispatch for the name of the author of this libellous effusion, and which a person calling himself "the responsible Editor," but who refused to give his name, declined doing. An offer was made by him to contradict any incorrectness in the statement, which, on investigation, should prove to be true; but Capt. Hewett decidedly declined entertaining any proposition without the name of the author of the libel. In order that it might be sent to him, he left his address, both to his house at Blackheath and his ship at Woolwich, telling the responsible Editor, at the same time, that he was then on his way to his attorney. Proceedings were accordingly commenced against the Weekly Dispatch, and a rule was obtained in the Court of Queen's Bench by Capt. Hewett's counsel. On the case coming forward subsequently, that the rule might be made absolute, an accommodation was agreed upon in Capt. Hewett's absence, by his counsel, and which, we understand, does not at all meet his views, being contrary to the directions left with his attorney at the time of framing the affidavits, and whom he has not since seen. Capt. Hewett's intention and instructions to his attorney were, we are informed, to accept no compromise whatever, but to pursue the case to the end, unless the author of the libel was given up. The report in the Times newspaper, of 9th inst., and to which we referred in our last, will show the conclusion of these proceedings—a conclusion entirely made up between the counsel on both sides while Capt. Hewett was at sea. On this occasion Lord Denman said, "It would be quite a reflection on Capt. Hewett to submit to any loss," and that "a complete retractation ought to be made, and could not be made too public." The counsel on the other side assented to this, and the retractation appeared in the Weekly Dispatch of the 11th inst., in the shape of a mixed explanation, and followed by threats, the whole scarcely deserving the name even of an acknowledgment of the libel, as will be seen by the following extract:—

"Our readers, by referring elsewhere, will perceive that the rule nisi, obtained against us in the Court of Queen's Bench, has been discharged, on condition of our paying the costs. We confess that the statement we published respecting the flogging of Jones, the sailor, was a highly coloured and an exaggerated one That he was flogged, was admitted by the plaintiff's counsel; but that his cries were heard by individuals on the opposite side of the water, was a fabrication of the writer. Having rebelled Capt Hewett, inasmuch as we stated that the punishment inflicted on the seaman was excessive, we felt bound to tender an apology in Court. We offered, however, to Capt. Hewett, when he waited on us, a complete contradiction to any part of the article that was untrue. Capt. Hewett was not, it seems, prepared to accept such terms;—he quitted our office, and in three days application was made to file a criminal information against us. Thus we have been dragged into a court of law at an enormous expense, and, through the medium of Mr. Theriger, have given the same contradiction that we would have published had Captain Hewett thought proper to accept of our terms. It is an unusual course to divulge the name of any individual corresponding with us; but in this case we were so scandalously treated by the author, who blinked the affair in every possible shape, refused to render us any assistance, and who, we discovered, wrote to us under an assumed name, that we had resolved to publish him to the world for having imposed on us a bare-faced, impudent falsehood. Of Capt. Hewett, we shall say no more at present than this—that if his character and reputation were injured by the publication of the alleged libel, we offered him ample means to set himself right with his countrymen and brother officers and sailors; for it is no dishonour to make reparation for an offence. This business will make no difference in our future conduct; not only shall we continue to expose the brutal infliction of the lash on the naked backs of soldiers, but, if we find the same infernal system carried on in the Navy, it would be a dereliction of duty on our parts if we did not boldly stand forward and execrate the damning punishment."

Further, we are authorised to state, that not only is Capt. Hewett disappointed at the termination of this affair, inasmuch as that the author of the libel has not been given up, which should have been the leading feature of any compromise between the counsel, in accordance with the terms in which he expressed himself, not only at the office of the Dispatch, but to his attorney; but that he also considers the retractation to be far short of that which ought to have been made by parties professing, through the medium of their counsel, to be ready to redeem the character of an officer which they had so foully and so infamously aspersed. By their own confession, the author of the libel is a character of so foul a description that he surely can be considered no longer worthy of being screened even by the Weekly Dispatch; and therefore the Editors of that paper ought now to give up the author to Captain Hewett (that person, by their own confession in the retractation, being not unknown to them), in order that he may be exposed to that same public odium which, even in their opinions, he so fully deserves.

It is well known to the authorities that the sympathisers on the frontiers of the States are only held in check by our having the prisoners at Fort Henry, and that they are still actively engaged in their machinations, and have large funds at disposal; but they are divided amongst themselves as to the period of attack, (whether now or in the summer,) the object being to attack and destroy as many of our steamers as they can.

The people of the Colonies seem to be a good deal astonished at the Times admitting into its columns letters from the States, on the subject of the invasions, known to have been written by parties in the interest of the enemy, and full of the most cunningly and mischievously concocted falsehoods. No man of influence on this side can now with safety go over: they very nearly caught, and would have lynched, the editor of one of the Kingston papers lately.

When Sir Robert Peel was called upon by the Queen to construct an Administration, the Earl of Ripon consulted the Duke of Richmond as to what course he ought to take in so unexpected an emergency, asking his Grace what he would advise him to do in case he should be solicited to join the new Ministry. The truth of the following anecdote may be relied on:—When Sir Robert Peel told Her Majesty, "That as she refused to part with her ladies, it was useless to send for him," she replied, "You will be pleased to recollect, Sir Robert, that it was not my wish that you should be sent for at all."—Courier.

Fifteen or seventeen Radicals have sent in the terms on which alone they would support the present Ministry. There must be a Radical Ministry soon. There was, not many days ago, a paper at the Reform Club signed by nine members, declaratory of a determination not to support any Ministry of which Lord Melbourne and Lord John Russell formed a part.—Times.

The experiments of lighting the House of Commons with the Bude light was tried on Thursday and Friday nights. The light is not diffused in an agreeable and equable manner, for in some parts of the House the brilliancy of it is so great as to become painful, while in others, and more particularly under the galleries, it is not sufficiently clear to enable a person to read, but we understand some alterations are to be made in the lustres and in the mode of distributing the light, by which the excessive brilliancy will be prevented. If this can be done, the chief objections to the Bude light will be got rid of. We need hardly add that the apprehensions entertained by some as to the danger of explosions, &c., from the use of this light are altogether fallacious.

The young trees in the fir plantations near the Roman camp, Easthamstead, caught fire last week, and the flames being driven by the wind towards the Military College at Sandhurst, the plantations belonging to the establishment were soon in a blaze, and were not extinguished by the students and officers until 100 acres had been burned down. The Government lands suffered more severely; 1,000 acres of firs, about 15 years old, and ten feet high, were burnt down. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, and to have been caused by the people in the neighbourhood having been prevented from using the loppings as fire-wood, and being prevented from passing through the plantations.

Suicide.—On Wednesday morning, the family of Capt. Galloway, R.N., residing at 7, St. Peter's-sq., Hammersmith, were plunged into deep distress, in consequence of the following melancholy event. Capt. Galloway, who is upwards of 70 years of age, partook of breakfast with his daughters about half-past nine o'clock, after which they retired, leaving their father alone in the parlour. About half-past ten the baker called, and the outer gate being locked, the servant went into the parlour to look for the key, when she was horror-struck to find her master hanging from a closet door. She gave an immediate alarm, and the baker having climbed over the rails, came in, and cut the unfortunate gentleman down. Mr. Perfect, surgeon, used every exertion to restore animation, but without effect. The deceased had suspended himself with a thin piece of string, which had drawn so tight round his throat as to cut completely into the gullet. The deceased had, together with his daughters, but recently come from Dover, and had taken the above-mentioned residence for the purpose of establishing a ladies' boarding-school. It is supposed that the dread of the project not succeeding produced sudden derangement of mind, during which the deceased perpetrated the rash act.

A resolution was passed "That Her Majesty be solicited to become Patroness of the institution." It was also determined that a fancy dress ball, for the benefit of the institution, should take place on 21st June, being the anniversary of the battle of Vittoria, and of the accession of Her Majesty to the throne; and that the Duchess of Kent should be applied to for her patronage. After the election of Directors, the meeting adjourned till this day.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, May 14.—Ministerial Explanations.—Lord Melbourne made a communication somewhat similar to those of Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell in the House of Commons on Monday night. In the course of his address Lord M. said,

"Upon being admitted into Her Majesty's presence on Thursday night, Her Majesty stated that she had had one or two audiences with the Right Hon. Baronet, and that at the audience of that morning (Thursday), the Right Hon. Baronet proposed to Her Majesty the arrangements that had been made by him for the construction of a Ministry, but that at the close of that audience the Right Hon. Baronet made a proposal that he should have the power of dismissing the ladies of Her Majesty's household, not stating to what extent he would exercise that power—not stating how many or whom it was his intention to propose to remove—but asking the power of dismissing the ladies of the household, and leaving unquestionably upon Her Majesty's mind a very strong impression that it was intended to employ that power to a very great extent—to such an extent, certainly, as to remove all the ladies of the bed-chamber, as well as some of those filling an inferior situation in the household.

"I now frankly declare, that I resume office solely because I will not abandon my Sovereign in a situation of difficulty and distress, when demands are made on her with which she ought not to comply [hear, hear]—demands which are inconsistent with her personal honour, and which, if acquiesced in now, would establish a precedent which would render her liable during all the remainder of her reign to all the variations of party politics [' hear, hear,' from the Duke of Sussex], and would make her domestic life one continued scene of discomfort and unhappiness."

The Duke of Wellington, in addressing the House, observed, I cannot but think, that the principles on which we proposed to act with respect to the ladies of the bed-chamber, in the case of a Queen regnant, were the correct principles. The public will not believe that the Queen holds no political conversations with those ladies, and that political influence is not exercised by them, particularly considering who those persons are who hold such situations. I believe the history of the country affords a number of instances in which secret and improper influence has been exercised by means of such conversations. I have, my Lords, a somewhat strong opinion on this subject. I have unworthily filled the office which the noble Viscount now so worthily holds; and I must say, I have felt the inconvenience of an anomalous influence, not exercised perhaps by ladies, but anomalous influences, undoubtedly, of this description, and exerted simply in conversations; and I will tell the noble Viscount, that the country is at this moment suffering some inconvenience from the exercise of that very secret influence. My Lords, I believe I have gone further into principles upon this subject than may, perhaps, suit the taste of the noble Viscount, but this I must say, that at the same time we claimed the control of the royal household, and would not have proposed to Her Majesty to make any arrangements which would have been disagreeable to her, I felt it was absolutely impossible for me, under the circumstances of the present moment, to undertake any share of the Government of the country without that proof of Her Majesty's confidence.—No other noble Lord addressed the House, and the conversation having dropped, their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 13.—Ministerial Explanations.—Lord John Russell said—Since I last had the honour of addressing this house, the right hon. gentleman opposite received from her Majesty authority to form the plan for a new administration. The attempt having failed, her Majesty has been graciously pleased to permit the right hon. gentleman to state the circumstances which led to that failure. What I propose, therefore, is, that the right hon. gentleman should state what he may think necessary, and I will then inform the house of the reasons which have induced her Majesty's advisers to resume the offices which they had resigned into her hands.—Sir R. Peel, after some introductory remarks, proceeded to give a statement of the transactions having reference to the change of Ministry. "I waited upon her Majesty on Wednesday, 8th May. Her Majesty had previously seen the Duke of Wellington, and had invited him to assist in the formation of a government. The Duke had informed her Majesty that the chief difficulties which a government would have to encounter would be in the House of Commons, and therefore he advised her Majesty to send for one who would have the advantage of appearing in the House of Commons as her Majesty's Minister, and suggested my name as the person best qualified to undertake the task. I waited upon her Majesty, and was asked whether I was willing to undertake the duty of forming an administration? Her Majesty observed to me that she had parted with the administration which had just resigned with great regret—that in all respects her late ministry had given her entire satisfaction—but that it had become necessary, in consequence of their resignation, that her Majesty should take some steps for the formation of a new administration. It is utterly impossible that any one could express feelings of regret more natural and more becoming in parting from her servants than her Majesty had done on this occasion, nor principles more strictly constitutional with respect to the formation of a new government. I informed her Majesty that I was not insensible to the enormous obstacles with which I had to contend; but that, having been a party to the vote and proceedings of the House, which led to the present difficulty, nothing should prevent me from tendering to her Majesty every assistance in my power. I undertook, therefore, the duty of forming an administration, and proposed to her Majesty that I should return on the following day, hoping that I might be enabled to present such a general arrangement for the formation of a government as should ensure the administration of the chief executive offices of the State, and give an assurance to the public that I was prepared, promptly and energetically, to execute the duty I had undertaken. I conferred in the course of Wednesday with those whom I had the more immediate opportunity of so seeing, and I requested from them permission to submit their names for her Majesty's approval to constitute a part of the government. Those to whom I refer were—the Duke of Wellington, Lord Lyndhurst, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Ellenborough, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, Sir H. Hardinge, and Mr. Goulburn. I waited upon her Majesty the following day, and submitted those names for approval. I mentioned that while the Duke of Wellington placed his services entirely at her Majesty's disposal, yet his own inclination would rather be gratified if he were permitted to be in the Cabinet without any office, and take the lead in the House of Lords. Her Majesty expressed a particular wish that the Duke should hold some important office. No question arose as to the formation of the administration, or the conduct of the government, that I think it necessary to refer to. It was not until Thursday that that difficulty or misconception arose which led to my relinquishing my attempt to form an administration;—that difficulty related exclusively to that portion of the household which is filled by the ladies in her Majesty's service. Her Majesty conceded what could be wished or expected with respect to that part of the household which is filled by noblemen and gentlemen holding seats in this house. I think it infinitely better, after mature consideration, that I should enter, in the first instance, into no statement whatever of impressions with respect to what passed, but that I should refer exclusively to the letters which passed on the subject. I said to those who were intended to be my future colleagues, with respect to all the subordinate appointments—meaning every appointment below the rank of a lady of the bed-chamber—I said to them I should submit to her Majesty no change whatever with respect to those. With respect to the superior class, I stated to them that those ladies who held such offices, and who were in immediate connexion with our political opponents, would probably relieve us from any difficulty by relinquishing their offices. But I stated, at the same time, that I did think it of great importance, as conveying an indication of her Majesty's entire support and confidence, that certain offices in the household of the higher rank should be subject to some change. I did expressly, with respect to the higher offices, namely, the ladies of the bed-chamber, state that there were some instances in which, from the absence of any strong party or political connexion, I thought it would be wholly unnecessary to propose such a change. I saw her Majesty on Thursday, and a communication took place on this subject. Into the nature of that communication I shall not enter in the slightest degree. I shall merely read the two letters which passed, one conveying the impressions of her Majesty, and the other my own.

"Buckingham Palace, May 10, 1839.

"The Queen, having considered the proposal made to her yesterday by Sir Robert Peel to remove the ladies of her bed-chamber, cannot consent to adopt a course which she conceives to be contrary to usage, and which is repugnant to her feelings."

Immediately—in two or three hours after having received this letter from her Majesty—I addressed to her Majesty a letter, of which this is a copy:—

"Whitehall, May 10, 1839.

"Sir Robert Peel presents his humble duty to your Majesty, and has had the honour of receiving your Majesty's note of this morning. In respectfully submitting to your Majesty's pleasure, and humbly returning into your Majesty's hands the important trust which your Majesty had been graciously pleased to commit to him, Sir Robert trusts that your Majesty will permit him to state to your Majesty his impression with respect to the circumstances which have led to the termination of his attempt to form an administration for the conduct of your Majesty's service. In the interview with which your Majesty honoured Sir Robert Peel yesterday morning, after he had submitted to your Majesty the names of those whom he proposed to recommend to your Majesty for the principal executive appointments, he mentioned to your Majesty his earnest wish to be enabled, with your Majesty's sanction, so to constitute your Majesty's household that your Majesty's confidential servants might have the advantage of a public demonstration of your Majesty's full support and confidence, and that at the same time, as far as possible consistently with that demonstration, each individual appointment in the household should be entirely acceptable to your Majesty's feelings. On your Majesty's expressing a desire that the Earl of Liverpool should hold an office in the household, Sir Robert Peel requested your Majesty's permission at once to offer to Lord Liverpool the office of Lord Steward, or any other which he might prefer. Sir Robert Peel then observed, that he should have every wish to apply a similar principle to the chief appointments which are filled by the ladies of your Majesty's household, upon which your Majesty was pleased to remark, that you must reserve the whole of those appointments, and that it was your Majesty's pleasure that the whole should continue as at present, without any change. The Duke of Wellington, in the interview to which your Majesty subsequently admitted him, understood also that this was your Majesty's determination, and concurred with Sir Robert Peel in opinion that, considering the great difficulties of the present crisis, and the expediency of making every effort, in the first instance, to conduct the business of the country with the aid of the present Parliament, it was essential to the success of the commission with which your Majesty had honoured Sir Robert Peel, that he should have that public proof of your Majesty's entire support and confidence, which would be afforded by the permission to make some changes in that part of your Majesty's household, which your Majesty resolved on maintaining entirely without change. Having had the opportunity, through your Majesty's consideration, of reflecting upon this point, he humbly submits to your Majesty that he is reluctantly compelled, by a sense of public duty, and of the interests of your Majesty's service, to adhere to the opinion which he ventured to express to your Majesty. He trusts he may be permitted, at the same time, to express to your Majesty his grateful acknowledgments for the distinction which your Majesty conferred upon him, by requiring his advice and assistance in the attempt to form an administration, and his earnest prayers that whatever arrangements your Majesty may be enabled to make for that purpose, may be conducive to your Majesty's personal comfort and happiness, and to the promotion of the public welfare."

I have heard, even since I came into this House to-night, that I made some proposal to the Queen, as to the noblemen and gentlemen of her household, which ought not to have been made. I can only say, that the only names I submitted to Her Majesty for situations in the household (beside that of Lord Liverpool, whom Her Majesty mentioned herself as one whom she was anxious to select for such an office) were those of Lords Ashley and Sidney. I have also heard it stated that I, in an unusual manner, called for the dismissal of the ladies of the household. It has been said that even the earliest friend of Her Majesty, the Baroness Lehzen, I insisted should be removed. I heard that on the evening of Friday, and my answer to the person who informed me of it was, "This is the first time for the last four days that the name of the Baroness Lehzen was ever uttered by me, nor did it ever occur to me that she was one of the ladies whose removal I ought to seek." I did decline to undertake the duty of forming an administration on the understanding that the whole of these appointments should, without exception, be continued.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL was anxious that the House should see distinctly the principle upon which the Right Hon. Baronet proposed to act, and enter into a full review of his letter. "He tells us, that his meaning was not to interfere with the interior offices of the household, but merely to extend the principle for which he contended to the chief appointments in the household. The impression upon the mind of Her Majesty certainly was, that the Right Hon. Gent. requested the power to constitute that part of the household which related to the ladies of the bed chamber, and that those offices, as well as other interior appointments, should be subject to change at the recommendation of the Minister." Her Majesty, not being disposed to concede that point, again sent to Lord Melbourne, and consulted his Lordship as to the form of the answer which she should make to the proposition of the Right Hon. Gent. Lord Melbourne, finding Her Majesty not disposed to yield to the proposal of the Right Hon. Baronet, or to submit to the removal of any part of the household, with the exception of those connected with noblemen and gentlemen of either House of Parliament, sent for his colleagues, in order to take their opinion on the advice they might give Her Majesty as to the form of the answer she should give. The answer given by Her Majesty has been read by the Right Hon. Baronet. Now the question, as I conceive, is, whether it was essential, to enable the Right Honourable Gentleman to form a Government, that Her Majesty should accede to the proposal made by the Right Honourable Baronet. In the view of Her Majesty, whether that proposal had been for a total change of the ladies of the bed-chamber, or whether it was for a partial change, the principle would have been equally repugnant to her feelings and destructive to her comfort, because it appeared to Her Majesty, and, as I think, most truly, that if, in pursuance of the powers granted to him, the Right Hon. Gent. should propose the removal of some of the ladies of the household, and that afterwards any one or two other ladies should be proposed, this Right Hon. Gent., being then Prime Minister of this country, and that principle having been conceded, it would have been utterly impossible for Her Majesty to say that, for the sake of any one particular lady, or for the sake of any one particular friend of Her Majesty, she would risk the breaking up of an administration in contesting the principle, to the practice of which she had given her assent [cheers]. Her Majesty was pleased, on Friday last, after she had received the letter of the right Hon. Baronet resigning at once the commission with which Her Majesty had honoured him, to order my attendance upon her. Her Majesty stated the circumstances to me very much as the Right Hon. Gent. has stated them—with respect to herself, exactly as the Right Hon. Gent. had stated them. But with regard to the proposition of the Right Hon. Gent., Her Majesty certainly had not gathered the precise nature of the manner in which the Right Hon. Gent. proposed to use the power which was to have been granted. Her Majesty, after making those statements to me, was pleased to ask whether I thought she was justified in making that refusal; and when I stated that I thought Her Majesty was justified, Her Majesty was then pleased to observe, that as Her Majesty, in possession of the powers of the Crown, had hitherto given her support to the Administration, she hoped I would consider myself bound now to support Her Majesty in return [cheers]. On the next day a Cabinet was held in Downing-street, and Her Majesty's confidential servants, after a consultation, expressed their opinion with regard to these matters in a minute, an extract from which I will take the liberty to read to the House:—"Her Majesty's confidential servants having taken into consideration the letter addressed by Her Majesty to Sir Robert Peel, on 10th of May, and the reply of Sir Robert Peel of the same day, are of opinion, that, for the purpose of giving to the Administration that character of efficiency and stability, and those marks of the constitutional support of the Crown which are required to enable it to act usefully to the public service, it is reasonable that the great officers of the Court, and situations in the household held by members of Parliament, should be included in the political arrangements made in a change of the Administration; but they are not of opinion that a similar principle should be applied or extended to the offices held by ladies in Her Majesty's household" [great laughter from the opposition, and great cheering from the ministerial side of the house]. The question then was, whether Her Majesty's former Ministers, notwithstanding the difficulties which had made them tender their resignations, were willing so far to act as to state their concurrence with Her Majesty in her refusal, and thus to become constitutionally responsible for that refusal? [cheers and laughter.] But I for my part am prepared to say that, great as those difficulties may have been, though compelled, as I felt myself by a sense of duty, to tender my resignation to Her Majesty, I do conceive that those who think that Her Majesty was justified in what she has done should not refuse to assume the responsibility which belongs to their opinion [great cheering],—that they should neither conceal nor evade the avowal of it, and that they should trust to the opinion of Parliament and of the country as to the result [continued cheering].—Sir ROBT. PEEL said, the Noble Lord has relieved me of the greatest load of anxiety I ever suffered under during my whole life; I was so fearful that in the statement I might make upon this subject I should appear in the slightest manner to do injustice to my Sovereign. Notwithstanding some of the observations made by the Noble Lord, I think there is no important difference in the statements we have made. I will reply only to one point. Her Majesty certainly did state that I should find her act with perfect openness and fairness, and I thought I had conveyed my impression upon that point when I stated that nothing could be more becoming or more constitutional than the whole of Her Majesty's conduct.—Lord J. RUSSELL. It will be as well that I should state, although it certainly is not necessary, but it may be satisfactory to the Right Hon. Baronet, that, for my own part, I have nothing to complain of in the statement he has made.

WEDNESDAY, May 15.—Sir E. CODRINGTON presented a petition from Whitby, in favour of the establishment of a harbour of refuge at Redcar. Also a petition from an individual complaining of having been struck from the list of Navy Surgeons.—Mr. PEARD referred to the extract from the "Cabinet minute," of 11th inst., that had been read by Lord J. Russell, regarding control over the ladies of the bed chamber, &c., and inquired whether there would be any objection to the production of the whole of that document?—Lord J. RUSSELL answered that he had the most decided objection to its production.—Mr. LABOUCHERE (in answer to Mr. Hume's inquiry) explained the circumstances attendant on Col. Prince's orders to shoot certain prisoners in Canada; but was not prepared to promise the production of the papers on the subject.—Lord J. RUSSELL, on moving that the House, at its rising, do adjourn till Monday, May 27, stated that, on re assembling, the first business would be the appointment of a Speaker; that, with respect to Jamaica, the Under-Secretary for the Colonies, or himself, would, on the 30th inst., submit a motion regarding the affairs of that island.—The SPEAKER, in a brief address, took his farewell of the House as the occupant of the Chair.—Mr. C. WYNN expressed astonishment at the long adjournment proposed, when the internal state of the country was so alarming.—Lord J. RUSSELL said that the proclamations had produced salutary effects.—Mr. HUME moved the appointment of a Select Committee on "the lighting of the House," which was agreed to, and it was arranged that the new plan, of an application of the Bude light, should be tried on Thursday and Friday evenings.—The House then adjourned till Monday, 27th inst.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—There was an insurrection in Paris on Sunday last. Some hundred persons broke open a gun-shop, and took about 150 fowling-pieces. They afterwards surprised some of the posts. The National Guards mustered strong, and the emeute was speedily terminated. Nearly 200 prisoners were taken, the chief of whom would be tried by the Chamber of Peers. The rest would be sent before the Court of Assizes. The number of insurgents killed or who died of their wounds was about 40. Nearly as many soldiers, officers, National Guards, and Municipal Guards, were killed or dead. On this affair, Prince Napoleon has addressed the following letter to the Editor of the Times:—

SIR,—I see with pain in your Paris correspondence that it is wished to cast upon me the responsibility of the late insurrection. I rely upon your kindness to refute in the most distinct manner this insinuation. The intelligence of the bloody scenes which took place has caused me as much surprise as grief. If I were the soul of a plot, I would also be the chief actor in it on the day of danger; nor would I shrink back after a defeat.

Accept my assurances of the highest respect,

NAPOLEON LOUIS BONAPARTE.

17, Carlton-house Terrace, May 17.

As a consequence, we suppose, of this insurrection, the King at length on Sunday evening appointed a Ministry in lieu of that which had been named ad interim. Marshal Soult, President of the Council, and Minister for Foreign Affairs. M. Teste, Minister of Justice. General Schneider, Minister of War. Admiral Duperré, Minister of Marine. M. Duchatel, Minister of the Interior. M. Cunin Gridaine, Minister of Commerce. M. Dufaure (!), Minister of Public Works. M. Villemaine, Minister of Public Instruction. M. Passy, Minister of Finance. By other ordinances the Duke de Montebello, late Minister for Foreign Affairs, is named Ambassador to Naples. M. Girod (de l'Ain), late Minister of Justice, resumes his former post in the Council of State. General Cubieres (late Minister of War) returns to the situation he lately held in the War Department. M. Tupinier (late Minister of Marine) resumes his post as Director of the Posts, and Minister of the Council of Admiralty. M. Gauthier (late Minister of Finance) is once more the Deputy-Governor of the Bank of France.

SPAIN.—The whole of the Spanish ministry resigned on the 4th. The cause of their determination is not known, and the despatches from Madrid of that date do not mention whether the Queen accepted or not their resignation.

GREECE.—A revolt had taken place against the Greek government in the district of Maina. A body of 300 of the inhabitants seized upon the barracks at Marathonisi, disarmed the troops, and declared that they would not lay down their arms until a national assembly was called, and redress given to many alleged wrongs. Troops have been sent to quell this disturbance; but it is uncertain if they can succeed, as it is probable that the insurrection will extend to Messenia and Rumelia.

EGYPT.—Private correspondence from the East represents as imminent a rupture between the Porte and the Pasha of Egypt. Admiral Roussin was using every means to prevent hostilities and maintain the status quo, but the Russian ambassador was fomenting discord underhand, and urging the Sultan to war, in order to afford to the Czar a pretext for interfering, and seizing on "the lion's share." England appeared to remain faithful to the Porte, and threatened Mehemet Ali with her anger, were she to resort to hostilities. Austria observed a sort of neutrality, determined, however, on opposing the new encroachments on the Ottoman empire contemplated by Russia. The issue of the struggle between those two powers was deemed uncertain, each having a numerous army and a formidable fleet. If Mehemet Ali were to be the conqueror (which was deemed most likely), a general war would ensue, in which Austria would act in concert with France and England. Should the Viceroy, on the contrary, be overpowered, the Arabian population of Egypt would make a fruitless attempt to reconquer its nationality and independence; but the country would sooner or later become the prey of European invaders.

Literary Notices.

The Banished. 3 vols. Edited by James Morier, Esq. H. Colburn.

THIS is a novel of the historical class, and therefore includes a double source of interest, both branches of which are almost equally acceptable to those searchers after exciting entertainment, to whom works of this nature chiefly address themselves. It is translated from the German by (we believe) the brother of the popular writer who ushers it into the world; and the historical portion of its details may be regarded as more than usually conformable with fact. The historical personage who gives title to the romance—The Banished—is the celebrated Duke Ulrick of Wurtemburgh, who lived in the early part of the 16th century, and whose life forms so romantic a feature in the annals of his country.

The portion of his career which is here chosen for illustration—or rather which is chosen with the view of illustrating the habits and manners of the times in which he lived—is that when he was contesting the authority and setting at defiance the power of the League; and the chief historical incidents referred to are the assembling of the imperial forces at Ulm, their subsequent conflict, and the defeat and banishment of the recusant Duke.

In connection with these stirring events, we are introduced to a large number of other historical personages, and several fictitious characters,—from the latter of whom is drawn what may be called the domestic interest of the story. The Banished conveys a striking and highly entertaining picture—or rather a series of pictures—of the singular state of manners and society which prevailed at the period in question, and the whole forms a work of unusual entertainment, blended with a degree of information which cannot fail to be equally acceptable. We are not informed what share the practised hand of Mr. James Morier has had in the production of the work; but the style of the translation bespeaks a perfectly competent hand, and one that we should imagine to be capable of original composition—especially of the class in connection with which its first essay has been made.

History and Antiquities of Hammersmith. By Thomas Faulkner. Nichols and Son.

To us, who have devoted a very considerable portion of our time to the contemplation of local antiquities, it has frequently appeared that there is scarcely a village or hamlet in the vicinity of this metropolis whose history does not involve a number of curious anecdotes, and whose revolutions are not worthy the contemplation of the philosopher, and the consideration of the moralist.

Above the rest the parish of Hammersmith has always been to us an object of peculiar attention; the amenity of its situation, and the celebrity of its former inhabitants, have long endeared it to us; we are, therefore, pleased to see a work of the nature of this, which we now introduce to the public, though, at the same time, we are sorry that our observations upon it must, of necessity, be very limited.

In the description of the church and burial-ground, we find the names of many persons whom we knew, and who have distinguished themselves in arts and arms. The description of the Benedictine convent involves much historical research, and is treated of in a classical and masterly style. In the account of ancient houses which have, and still do distinguish this neighbourhood, Mr. Faulkner has, in some degree, done what we wished to see very generally effected; he has, as far as his materials would allow, given a history of their several tenants. Of course this department, which is extremely entertaining, involves many of the most eminent persons that have adorned our country from the time of Elizabeth.

From the cursory sketch which we have offered of this work, the reader will see that it contains a large fund of local knowledge, and he will also find that this is in detail combined with a large portion of real and substantial entertainment.

We very much approve of its systematical arrangement, and commend the writer for the industry of his research, and the ardour that seems to have influenced his investigations. To compose a volume of this nature with any prospect of success, an author must feel an attachment to the place he describes: this, we believe, Mr. Faulkner does; and we can assure him that we know but few towns or villages that are more likely to excite the curiosity of the topographical, historical, or antiquarian reader.

The work is embellished with a whole-length portrait of Sir Nicholas Crispe, two maps, and upwards of thirty views of churches, public buildings, and ancient mansions.

Hints on Horsemanship to a Nephew and Niece. By an Officer of the Household Brigade of Cavalry. E. Moxon.

THERE is much sound and practical advice in this little book. The gallant author, we believe Colonel Greenwood of the 2d Life Guards, has the reputation of being one of the best cavalry officers in the service, and therefore the lessons contained in his brochure deserve attention. Indications of the limbs and body, instead of mere muscular force, are particularly enjoined. "When the horse is in movement, there should be a constant touch, or feeling, or play, of bearing, between his mouth and the rider's hands." This is misnamed the appui, and frequently conveys the erroneous idea of the necessity of supporting the horse. The English phrase of bearing on the horse's mouth is a more correct term, and Colonel Greenwood very justly observes that it is impossible to bestow too much pains and attention on its acquirement. In fact it is the index of the horse's actions; it forewarns the rider of what he is about to do, and by it he feels whether his horse requires more liberty or more collecting. And it is impossible that in this bearing on the horse's mouth, or in the indications of the hands and legs generally, or in shortening and lengthening the reins, the rider can be too delicate, gradual, smooth, firm, and light. The hands, in the bearing of the horse's mouth, in their indications generally, as well as in shortening and lengthening the reins, should be perfectly free from the approach to a jerk, a loose rein, or uneven feeling of the mouth. The legs should be kept from any action approaching to a kick, except when the spur is given,—that should be always present, and, when used, given smartly and withdrawn instantly; but the pressure of the legs should be perfectly smooth and gradual, though, if necessary, strong. To those beginning to ride, as well as to those who have attained some perfection in the art, we warmly recommend this very useful little manual.

The Highland Inn. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

THOUGH belonging to that unpretending class of fictions which do not aspire to the dignity of the philosophical or historical novel, these two pleasant volumes will be found to possess claims which their more assuming rivals too frequently want. They commence with an introduction, which includes the only fault we have to find with the work—that of the mystification (which is as needless as it is fruitless) touching the authorship and editorship of the subsequent pages. We are told that the latter forms part of the diary of a certain defunct Doctor Macalpin, who gathered the materials for it during his brief sojourn at "The Highland Inn," whither he had repaired on his return from foreign travel, &c. Now this sort of mystification is all very well when the matter to which it refers demands concealment, and can derive additional interest rom such a mode of putting it forth. But in the present ase, neither of these reasons can be assigned for the step. In all other respects, the volumes are full of leasant and various reading, the nature of which cannot e better described than in the words of the quasi Editor himself, who gives as a reason for his choice o the portions of the (supposititious) diary, "That it d is plays a faithful description of a part of the Highlands much visited, but little known; that the stories are calculated to please by their verisimilitude to nature; and that the picture of his friend's habits and feelings, as drawn by himself, are honourable to human nature, displaying an unsophisticated character, and a mind, although eccentric, yet imbued with elevated moral feelings, and the highest principles of rectitude."—We can cheerfully testify, that all this is true of the contents of these volumes, and that much more might be said in their favour, especially touching the occasional happy introduction of moral sentiments and reflections, which do equal credit to the head and heart of the writer, and the style of which speaks a cultivated mind and a practised pen.

History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. By Sir Harris Nicolas. John Hunter.—The third part of this superb work includes the History of the Order of the Garter during the reign of Elizabeth, and thence to that of George the Third. Every change in the constitution of the Order, the elections, ceremonials, chapters, and feasts, are most minutely recorded, and the authorities given in foot-notes to each page. To the general reader, the more modern history of the Order will be of superior interest; but the antiquarian, and all who delight in heraldry, will greatly prize the parts already published.

Portrait of the Queen. Hodgson and Graves.

THE painting by Thomas Sully for the United States is well known to the lovers of the arts as a very beautiful performance, and we are glad to find it engraved, with great exactness and very fine effect, by Wagstaff. The composition of the picture is most skilful: Her Majesty is represented as on the point of ascending the throne, in the robes and jewels of state, with the crown and sceptre on a cushion near to her. The countenance reminds us more than any other picture of her revered parent, the late Duke of Kent; in point of fact, it is the most intellectual as well as faithful portrait of Her Majesty which has come under our notice; and, moreover, from its moderate dimensions, is the best adapted for framing.

Portraits of Eminent Living Divines. Part I. Dawe and Gowar.—This may be considered as a companion work to the Portraits of Eminent Conservative Statesmen. It is intended to furnish correct likenesses of the Archbishops, Bishops, and other distinguished members of the Protestant Church, uninfluenced in the selection by political or other considerations. The part before us includes the portraits of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, and the Rev. H. Melvill, finely engraved by Robinson, Holl, and Artlett. The accompanying memoirs are carefully, indeed we may say elegantly written, and, altogether, the work does honour to the arts, and is a most valuable addition to our histories of the church and its ministers.

East India Intelligence.

The intelligence furnished this week has been extracted from private channels; a few letters and papers only have been received with the Company's despatches, the bulk of the mail not having arrived yet.

From the Delhi Gazette of 13th March, we have the intelligence of the Army of the Indus being all assembled at Shikarpore on the 20th Feb. During the halt, the whole force had been reviewed by Shah Soojah, and the various Brigades had been busy with field and other exercises. The movement towards the Bolaun pass and Dadur commenced on the 23d Feb. Candahar is expected to be reached about the 2d April. The report still is that Dost Mahomed has fled from his throne and the treachery that surrounds it, and has taken refuge in the hills.

Accounts from the Bengal Army of the Indus had been received up to 28th Feb. Sir Willoughby Cotton had been endeavouring to push forward by brigades to Dadur, but owing to a great scarcity of water, the troops had been halted, with the exception of the cavalry. The 16th Lancers marched at midnight on 25th Feb., to cross the desert, 26 miles in extent, between Rogbaun and Barshoree. Sir John Keane was advancing but slowly, and was not expected to reach Lukhanu before 4th March.

It is said that Bukkar is to be occupied by the Bombay troops.—Bombay Gazette, March 25.

The following letter from the Army of the Indus contains highly important information, the latest of which is the surrender of Hyderabad by the Ameers of Sinde to Sir J. Keane and the Bombay Army without firing a shot, as will appear by the following extracts:—Camp Kundeeah, 6th Feb., 1839.—We arrived here in high feather on the 6th, thinking of nothing but war and prize money, when, at 12 o'clock at night, out comes an order to halt, followed by another the next morning, caused by the receipt of a despatch from Sir J. Keane, saying the Ameer of Hyderabad, on hearing that we were so near, became alarmed, and inclined to agree to every thing.

The Bengal force, three brigades of which were proceeding down the left bank of the Indus to make a demonstration against Hyderabad, having been countermarched, must have crossed the river and reached Shikarpore by the 18th or 20th Feb. The Bombay troops, under Sir John Keane, moving to the same point, viâ Larkhana, were expected to unite with Sir Willoughby Cotton's div. of the Army of the Indus about the 1st of March. Provided a sufficiency of camels can then be procured, as is confidently hoped, 30,000 having been already obtained, an immediate advance into Afghanistan will most probably take place. The country from Candahar to Shikarpore inclusive, is represented as well affected and eager to welcome our Army.—Delhi Gazette.

The accounts from Bukkar describe Roree, Shukkur, and the neighbourhood as the most picturesque group which the writer had beheld since he left England. From a high tower, about a mile distant, a view is obtained equal to any seen of its kind. The interior of the towns is dirty and mean. Shukkur seems to have been a place of considerable importance, judging from the many ruins of musjids and other buildings, but is not inferior to Roree.

We understand that authentic intelligence up to 23d Dec., has been received from Lieut. Pottinger, at Herat, stating, that he had then fortunately accommodated his personal differences with Shah Kamran and the Vizier, and regained all his former influence over his counsels. The Russian Agent, Villovitch, who has been so long at Candahar, has now found it expedient to retire from the place, on the plea of representing the condition of affairs in that quarter to his Imperial Master. This active intriguer—the same, we believe, whom Col. Burns discovered at Cabul—had, by last accounts, entered Persia on his way home.—Delhi Gazette, Feb. 2.

It appears the Ameers gave over the Fort of Bukkar to us on the evening of the 29th Jan., when a detachment of five companies of the 25th N.I., under the command of Lieut.-Col. Monteith were sent to garrison the Fort. Col. Monteith had been appointed Commandant of Bukkar, and the whole of Upper Scinde placed under the orders of Brigadier Roberts.

Col. Bagnold, we hear, has been nominated to the command of the Nizam's Brigade.—Bombay Gazette.

The garrison of Bellary is all ready for field service, and is about to be joined by the C. troop of the Horse Artillery, and two squadrons of H.M. 13th Drags. now on route for that place. The remainder of the 13th Drags. are in readiness to march in any direction from Bangalore, where they are lying.—Bombay Gazette.

The troops at Bangalore and Bellary are directed to hold themselves in readiness to move whithersoever they may be ordered at the shortest notice. It is uncertain yet where they may proceed, but they will probably be sent either thoroughly to subdue the country of Mysore, or to keep the intriguing Kurnool chief in awe.—Madras Spectator, March 2.

An addition of 10 men per company has been ordered to take place throughout the Madras Army. This augmentation of force may be held indicative of an impression that war is hovering about us.—Bombay Gazette.

A deputation has been sent from Sattarah to England in order to lay the affairs of that state before the Home authorities. They proceed by the way of the Red Sea, and consist of eleven persons—Marathas and Purbboos. —Bombay Gazette, March 25.

We understand that Surgeon R.P. Barre, of the Bombay Medical Service, is about to retire. This step will promote Assist.-Surg. W. B. Taylor, 3d N.I., to the higher grade.—Bombay Gazette, March 18.

Sir Henry Fane has issued General Orders, dated Camp, Bukkar, 16th Feb., 1839, in which he eulogises the conduct of the troops on the march from Ferozepore into Scinde, and especially notices the corps of Bengal Engineers and Sappers under the command of Capt. Thomson for the manner in which they completed the important work of throwing a bridge over the Indus, 490 yards in length.—Ibid.

Intelligence has been received that Lieut. Porter has been successful in getting the Semiramis again afloat. She was, by the last accounts, in three fathoms water, but still entangled among the rocks and shoals, from which situation it will require some time to stir her; the hull is much damaged.

The corps was soon after completed, and embarked for the Cape of Good Hope in three men-of-war, armed en flute. On this occasion I first witnessed a naval punishment, when the brawny arm of a boatswain's mate, with a ponderous cat, soon convinced us that a dozen lashes thus administered were equal to fifty in military practice. A young soldier was reported soon after to the Commander of the ship, for some negligence on sentry; certain articles were missing, and the hands were turned up for punishment. The Major commanding the troops was young and inexperienced; and (apparently hurt at being overlooked) refused to interfere, although the prisoner was quite a youth, and of excellent character. A Lieutenant, however, entreated the Commander to grant a few hours for inquiry, to which he willingly acceded: the prisoner was completely exonerated, and to do the Captain justice, he treated the officer who interfered with great kindness, and established the best feelings between the two services for the rest of the voyage.

I mention this, because the authority of Naval Commanders over Military passengers had been so frequently discussed in a feeling of bitterness; and although I by no means think that an intermediate course might not be safely and conveniently adopted in trifling cases, in those of greater importance, or affecting the discipline of the service, the necessity of the supremacy of the Naval Commander must be obvious, to the most common understanding, however exalted the rank of the passenger.

Although we had embarked about nine hundred souls, the typhus fever had made such dreadful havoc, that on landing at the Cape, and sending our sick to hospital huts, &c., we had paraded once again a mere skeleton, not were some other regiments more fortunate. But what added dreadfully to the misery of the soldiers was the prospect of famine; already had the ration of bread been much reduced, and what remained was of the worst and coarsest quality I ever witnessed. Vegetables and milk were hardly attainable in the most scanty portions for the use of the sick, and the appetites of our young and growing convalescents were perfectly voracious. Was it then extraordinary, that boys from fifteen to twenty years of age should feel these privations severely? Under such circumstances, would it be consistent with the present more humane system, to treat them with unflinching severity? I need hardly ask the question; but, alas! no relaxation of discipline was thought of; the pallid convalescent, when returned for duty, too often relapsed on sharing the hardships of the well-seasoned veteran. No change of system soothed or consoled his despondence, and if found wandering beyond his narrow boundary in search of nourishment, he was tried and punished as a marauder. This might, in a certain degree, have been necessary; for, alas! nothing could exceed the cravings that tempted them to excesses, unless it was the anxious and paternal care of our worthy Commanding Officer to turn their scanty provisions, to the best account. Yet he too was of the old school, and a Court-Martial was the invariable remedy for every irregularity: the unhappy consequence was, the constant operation of the cat, which more than once proved fatal in the desperation it occasioned.

We usually paraded for punishment at three o'clock in the morning, when the execution of the sentences frequently lasted from four to five hours; these heart-rending scenes would now be hardly credited. I never can forget the reply of our good-humoured surgeon to the Colonel, who, on one of these occasions, was feelingly deploring the NECESSITY of such measures:—"By ——, Sir, if you could get the poor boys a bellyful of stir-about (boiled oatmeal), you would have no such work—they are half-starved." Such was indeed the fact; and melancholy were the proofs we soon had of its consequences, in two suicides and an execution. The first was a young convalescent, who returned to an hospital tent from which he had been dismissed, and there cut his throat in a most determined manner; the second was a punished lad, who from shame and despair committed the same act; the third was a convalescent of rather weak intellect, who, when on sentry at the canteen, observed some rice, and other ill-secured provisions, &c., a part of which he contrived to purloin. He was tried by a General Court-Martial, and sentenced to die; was hanged at Wynberg, and declared, at the very last awful moment, it was the happiest he had known since he left England. Let those who have felt privation—those who have helped themselves under less pressing temptation, reflect on this. Many excellent soldiers, aye, and of high rank too, may secretly acknowledge their better fortune, if the fate of this unhappy youth was just. And this reminds me of a scene I witnessed as we approached Bayonne, in November, 1813. Some sharp firing had just ceased, the enemy had retired, and several of their wounded men had been left at a handsome chateau, where some of our medical officers were preparing to assist those who had not already expired. I, from curiosity, looked in upon this melancholy scene, and was soon attracted by English voices above stairs; I went up, and found two officers, in staff uniform, selecting a few pocket volumes of some elegantly-bound books. They were at the same time arranging a plan to secure some curious wine, quite unfit for inferior palates, but of this I thought little, as the family had abandoned the chateau and all its rich appendages to the certainty of their loss. But I had scarcely left it before I observed the same officers ride up to a Lieutenant of the highest character; I saw him throw from him, in evident indignation, a little brass socket with a hook, and as I approached heard them talk of serious consequences if the circumstance were reported. I could not restrain a smile, and just observed that he had shown very bad taste, as the chateau afforded so many temptations to higher pursuits, particularly in literature and conviviality, as the library and cellar were, I had heard, equally well stocked. The gentlemen instantly put spurs to their horses, and were soon out of sight. Had the Lieutenant been a private, he might have experienced the tender mercies of the Provost-Marshal's cat.

But to return to my old corps. The flogging proceeded as before, until provisions became more plentiful, and the men more healthy, when a remarkable and decided diminution of crime (as every irregularity was denominated,) abundantly proved the justness of the Surgeon's observation on the true cause of so much punishment; added to this, about the same time detachments were ordered to embark for service. The Caffres not clearly comprehending the more refined politics of their European neighbours, this corps diplomatique was deputed to explain them, and in the bustle of preparation a soldier's sorrows are soon forgotten.

I had, soon after this, an opportunity of comparing, for the first time, a milder system with that which I had so long condemned and deplored—it was purely accidental. The enemy threatened a descent on the island of Guernsey, and a battalion was formed of detachments of recruits, raised for the different corps then serving in India. It was commanded by officers of experience and delicacy, who allotted all the members of the same regiment (when practicable) to a distinct company; this management, while it prevented jealousies, promoted the very best feelings, the most perfect harmony, and, above all, great emulation. Corporeal punishment was hardly known, and no battalion could have made more rapid progress to complete discipline than did this heterogeneous mass, under the superintendence of Col. Dunlop; it was, however, soon broken up, with general and sincere regret, but not until I had seen all the advantages of parental solicitude on the part of the officers, and the true spirit of emulation in all the departments—advantages never to be found in over-drilling, or any other description of severity. The only instance I can now remember of the effects of corporeal infliction was, however, a very melancholy one. Two drummers of the same corps, nearly full-grown men, were guilty of some act of violence, and sentenced to be flogged;—the younger was forgiven—the older punished; the former turned out an excellent soldier—the latter, unhappily, never did any good again. We embarked for India. At Calcutta he was again condemned for some offence, but was forgiven; it was then too late—he had become perfectly reckless, drew his bayonet (being then a private), and declared that he only wished for death,—that they had "exposed his back once, and the sooner they finished then butcherly work the better." The excitement brought on fever, from which he never recovered; and thus terminated the life of this misguided and unfortunate young man. He never denied the justice of his sentence; he had been born and brought up in the regiment; it was his unconquerable sense of disgrace that destroyed him. What might not have been accomplished with such a mind under a different system? I, at the same time time, freely admit that there are many shameless villains who do not possess one redeeming quality, and for whom corporeal punishment may be better adapted. Yet, although hardened and irreclaimable, I by no means view it as necessary to discipline, had not custom rendered its sudden abolition inconvenient. We had one instance of its total failure at Poonamalee, near Madras. The old invalids of the Companies' service one night had a general fight, in which the officers just arrived were obliged to interfere; one of the latter received a dreadful contusion from one of the combatants, who, being secured, was tried and flogged. This old fellow from that moment became the hero of the veterans: they talked of nothing but the ingratitude and cruelty they met with in return for their past services, but not one of these hoary profligates appeared to have the remotest idea of degradation. Had the punishment been solitary confinement and abstinence, reflection might have ensued—it might at least have convinced them of the possibility of existing in a state of sobriety, and probably no punishment could have been more appropriate or more severe. They were, however, once more left to their vicious inclinations, without either spiritual advice or temporal restraint, to destroy themselves, and save the expense of a passage to England.

A CARD.—When the most important functions of life are suspended, and those who are invalids by inheritance or imprudence are reduced to the most deplorable state of nervous debility, it is not in despair that relief is to be found. It has been ascertained, beyond a doubt, that these circumstances are occasioned by a general or partial relaxation or weakness in either sex, and it is equally certain that SEDDON'S genuine AROMATIC LOZENGES of STEEL are the best, if not the only, remedy ever discovered for this species of debility. When taken into the stomach, they immediately diffuse themselves like a vapour through every pore, producing effects at once delightful, salutary, and permanent. When the spark of life begins to grow dim, the circulation languid, and faculties paralysed, these lozenges are found to give tone to the nerves, and exhilarate the animal spirits, invigorate the body, and re-animate the whole man. When aversion to exercise, loss or depravity of appetite, and pallid countenance, indicate approaching consumption, the delicate female will be preserved and restored to health and society by the benign influence of this medicine. Prepared only by the Proprietor; and sold by his Agents—Mr. Gifford, 104, Strand; Mr. Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; in boxes at 7*s.* and 21*s.* each. Observe, each box is signed J. P. Seddon.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, ratified agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13*s.* 6*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 7l*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*, tent ditto, 20*s.*; furniture for ditto, 28*s.*; japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6*s.* each; japanned drawers, 34*s.* each; mahogany ditto, 44*s.*; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance to days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s.* each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SHEFFIELD, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity with which unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title [illegible] ance, and to substitute for it an article not merely [illegible] but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask [illegible]'s Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and [illegible] Sherwood is written on the outside wrapper, as [illegible] genuine.

Prepared [illegible] J. A. Sherwood, 15, Bishopsgate Without, London; [illegible], at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by all Medicine Vendors.—Any Vender not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THIS COMPANY has been formed for the purpose of introducing into general use a discovery of the most valuable nature, combining the greatest use and efficacy with comparative cheapness, and the entire absence of all noxious ingredients or qualities.

The protective powers of this Company are applicable to Timber, Canvas, Cordage, Woollens, and all similar substances, as securities from dry rot, mildew, and the elements of decay, arising from damp, want of atmospheric circulation, exposure to weather, and sea water, against the influence of the latter of which it is believed that no other specific has been yet discovered.

The practical trials of this Patent have been uniformly of the most satisfactory and conclusive result.

Applications for shares to be made (post paid) to the Directors, at the Offices of Messrs. Wood and Ellis, Solicitors, Corbet-court, Gracechurch street, of whom Prospectuses and testimonials may be had, and where specimens may be seen.

As J. C. sedulously aims at permanency of connection rather than chance business, he carefully excludes all goods not calculated to render substantial service.

The next Mails for Malta, Greece, and the Ionian Islands, will be made up this day,—and for Egypt and India on 8th June.—IBERIA for the Mails of this day.

Ship Letters from Hobart Town, Jan. 4th, by the MAYFLOWER, Hendly, arrived at Portsmouth. Mauritius, Jan. 26th, by the HERSEY, Black, arrived at Deal; and Jan. 29th, by the PARAGON, Cocke, arrived at Dover.

PORTSMOUTH, May 24.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Echo steamer went on Saturday to Woolwich to be repaired. The members of the Court-Martial on Mr. Fuller, Surgeon of the Lily, resumed their duty on Saturday, at 1 o'clock, when that officer entered on his defence, and concluded it about 6. At 8 the Court was opened to hear the sentence, which pronounced a severe reprimand on Mr. Fuller. The Court considered the first charge to be in part proved; the second not proved; and certain parts of the third charge proved. The sentence and minutes having been forwarded to the Admiralty, their Lordships did not issue any directions on the subject until yesterday, when orders were received by Adm. Fleeming for the Lily to be taken in harbour and paid off, all standing. The Hydra towed her in, and she will be put out of commission to-morrow: this is by far the most desirable measure to put a stop to further squabbles. The brig will probably be commissioned again under the command of Mr. Fuller.

The Hastings anchored at Spithead on Wednesday night, and yesterday morning at Spithead. The Commander-in-Chief and the Lieut.-Governor of the Island went off early to pay their respects to Her Majesty, and settle when she would think proper to land. As the troops were arranged to celebrate the birthday of the reigning Queen, and the dock-yard closed in the afternoon, the Queen Dowager determined to remain on board the Hastings until this morning, when she was brought into harbour in the Lightning steamer, and at 9 o'clock quitted the dock-yard for London. The Admiral and General, and a select party, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty yesterday. Upon the steamer getting alongside of the jetty, the Captains of ships and Commanding Officers of corps stationed in the garrison were severally introduced. The yards of the ships were manned, and, on Her Majesty passing, the crews gave three hearty cheers. Crowds of persons were assembled in the yard and in the town, and cordially greeted Her Majesty as she passed. The streets leading from the Dock-yard gates to the Lion-gate were lined with troops, and on the carriage passing the barrier a royal salute was fired. Her Majesty appeared in excellent health: the suite, filling four carriages, accompanied her. The Hastings will go into harbour to be cleared of the fittings and stores put in her for the accommodation of the Queen and her suite. Britannia has been taken out of dock, and the Queen put in to be coppered, &c. The birth-day of Her Majesty Queen Victoria was celebrated yesterday instead of this day. Royal salutes were fired from the batteries and shipping. All the public departments were decorated with the royal standard. Both yesterday and this day the Victory was uncommonly smart, and really looked well. The flag and ensigns were most tastefully arranged. Revenge, Childers, and Clio, are fitting in the harbour, but do not get on very fast. Benbow is nearly manned, and will go out of harbour early in June. It is expected Hydra will have her orders to go to sea next week. Lightning will be sent to the eastward again, and take the baggage of the Queen and her suite with her. Ships in Port—Hastings at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Benbow, Excellent, Royal George yt., Hydra, Childers, Clio, Lily, Lightning, Messenger, Emerald, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, May 23.—(From our own Correspondent.)—17th—Arrived Recovery, on her way to Australia with emigrants, and proceeded on her voyage on the 21st. Sailed Camel, lighter, with stores for the packets at Holyhead. 18th—Arrived Gossamer, tender, from Portsmouth, with supernumeraries, and returned to that port the following day. Arrived the Swale, tender to the Astræa, from Falmouth, with old stores, and sailed, on her return to that port, the 21st, with stores for the packet service. 20th—Arrived Pandora packet, 4, Lt.-Com. Robert W. Innes, from Falmouth, and came into harbour to have her defects made good. Fifty-five joiners and house-carpenters were entered in this yard to fit the Sterling Castle, 74, for the reception of convicts, they are engaged for three months, by which time she will be ready to receive them. 21st—Arrived Goodwill, tender, with stores from Pembroke. 23d—The Calcutta arrived from Sierra Leone, with timber for the Dock-yard. This being the day fixed for the celebration of Her Majesty's birth-day, the troops in garrison, consisting of the 25th reg., 1st Royals, 15th, 46th, and 85th depots, with the Rl. Marines, were drawn up on the parade before Government House, and at 12 o'clock fired a feu de joie. The guns in the citadel, on the platform, on Mount Wise, and Mount Edgecumbe, also fired a rl. salute. The Rl Adelaide and San Josef likewise fired a royal salute; the latter ship was dressed in colours, and had her yards manned. A splendid ball took place in the evening at Whiddon's Royal Hotel, attended by the officers of the Army and Navy, with their ladies, as well as by most of the gentry in the neighbourhood. Malabar, 74, will be undocked on 29th inst. Two new second-rates are ordered to be laid down in this dock-yard, to be named the Albion and Aboukir; one of them on the slip of the Nile, which ship, it is said will be launched in July or August. We have been favoured with the sight of a letter from an officer belonging to the Pique, 36, Capt. E. Boxer, dated Jamaica, 3d April, from which place she was to sail on 9th with the 68th regt. for Montego Bay, and from thence embark the 8th regt. and convey them to Halifax. Andromache and Wanderer were also to proceed with troops to Halifax. The Edinburgh, 74, had been on shore, and knocked away part of her false keel, and was daily expected at Port Royal. In Harbour—San Josef, Impregnable, Belleisle, Druid, Pandora, Carron, st.-v. In the Sound—Curlew.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL.—On Thursday the pensioners in this national establishment, in number about 2600, received a gallon of ale per man, with extra allowance of provisions. Thus accommodated, they were not remiss in the celebration of Her Majesty's birth-day. Flags were displayed from the steeples in Deptford, Greenwich, Woolwich, and other towns in Kent; in short the whole county was a scene of rejoicing.

The Kite steamer, Lieut. G. Snell, will leave Woolwich for Jamaica the beginning of June; and Buffalo Chatham next week for New Zealand. The Avon steamer has arrived at Woolwich from Liverpool, to refit. The Crane packet will shortly be launched at Woolwich.

The Cambridge, 80, and Russell, 74, are nearly ready for commission, if required.

A Court-Martial assembled on the 17th inst., on board the Victory, to try Mr. Charles Henry Fuller, Surgeon, of H.M.S. Lily, on charges preferred against him by Commander Reeve. The Court consisted of R.-Adm. the Hon. D. P. Bouverie, President; Capt. Searle, C. B., H.M.S. Victory; Capt. the Hon. W. Waldegrave, H.M.S. Revenge; Capt. H. Stewart, H.M.S. Benbow; Capt. T. Hastings, H.M.S. Excellent; Capt. A. Ellice, H.M.S. Britannia; John Hoskins, Official Judge Advocate.

CHARGES. 1st—For disrespectful and insulting conduct towards Com. Reeve, on the quarter deck of H.M.S. Lily, on 13th Dec., 1838, in reference to a written order, dated 12th Dec., which the said Commander had issued, touching the conduct of the said Mr. Fuller, and of the Purser of the said sloop. 2d—For disrespectful and insulting language and conduct on 18th Jan., 1839, both in Com. Reeve's cabin, when Mr. Fuller came to report the sick, and on the quarter-deck, on the same day, for which he was placed under arrest. 3d—For having, on 2d Feb., written a letter to Hon. R.-Adm. Elliot, couched in very improper language, and wanting in respect to Com. Reeve; and for having, between 2d and 6th Feb., written two letters to R.-Adm. the Hon. G. Elliot, both also couched in improper language, and wanting in respect towards the said Com. Reeve.

The Court was occupied till eight o'clock the following evening, when sentence was pronounced:—

"The Court is of opinion that the first of the said charges has been proved, that the second charge has not been proved; and that so much of the third charge as relates to the said Mr. Fuller's having, on 3d Feb., 1839, written and addressed to R.-Adm. the Hon. G. Elliot, C.B., Com.-in-Chief, a letter couched in very improper language, and wanting in respect to his Commanding Officer, and also so much of the said charge as refers to Mr Fuller's having, between 2d and 6th Feb., written two other letters to Adm. Elliot, both in the same way objectionable, have been proved, but that so much of the 3d charge as relates to Mr. Fuller's sending the letters to Adm. Elliot has not been proved. In consideration, however, of the high character hitherto sustained by Mr. Fuller, and of his long confinement under arrest, the Court adjudged Mr. Fuller to be severely reprimanded."

H.M.S. Volage and Cruiser, which arrived here yesterday, were, as stated in an Aden letter, to have brought the brass guns captured at that place. Volage, also, carries with her a pair of colours taken from the Sultan's palace, and which it is understood to be the wish of the captors to have presented to Her Majesty.—Bombay Times, Mar. 23.

The Barrosa tr., Lieut. Scrymgour, whose arrival at Portsmouth we notified last week, left Port Royal on 20th March, and was detained nearly three weeks at the entrance of the Channel by easterly winds. Two days before Barrosa sailed, Hercules, 74, had arrived to embark the 37th for Halifax. Sir R. Grant was conducting the port duties; Commodore Douglas was hourly expected with the squadron from Vera Cruz. Cornwallis, 74, was to proceed to Bermuda, and bring the family of the late Sir C. Paget, and effects, to England. Hortio transport had proceeded for Nassau and Honduras, to take the 2d West India Reg. to Jamaica, to replace the 8th reg., which, it was expected, would proceed in the Madagascar and Pique to America. On 19th and 20th April, between 42 and 37 W. long., the Barrosa met a considerable number of the outward-bound merchant-vessels—part of the spring fleet of timber ships. When Barrosa sailed from Jamaica, the following vessels were lying there:—Hercules, 74, Charybdis, and Flamer, Tartarus, and Alban steamers. Flamer and Alban have been reported unfit for service, and, it was expected, would shortly proceed to England.

The Alonzo transport, Lieut. Spencer, Agent, is discharged from the service. The Mary Anne is fitting at Deptford for a female convict-ship, and the Florist for Quebec; Sackville for Sierra Leone; Neptune for Australia; Admiral Moorsom for Jamaica; Marquis of Huntley for Quebec; Middlesex for a convict-ship. Vessels have arrived from Penryn, with stone for the double dock-gates.

THE NEW THEORY OF STORMS.—Amongst the most curious, and if it can be perfected, the most useful of modern theories upon science, may be reckoned that lately brought into public notice by Col. Reid, and which he has called "The Law of Storms." This theory goes to prove that "storms," not less than other phenomena of the universe, are the result of causes which can be ascertained and defined, and are subject, even when at their greatest fury and apparently under no regulation, to certain fixed laws, by which their force, locality, duration, &c., are governed, and which may be so sufficiently distinguished by certain indications accompanying them as to enable shipping to avoid them, or escape from them. Although only in its infancy, Col. Reid's theory has, nevertheless, found support from many of the first philosophers of the day, and (as appears by the following official memorandum) has also attracted the attention of Government so far as to induce the latter to lend its influence in aiding that gentleman to collect, throughout the whole of the British dominions, such facts and data as may serve to confirm, illustrate, or correct his present views.

Memorandum respecting the Records to be kept of the state of the Weather in the British Colonies.

The Captains of Ports, Harbour-Masters, and keepers of Light-houses, or, where those Officers do not exist, some other competent public functionary, should be required to keep journals of the weather, on the principle of the log-books of ships. A column should be specially reserved for inserting the height of the barometer. Under the head of "Remarks," should be entered all meteorological observations considered worthy of particular notice. When the keeper of a journal may hear that a vessel has encountered a storm, he will enter in it any information on the subject which he can rely on, together with the name of the ship, of her owner, and of the port to which she may belong. With the view of tracing the course of storms, the Trinity Board of London have given directions for the adoption of measures to obtain a more accurate record of the weather than has hitherto been kept at the lighthouses of Great Britain and Ireland. The keepers of these lights having the opportunity of taking their observations by night as well as by day, great advantage may be derived from employing them in this manner. Officers in charge of Colonial lighthouses should be instructed to keep similar journals. In noting the wind's force, both in the Harbour-Master's journals, and in the Lighthouse reports, it is desirable that the officers should adopt the numbers for noting the strength of the wind now in use at Greenwich Observatory, and about to be introduced at the lighthouse, under the Trinity Board. In the cases of St. Helena and Ascension, it is desirable that more precise information should be obtained by observation respecting the "Rollers" at those islands. As the object of H.M.'s Government in instituting these inquiries is the advancement of knowledge in science generally, the Governors of the several British Colonies will consider how far it may be in their power to obtain useful information bearing on the subject, from countries adjoining to their Governments in the possession of foreign powers, or how far it may be useful to the study of meteorology to exchange the Observations made within their Governments for those of other countries in the neighbourhood. If at any time desired, there would be no objection to the publication in the Colonial newspapers of extracts from the Journals.—(Signed) GLENELG.

Whatever difference of opinion may exist respecting the other ships of Sir William Symonds' construction, there appears to be none regarding that magnificent vessel the Queen, of the following dimensions.

We shall shortly give a more minute description of this confessedly the finest vessel in the British Navy, or in the world, and merely state for the present that she has capacity to stow one-fourth more water, provisions, and stores than the Caledonia; that she is six feet clear under the beams on all the decks, swims within a couple of inches of her calculated line of floatation, and will do so precisely when her bulkheads are up. She will bear the complement, masts, yards, &c., of a first-class first-rate, but carry 110 guns only.

MALTA, 5th May.—Rodney, Bellerophon, and Talavera, as well as Castor, which left this port nine days ago, have arrived at Corfu, having been sent to that island with the view of exercising their crews, who had for some time been in idleness. Talavera is to cruise in the Archipelago; the other vessels will return about the 15th, after touching at Patras. Rodney and Bellerophon will shortly return to England. As soon as the repairs to the Princess Charlotte are completed, the Admiral will sail for the Levant with that vessel, Vanguard, Minden, Asia, the steam-vessel Rhadamanthus, and the Fusee. To these will shortly be added the Ganges and the Powerful, which are expected from England. Prince George of Cambridge arrived here yesterday, on board the Acheron. H R H. was received by the Governor, accompanied by the officers of his staff, and a guard of honour of the 69th. Another guard of the 47th accompanied the Prince to the gates of the palace. H.R.H. proceeds to Constantinople. He will probably embark on board Admiral Stopford's vessel, to proceed to the Archipelago. The Prince visited the Governor's Palace and the Library, and also the Theatre. The brig-of-war Zebra is to be placed at the disposal of the Duke of Devonshire, who will shortly sail for Naples.

H.M.S. Hyacinth came in from Quedah on Wednesday last for water and provisions. We learn that her commander had experienced ill-health during the time he was in blockade of the Quedah river, and although it is with regret we have to communicate the intelligence, a different result could scarcely otherwise be expected, taking into consideration the locality he had been appointed to guard. Nevertheless the Hyacinth again proceeded to her station yesterday morning, on reaching which, it is understood, the steamer Diana will return to harbour.—Penang Gazette, Jan. 29.

The Raleigh at Sheerness is to be sold from the service. The Barham, 50, is docked, and the Atholl undocked.

COAST GUARD.—The Coast Guard at St. Mawes captured the schooner Maria Victoria, of Truro, on the 18th inst. 267 tubs of spirits were discovered in her false bottom. The crew escaped during the examination of the vessel, but are known and will be apprehended. The boats of the Dove r.-c. crept up 197 tubs at the entrance of Falmouth Harbour on the 19th inst. The Coast Guard at Cliff Creek have seized several cases of cigars, containing 266 lbs., which were thrown overboard from an Indiaman, and picked up by a collier sloop, the Master and crew of whom are under detention for having endeavoured to land the same.

CAVALRY.

Life Guards—Monday morning, at 9 o'clock, the 1st and 2d reg. of Life Guards marched from the Regent's Barracks and Knightsbridge Barracks to Wormwood Scrubbs, for the purpose of being reviewed before the Grand Duke Alexander, and the Prince of the Netherlands. At 11 o'clock their Highnesses, accompanied by their suites, arrived, and were met by the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, Lord Combermere, and a numerous staff of British and foreign officers of distinction. The review then commenced, Col. the Hon. H. F. C. Cavendish giving the word of command. The troops went through their numerous evolutions with great precision and activity, which drew forth the acclamations of the distinguished foreigners. The ground was in excellent order for charges, several of which were made. From the nineness of the morning, the Scrubbs were covered by an immense assemblage of fashion in open carriages. After the review, the royal party proceeded to the Regent's Barracks, where a grand entertainment was given by General Lord Combermere, the Colonel of the 1st reg.

12th Lancers—We have heard it reported that Mr. Macdonall, late of the 12th Lancers, met with an accident, which proved fatal, at Naples a few weeks since. It appears the gentleman was riding with his lady, when his horse plunged and threw his rider. The unfortunate gentleman, who has not been married above two years, survived the accident but 16 hours.—Morning Paper.

13th Lt. Drags.—By accounts of 16th March, received overland this week, we find that Major Stones was in command of the regiment. An order had been received in the beginning of March for two squadrons to march to Bellary, a station about 170 miles from Bangalore; they marched on the 10th or 11th: the thermometer in the tents from 96 to 100. The object of Government in marching troops there was supposed to be merely to show the native powers that they had troops still to spare in case of necessity. The wing of the 13th, it was expected, would be back again at Bangalore the end of April or beginning of May; they had received the usual letter from the Horse Guards, requesting to know what officers were desirous of exchanging, or being removed to the regiment going out. The following had sent in their names:—Major Hake, Capt. MacMahon, Lieuts. Boalth, Jackson, and two or three others.

15th Hussars—Embark for India next week. Major Sir Walter and Lady Scott, and Capt. and Lady E. Wathen proceed with the reg.

INFANTRY.

Foot Guards—On Tuesday the corps were reviewed in the Birdcage-walk, St. James's-park, by the Grand Duke of Russia, Prince Henry of the Netherlands, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, and a number of General Officers. The troops went through their various evolutions with great minuteness. Their Royal Highnesses expressed themselves much gratified with the appearance and order of the soldiers.

Fusilier Guards, 1st Batt.—On Monday morning the batt. was mustered upon parade in the Tower of London, to hear the minutes read over of the general Court-Martial upon the trial of Private Mitchell, for attempting to murder Corporal Furnival, on the 18th April. Our readers have already been made acquainted with the fact of the prisoner being found guilty, and on Monday the finding and sentence of the court, which had received the confirmation of Her Majesty, was notified. The sentence is transportation beyond the seas for life. The prisoner appeared quite unconcerned on hearing the sentence read. He was marched back to the main guard-room, and soon afterwards left the Tower under an escort for Woolwich, preparatory to his being sent away in a convict-ship to N. S. Wales. The prisoner's conduct, while in the reg. was very bad, and he was a man of drunken habits.

The Hercules st. arrived at Cork on the evening of the 18th from Plymouth, after landing the head-qrs. of the 25th, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Chambers. The last division of the reg., under Major D'Urban, was to have embarked immediately in the same ship for Plymouth; but it would appear that the Steam Company who contracted with Government for 1200*l.*, to take the 25th to England, were too knowing for the Quartermaster General's department, and absolutely humbugged the authorities out of the ship, after a considerable portion of the luggage had been put on board, in consequence of which 162 men, after having hoisted the moveables and the baggage lying on the quay, were obliged to return to quarters till Thursday evening. It really is too bad that soldiers are thus to be treated. Why do not the higher authorities look to this? Maj. D'Urban, Capt. Hamilton, Lieuts. Bristow, Peacocke, Brooke, and Ensign Cust, accompany the last division of the 25th reg.—Limerick Chronicle.

The 25th were ordered to embark at Cork as follows, for Devonport, viz.—7 cos. and head-qrs. in the Hercules on 10th May; 1 comp. in the St. George on 11th; 2 cos. in the Inniskfail steamer on 16th. The Inniskfail steamer

He was afterwards at the taking of Ischia and Procida in 1809, and at the battles of the 12th and 13th April, 1814, at Bhar and Castolla; the siege of Tarragona; the blockade of Barcelona; and, finally, at the battle of Waterloo, where he was wounded. —Hart's New Army List.

Roxton, will march, 30th May, from Nenagh to Cork, where they will arrive 5th June, to occupy barracks until embarkation for England. 48th Depot—After the inspection last week, Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Macbean expressed the great pleasure he felt, the Depot being composed mostly of young soldiers, whose appearance and discipline reflected high credit upon their Commanding Officer, the Captains of cos., and the Act.-Adjutant. Sir W. Macbean referred to the arduous services of the reg., both in the Peninsula and in India, where he had seen them; and to the young soldiers of the Depot he held up as an honourable example, the gallant exploits of the 48th during the late war, having shared with the British Army the laurels won on the Douro, at Talavera, Albuera, Badajos, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, memorials of which were inscribed on the regimental colours. The three Field Officers of this corps have served in the Peninsula. 1 Sub., 1 Serj., and 20 r. and f., from Limerick to Killaloe on 13th May.

49th—The officers of the 49th Queen's are very much liked by the Company's, as they do not seem to be troubled with any vain ideas of superiority of service, a vanity sometimes supposed to exist in royal corps. Some of the privates have unfortunately fallen into the great temptation existing at this place, and taken to drinking; but it is supposed that, from the line consequently adopted by the Commanding Officer of the corps, and the great respect and affection which the men have for him, this great evil will be subdued. It is a pity that many of the numerous liquor-shops existing in the bazaars are not put a stop to, as it has been proved that a mixture intended as such is sold by them, of a nature to destroy being with the stomach of an elephant, surely no punishment ought to be considered too great for such wholesale murderers.—Calcutta Englishman, Feb. 25.

We have now before us a medal which has just been struck off at the Mint, for the Temperance Society of the 49th reg. The obverse of the medal contains in its centre the figure "49," with a crown above and a rose below, from the latter of which branch off two twigs, one of them terminates with the thistle flower—round the margin are the words "P. Charlotte of Wales." On the reverse are the words "Temperance Society established" round the margin, and in the centre "April 17, 1837." We hail with much gratification and pleasure the extension of Temperance Societies among the various corps of Her Majesty's and Company's services, and trust the example so laudably set by the 49th and Cameronians will meet with many followers in regiments who are at present without such an useful institution as a Temperance Society.—Calcutta Courier, March 5.

61st Depot—At three o'clock on Monday morning, for a wager of 300*l.*, Lieut. Stephens began his herculean task of moving on foot 75 miles in 12 hours. The place appointed was Kilcommon, on the Anglesey road, a mountainous district of Tipperary, over a marked course of two miles and a half, rather up and down hill. When he had traversed forty miles, odds were made but not taken that he would accomplish the feat within time; but unfortunately, after the 47th mile, he was obliged to give in with a swelling in the right ancle, which it appears he had strained six months before. Lieut. S. got over the 47 miles in six hours 55 minutes, and until the last half hour looked an easy winner. He is a capital pedestrian; height, five feet eight inches, and weight, ten stone eight pounds. He wore a light flannel dress, and cloth ancle boots, laced. He took 22 minutes to breakfast, and made only one rest more, which was four minutes.

G.O., 20th May, 1839.—Several claims having been preferred by officers of the Rl. Artillery for daily personal allowance when on passage by steam conveyance, with troops, companies, or detachments, from one station to another in Great Britain and Ireland, the Honourable the Board of Ordnance have directed it to be notified to the regiment, by letter dated 13th May, 1839 (D. 899), with a view to prevent a repetition of such claims in future, that this daily personal allowance to an officer on board a steam-boat is admissible only in such cases as would entitle him to mileage had he proceeded by land.

J. E. Jones, Lieut.-Col. A.A.G.

Rl. Engineers—Capt. and Brevet-Major Rutherford went before a Medical Board at Trinidad on the 25th March last, and returns to Europe on sick leave. Brev.-Major Victor will not return to England on sick leave, as was expected.

Yeomanry.—The Yorkshire Hussars, under the command of Colonel Earl de Grey, have received orders from the Secretary of State to hold themselves in readiness to aid the civil power in the West Riding, should their services be required.

At Penrith, on 12th inst., the Cumberland and Westmoreland Yeomanry Cavalry were reviewed, on Foot, by Col. Sir H. D. Ross. The various movements, and the manner in which they performed the sword exercise, elicited the warmest approbation. On the termination of the review the troops were formed into a square, when Col. Hasell addressed them. On the conclusion of the gallant Colonel's speech the troops, joined by the greatest concourse of spectators which ever met on a similar occasion at Penrith, gave three times three most tremendous cheers for the Queen and the constitution of England.—On the 13th the troops were reviewed in the large Holme, near Nine Churches. It is a fact too obvious to be unobserved, that the kindly feeling manifested towards this corps during their stay at Penrith, by individuals of every grade in society, proves that the mist of prejudice is passing away, and that the utility of such a body of men is every day becoming more apparent; the conduct of the men, both in the field and at their quarters in the town, adds much to their renown and character for good sense. First squadron—Commanding Officer, Sir G. Musgrave, Capt. Bushby, Lieut. Fetherstonhaugh Second squadron—Capt J. Parker, Capt. Craig, Lieut. H. Lowther, eldest son of Col. Lowther. Third squadron—Maj. Wilson, Lieut. Fatham, Cornet Sleddale. Skirmishers commanded by Capt. Salmond and Lieut. Burn. Cornet Saunders acted as A.D.C. to the Commanding Officer. On the 4th inst. 60 stand of arms were received from the Tower, which were distributed among the troops, 12 each; the men selected were nearly all six feet men, and the rapidity of the manner in which they learned the carabine exercise astonished Capt. Salmond and Serj.-Maj. Frankland, who taught them the exercise. The activity and exertions of the Serj.-Major during the last week must have gained for him the good wishes of both the officers and the men. During one of the days the Cavalry were in the field, one of the soldiers, of the name of Harrison, a labourer under Capt. Salmond's employment, had his leg broken by a kick from his comrade's horse.—medical aid having soon been administered, and the leg set, he was taken home to his family, and we are glad to hear will soon be better. The gallant officer, we understand, allows him his regular wages, and the officers of the corps subscribed for him one evening at mess the sum of 16*l.*—Carlisle Patriot.

Marines, and Rifle Brigade paraded on the Common at half-past 11 o'clock. A royal salute was fired by the Rl. Horse Artillery on the right of the line, and a feu de joie by the Infantry, after which the line gave three cheers in honour of Her Majesty, marched past, and saluted the Officer Commanding, Col. Brown, 2d Batt. Rifle Brigade, and returned to the quarters. A song, dedicated to the non-commissioned officers of the Rl. Marines, who dined together at the Edinburgh Castle, was composed for the occasion by Corporal Bradshaw, and which will be found in our columns.

Thursday morning an inspection of the Household troops took place on the parade in St. James's Park. At ten o'clock the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, Lord Combermere, and other distinguished persons arrived, and were loudly greeted by the assembled multitude. The troops present consisted of detachments from the first and second regiments of Life Guards; the first (Grenadier) Guards, of which the Duke of Wellington is Colonel; the Coldstream Guards, and Scotch Fusilier Guards. The bands of the different regiments were in attendance, and played "God save the Queen." The Duke of Wellington, dressed in the uniform of his regiment, and Lord Hill, then mounted their horses and proceeded to inspect the troops, who went through their evolutions with remarkable skill and precision, which elicited the approbation of his Grace and the Commander-in-Chief. About eleven o'clock the troops marched off the ground, and the Duke of Wellington got into his carriage, amidst the most enthusiastic cheers from an immense multitude, who, as one man, joined in greeting the "hero of a hundred fights." His Grace was sensibly affected by this mark of public feeling, and saluted the populace repeatedly. The Duke of Cambridge was also much cheered.

Portable Field Telegraph.—It is some time since we noticed Capt. Sleigh's very useful invention, and we are rather surprised at the delay in its adoption, as we know that it has met the warmest approbation of several scientific officers, including the Quartermaster-General. At the present moment it might be most useful in Canada, to the army in India, and the constabulary force in Ireland. This invention, which is of the most simple construction, would relieve a General commanding in action of the precarious mode of conveying orders through Aides-de-Camp, &c.

West Indies, 27th March.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Spitfire steamer, having on board Lieut.-Gen. Sir S. F. Whittingham, Commander-in-Chief; Capt. Considine, Assist.-Sec.; Capt. King, Dep. Assist.-Adjt.-Gen.; L.-Col. Grant, Commanding Rl. Artillery; L.-Col. English, Rl. Engineers; Capt. Rutherford, Rl. Engineers; Dr. Draper, Inspector-Gen. of Hospitals; Mr. Fidler, Deputy Commissary General; and Major Harpour, A.D.C. and Judge-Advocate: arrived in the Gulf of Paria on the 22d March. On the 23d his Excellency landed under a salute from Sea Fort Battery, Port of Spain, and proceeded to St. James' to inspect the troops and barracks commanded by Col. Mein, 74th Regt. On Monday, 25th March, his Excellency inspected the detachment 74th at St. Joseph's, and on Tuesday the detachment of the same regt. at San Fernando. His Excellency will visit all the islands and dependencies of his command, except the continent of British Guiana.

Half-Yearly Public Examinations at Sandhurst.—The usual half-yearly public examinations of the officers and Gentlemen Cadets studying at the Royal Military College, took place on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, 16th, 17th, 18th instant. At the close of the examinations, the following officers were presented with the usual first-class certificates of qualification: Lieutenant J. G. Weir, 29th Regiment, Lieutenant W. H. Cope, Rifle Brigade. In consequence of the very superior talents and acquirements displayed by Lieut. Cope in the highest branches of mathematical science, a special honorary addition was made to that officer's certificate; and the following Gentlemen Cadets, who had completed their qualifications for commissions, were recommended to the General Commanding-in-Chief for appointment to Ensignecies in the Line, without purchase:—1. Hugh J. Campbell; 2. Robert Scott; 3. Richard H. B. Whittingham; 4. Stephen B. Gordon; 5. John W. Thomas; 6. Thomas M. L. Farmer; 7. The Hon. Charles R. Pakenham; 8. Edward F. Crowder; 9. Granville G. C. Stapylton; 10. Maurice Cane; 11. John E. Collings; 12. Robert J. Garden; 13. Arthur J. Otway; 14. Edward B. Cureton; 15. Edward C. Legh; 16. Robert S. Parker; 17. George H. M. Jones; 18. Lempster R. Elliott. By the result of the examinations, about fifty other young gentlemen were declared to have made various steps towards qualifying themselves for commissions in those branches of the mathematics which are applicable to Military purposes, in permanent and field fortifications, and the attack and defence of fortresses; in Latin and general history, and in the modern languages; and twenty had also, during the half year, completed the course of professional education, in Military surveying, and thirty-six in the actual construction of intrenchments and saps, in the field pontooning, &c. On the morning of the first day, the battalion of Gentlemen Cadets was, as usual, reviewed by the Commissioners of the institution; and among the Military exhibitions of the second day were the exercises of the riding-school, tracing of field works, making of fascines, gabions, &c., by the hands of the Gentlemen Cadets themselves; and the construction of a pontoon bridge, 12 feet broad, 120 feet long, and capable of bearing light artillery. The bridge was thrown from the shore to an island on the lake in the College grounds, by a class of Gentlemen Cadets, and completed in the short space of 14 minutes. The signal for its commencement was given by the blowing up of a raft on the lake by means of a charge of powder placed in the water several feet below the surface, and fired by a safety fusee, which was made (similar to Bickford's fusee) by two of the gentlemen.

The Military duties are so strict, pressing, and almost incessant, in the manufacturing districts of England, that none of the officers could procure leave to attend the great Chester race meeting, even for an hour. The troops are constantly on patrol, day and night.

When Her Majesty gives a ball, about half-a-dozen invitations are sent to each regiment—Blues, Life Guards, &c.—without specifying the particular officers invited. We believe it is decided by ballot who is to have the honour.—Weekly Paper.

The Military force in the south of Ireland now consists mostly of the 2d Dragoons, the 7th reg. at Kilkenny, the 42d at Limerick, and the Depots of the 5th, 32d, 34th, 36th, 37th, 61st, 66th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 73d, and 87th regs.; and as most of those Depots have been lately considerably weakened by large drafts sent to head-quarters—indeed, to our own knowledge, one or two depots in the south could not lately muster more than 10 or 18 effective men—we do think we are rather over than under the mark in rating the effective force in the south of Ireland at 3000 bayonets.—Limerick Chronicle.

By the Overland Mail, letters from Bombay have reached us up to the 25th March last. The 58th and 61st regs., having been relieved at Ceylon by the 94th and 95th regs., have been ordered to embark for home in the Jupiter and Apollo troop-ships, which conveyed out the two latter corps.

The Royal Artillery, 6th Dragoons (three troops), 17th Lancers, 19th, 22d, 88th, and 97th regiments, assembled on the Fifteen Acres, in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, on Thursday, and fired a feu de joie in honour of the Queen's birth-day. The troops performed several evolutions, under the orders of Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, commanding the forces. The Lord Lieutenant was present. The weather was very favourable, and the spectators numerous, among whom were several fair equestrians.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' INSTITUTION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—With reference to Article 14th * of the Rules and Regulations of the Institution for pensioning Widows and Orphans of Naval and Military Officers, you would confer a great favour on several of your readers in this quarter, by assuring them that, in case of becoming Subscribers to the Fund, they may not endanger the loss of the Government pensions to their Widows. One case will serve as an example:—

A Lieutenant in the Navy, holding four shares in the "Naval Annuitant Society," which would yield, say 44*l.* per annum to the Widow, subscribes to the "Naval Benefit Society," so as to give an additional annuity of 60*l.* (Art. 14), making the whole 104*l.* per annum. Query—Might not the Widow in this case (without children) lose her pension of 50*l.* per annum, in consequence of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty not deeming her to be a "proper object of the public bounty?" See Rules and Orders for granting Pensions, Art. 1 (30th June, 1830), published in the Navy List? I am your constant reader, Bristol, 21st May, 1839. B.

P.S. This is a most important question to set at rest, and should be publicly communicated.

[We consider this to be provided for by Art. 46.—Ed.]

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' INSTITUTION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I am infinitely obliged for the promptitude with which you have favoured my request in giving us the rules and regulations of the proposed "Widows' and Orphans' Institution." Either I do not comprehend them, or else they are intended as a burlesque upon the proverbial poverty of the Naval and Military services. The ostensible object of such an Institution is that of providing for widows and children; which of course implies that subscribers have families. Now, I would be glad to learn by what power of magic officers (take Lieutenants R.N., of 5*s.*, 6*s.*, or 7*s.*—or 9*l.* 5*s.* a year) are, not only to feed, clothe, lodge, and educate those families, seldom less than seven persons in the mess, besides incidental expenses for doctors, agent's commission, postage, &c., and likewise dedicate to a new source of expenditure, as above, the sum of ten shillings a month! But this is not all; there are likewise marriage fines and disparity fines, as profuse in amount as though the members of the United Services were joint proprietors of the mines of Potosi. Guineas by tens, twenties, thirties and forties spoken of, by way of contribution, with far less hesitation than the said family men would be apt to dole out the same number of pence at the butcher's stall! Let us see how Art. 5 bears upon our 5*s.* a day Lieut. with a wife and five children;—his age 40, that of his wife 30; deduct 5 years (the limit of disparity allowed), and he then has to pay for every year beyond that limit as follows, viz., age, 40 to 41—1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, and 5 years disparity, 8*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; to which add (Art. 1.) 10*s.* a month subscription, or 6*l.* a year—14*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; then comes (Art. 3.) the requisition for 20*l.*, which, together with the marriage and other certificates, must accompany the notification of the wish (whether afterwards accepted or not) to become a subscriber. Thus, out of 91*l.* 5*s.*, the Lieut. R.N. has, pour commencer, 34*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* to advance on admission; and, by way of accelerating this abstraction from his worse than footman's stipend, Art. 5 gives him to understand that if he, the said 5*s.* a day Lieut. R.N., or others, take longer than two years to collect this requisite sum of 34*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, without which he cannot be admitted, or exceed that time in reconciling himself to the precarious risk of advancing monies, which may or may not afford an ultimate return, the funds being guarded by restrictive regulations, which appear extremely coercive, that for such contumacy he shall be subjected to the fine of a further sum of 20*l.* (no matter what rank, however, in this case, a perfect equality in payments being established) in addition to the foregoing; nor shall he then be accepted unless he obtain the sanction of a majority of the subscribers assembled in conclave;—total 54*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, which leaves him 37*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* for the creature, comforts of family during 365 days; the Institution being satisfied after this with the exaction of only 10*s.* a month, for so long as it may please Heaven to allow him to sojourn among the inhabitants of earth; at the same time warning him, by Art. 22, not, at his peril, to neglect payments in due season. I need comment no further, as the foregoing will demonstrate that either I do not understand the affair, and shall be glad of an elucidation if erroneous, or else that it is a most excellent fund for the benefit of those whose circumstances in life place them above the want of it; whereas those who stand in need, will find it totally impossible to become subscribers, until they shall learn the art of expending half-a-crown out of sixpence a day, and still walk the middle-stone fearless of creditors.

* Published in N. and M. G. 18th inst.

AN OLD SAILOR.

[We are warm advocates for the establishment of a Benefit Fund for the United Service, and therefore should be glad to find our correspondents offering suggestions for the improvement of the proposed Institution. The Directors have undertaken a very onerous and responsible office; and their first task should be the revisal of the crude regulations that have been put forth. A Benefit Fund for the Army and Navy would, from various contingencies, and under sound regulations, afford much greater advantages to subscribers, their widows and children, than any other life insurance establishment, but at the same time it could not prove prosperous, indeed must fail, unless based on calculations somewhat in proportion to those adopted in Life Insurance Offices. Looking at the rules of the proposed Institution, we understand that the old and the young are to subscribe alike;—a few calculations would show the ruinous result of such an arrangement. We have, according to the promise in our last, this week given the remainder of the Rules and Regulations of this Institution, to which we most heartily wish success.—ED.]

INDIAN REWARDS AND JUSTICE!

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—From long service and intercourse with the world, few enter more warmly into the detail of public events; but I confess I do not understand old officers of long standing and distinguished service are to be wholly overlooked, whilst a favourite of fortune is brought before public notice almost daily without apparent reason. I would be the last to disparage any man. Justice should be impartial, and the oft-made promises of reform should, on this point, be carried out, and there would be more satisfaction and attachment amongst old officers and the troops. Lieutenant Burnes was assistant to Colonel Pottinger in the Cutch province, and, being employed to visit Bokhara and Cabul, he published a book, for which he was promoted to Captain, sent home with good pay, and a Cadetship given to his brother. Such is generally understood to have been his services as an enterprising young man. In a recent mission, and which, by the way, failed without blame of his, the rewards preceded not followed service. He was given by Her Majesty the local and brevet rank of Lieut.-Colonel and knighthood! But whilst all these favours are heaped upon this single individual, and the several papers announce his movements, as if Sir A. Burnes was Governor-General or Commander-in-Chief, little is said of other officers. This morning a public print, in allusion to the Indian news, stated that Sir A. Burnes was gone with a regiment of cavalry and two of infantry, to effect an object! The question is resolved simply. Is Sir A. Burnes employed in a diplomatic or Military capacity? There is no question the former, so the official Gazette announced; then it is by authority that the public are thus misled. No Military man would suppose or be satisfied with Sir A. B. being appointed to a brigade command who has never served as a Field Officer, or even as a Captain regimentally; whose advancement as it is has been most rapid, and whose publication of a work which rests on his own authority, without power of contradiction, has reaped advantages which have been withheld from that superior and distinguished old servant of the India Company, Colonel Pottinger, and whose nephew Lieutenant Eldred Pottinger, displayed a courage and judgment without parallel, excepting in a single instance, and yet he is a Lieutenant still! As far as service goes, he, at least, would be well entitled to the Military rank and knighthood bestowed on the favourite author; but it seems that services are no longer to be considered. Authors, even of novels, obtain pensions, withheld from old officers. It is to be regretted that the information put forth to the public should depend so much on private letters, and that editors should so readily avail themselves of it. There are some who, by this means, seek a popularity and obtain rewards which the old and meritorious officer modestly abstains from; indeed his avocations give him little time or opportunity for such compilations, and, consequently, too often is therefore wholly lost sight of. The now comparatively small gains, even after a long residence beneath a tropical sun, are hardly earned, and I am quite sure that the suggestion which I would offer, through the medium of your valuable journal, will not be lost on others. Be just to all—avoid favouritism—and let faithful services be upheld, as justly entitled to reward. To supersede old officers is galling.

AN OLD OFFICER AND CONSTANT READER.

Oriental Club, Hanover Square, Saturday.

THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I read with some satisfaction a very spirited letter from A Private in this regiment, which appeared in your Gazette No. 325; but I apprehend he is in error when he says that the Court are, as a body, averse to appointing a Serjeant of the Guards to drill the men. I have heard, Sir, from very good authority, that some of the members of that Court desire this measure as much as A Private, who, I presume, is aware there is a much higher power in the regiment than the "Court." I rely upon your impartiality for the insertion of this letter, as it appears to me but fair play only to place the blame, if any, in the proper quarter.

Since the above was written, I have seen a letter in your last Number on the subject of some of our Officers going to Court, and which is written with very bad feeling. That our Officers have an undoubted right to be presented at Court every one will admit; and it gave me great pleasure to see our regiment represented at St. James's by two gentlemen whose respectability and appearance are a credit to the corps. One word to my comrade in conclusion. If the Private would do his exercise better, especially his platoon, and become what is termed a good soldier, he will, no doubt, in due time, get promoted to a pair of epaulettes himself, when he can, if he thinks proper, abstain from being presented at St. James's, as perhaps his appearance there might doubtless be considered "so derogatory to the character of the British Army, and so injurious to the reputation of Her Majesty's Court." ANOTHER PRIVATE OF THE H.A.C.

RECRUITS FOR THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The late measures for the increase of the Army (although the alacrity with which thousands, on the lowering of the standard height, flocked to enrol themselves on the list of their country's defenders, proves the people's game not extinct,) nevertheless give rise to much melancholy reflection on the personal degeneracy of the nation, and confirm the observations which I have frequently offered on this subject through the columns of the N. and M. G. It was found difficult to obtain even grown men for the peace establishment at 5 feet 6 inches. The standard was lowered half-an-inch, and you soon afterwards remarked—"Reducing the standard from 5 feet 6 inches to 5 feet 5 inches, and not requiring men to be twenty years of age for regiments in India, would, we are persuaded, do more towards the success of recruiting, than doubling, or even trebling the bounty." This further reduction has been made, and still men come in slowly. Such of the new levies as fall under your own inspection, you describe as generally short, but stout. There were, however, as I have been credibly informed, numbers enlisted in some of the districts, who did not answer to the latter part of this description, and, at best, although I am not one of those who, as you somewhere observe, from constantly seeing the Guards, "think that, to have good soldiers, we must have men six feet high;" and bearing, moreover, in respectful remembrance of what the Baron de Berenger has advanced in favour of a paucity of inches, I still think that when a race of men begin to decrease longitudinally in bodily dimensions, their latitude and corresponding strength soon partake of the diminution: at all events, the fact shows a national change in the human animal. I am partial to the old English breed, who were tall as well as stout; and at least it cannot be denied that there is something dignified in superior stature. I therefore say, "May our shadows never be less!" It is true that the medical scrutiny to which recruits are compelled to submit is perhaps unreasonably minute and particular. It is possible, also, that Chartist principles may cause many to hang back; and it is certain that thousands of our finest labourers, who might otherwise come into the ranks, are employed on the railroads. I also entertain no doubt that if the myriads of born Britons settled or sojourning in Canada and elsewhere* were collected together, their average stature, &c., would far exceed that of their countrymen left behind. Still it is plain that a real degeneracy, capable of proof and demonstration, does exist amongst us; and this would, in my opinion, be sufficiently deplorable, if it only extended to the body, which, with leave of the useful knowledge gentlemen, I know not to be the case.

But when you say—"It has been amply proved already by extensive inquiries and tables of stature in our countries, that 5 feet 6 inches is a stature at the age of 18 beyond the average in the British Islands," I should be tempted to think you even now rate as a trifle too low, unless confining the estimate to great towns, or those manufacturing and mechanical classes from which probably the most numerous, though not most valuable class of our recruits come. If the tables you allude to are those of M. Quetelet, on which some calculations on this subject in the U. S. Journal a year or two back were founded, I think they can scarcely be taken as an accurate guide for our population, being, if I mistake not, intended to apply to some continental nation, or to the human race in general. Quetelet estimated the English average height at above 5 feet 9 inches; but this was doubtless too high, being taken from that of a large number of students at the University of Cambridge.

But although I regret the necessity for lowering our military standard, I do not question the policy of doing so; on the contrary, as I believe one great cause of our diminished stature has been the sending multitudes of our finest men annually into unhealthy climates, thence never to return, or to return debilitated, and incapable of adding robust recruits to the State (fortes creantur fortibus), I think this very measure, although it may render the appearance of our Army less imposing for a time, may, by improving the nation at large, of which our soldiers are but a part, thus ultimately make the Army itself what it once was.

I therefore so far differ from a generally excellent paper lately published in the N. & M. Gazette, and called "Materials for the Army," and which advocates the "enlisting the flower of the youth of our country," that although I would render the service desirable for such recruits, I would not refuse others, and would endeavour to raise their character as far as possible by a course of discipline and recreation similar to that which the writer of that essay points out. I do not mean that I would accept any recruits of bad character or dwarfish and puny frames, but I would not insist on rejecting all those who did not appear expressly formed by nature for heroes, being confident that although we might thus maintain a most magnificent force for many years, we should in time repent having so carefully extracted the essence of our population for the purposes of a service not confined as in most of the continental states to home duty, but condemned to sure and almost perpetual banishment!

Whilst on the subject of the essay I have just quoted, I may be allowed to notice a few slips, perhaps merely of the pen or the press, which have crept into it, and tend to disfigure its otherwise consistent and beneficial tenor. In one sentence, "mere dandies and radicals in principle, or roués in practice," are classed somewhat drolly together. I could certainly name some dandy radicals; but I do not think that the two qualities are combined together so remarkably often as to justify their present juxtaposition in the essay. A mere dandy is incapable of any exertion, whilst a radical, good or bad, is generally at least an active personage. Again, whilst military men are exhorted to read "military history, and all other learned and ennobling subjects" in one passage, in another we are told that those who "embrace a variety of pursuits will fall short of all of them." We are also told that "the lower classes" are decidedly enemies "to the soldier." If the writer means those classes low in spirit, mind, and habits—the Humes and Humists, high and low, for instance—I doubt not that he is perfectly correct; but from the lower ranks of the people the privates of our Army are, and evidently must in the long run be principally taken—and such of these classes as have not had their unhappy heads turned by the schoolmaster have a strong native military spirit. How then can they be enemies to soldiers,—enemies moreover to their own kith and kin?

May 7th, 1839. T. T.

* The convicts of Australia, &c., excepted, numbers of whom are of the most diminutive classes of the community. I do not speak of banished offenders.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It would be a novelty, indeed, if a writer on any subject (especially on a grievance connected with, or suffered by, a public body) should escape being misunderstood or misrepresented; I cannot, therefore, feel surprised at the misconstruction of the Three Chevrons, as exhibited in the letter addressed to you on the subject of "Drill." My remarks were not "so general"* as to induce your readers to imagine that the evil was universal." Your readers, Sir, know better; and, had I been foolish enough to make so sweeping a charge, would promptly have contradicted it. Your readers, Sir, both noble and humble, feel intensely the necessity of eradicating the few evils that remain in the "British Military system," but are not so obtuse of intellect as to exaggerate them or expect their immediate abolition. Well do we know, Sir, that there are corps where the evil complained of in my last is utterly repudiated—and I have no doubt but the regiment in which mes trois frères are serving is one of that class—then where is the necessity for the disclaimer? None whatever: "let the galled jade wince." With regard to the "Three Chevrons being ignorant of the manner in which they DO THINGS at Chatham," never having been on duty there, I am bound to remark, that since my first visit to that garrison on duty in 1816, subsequently in 1820, and again lately, I question if so great an improvement has taken place in any station in the United Kingdom. Witness the establishment of an extensive Military Bath—a Garrison Compassionate Fund—an Hospital for Women and Children—and security of money, sobriety, and safe journey of the hundreds of invalids to their homes, redounding to the infinite honour of the promoters and supporters. I have only to add, in reply to the closing line of my treble friend's letter, that "all drill-yards ARE, like Chatham," a mixture of good and evil; let those who have most experience say where the former or latter predominate. And now, Sir, to my task, lest my silence of three weeks, "from being so general," might induce your readers to imagine it would be continual. Not so, Sir; it would, indeed, be

> "Strange if the mind, that fiery particle,
> Should be puffed out by a single article."

But observing the vast increase of your letters in type, I have held rein for a breathing space, and am amply repaid by the perusal of your valued correspondents, who, notwithstanding their plain and forcible arguments in favour of improved bayonets, &c. &c., and the introduction of a bayonet exercise, have been misquoted. Arthur asks for cases where it might become valuable. Did it ever occur to an Infantry man, cut off from the main body by a sudden dash of Cavalry, to offer the defence suggested by Maître d'Armes in his 1st, 2d, and 4th guards? Never, Sir. Trained to the mere manual, he might, after firing, and, as a matter of course, missing, come to the charge with the muzzle higher than the regulation, but down he'd come from his perpendicular, either by the exertion of the man or horse. The advocates of a bayonet exercise, and the introduction of swords for occasional use, have been designated by a writer in a contemporary publication as contemning the "war-honoured but peace-despised bayonet." Thus it is and ever will be with the advocates for improvement: rash innovation must be and is despised by every intelligent mind; but when an improvement is suggested, let it be tried and tested in every possible shape,—the result, whether for or against, will be beneficial in some way or other. The bayonet (and musket) is not despised, but considered inefficient to the duties it has to perform: its size, its mode of fixing, the weight of the musket, its incorrect sight, its bad bore, its clumsy stock, and, above all, its chest-compressing cross-belts, with cartouch-box externally playing (unless in slow time) Saint Vitus's dance on our rear, are all capable of improvement. It is no argument to say that "our soldiers always fought well with these accoutrements, &c., and will continue to do so." They fought, and conquered too, Sir, in greased and powdered heads, queues, leather breeches, and jack-boots, alas the day! Some of us have lived to witness their extinction. They fought, and conquered too, Sir, in helmets, bearskin and basket caps, varnished and tin-lined chacos, trowsers, and highlows. These have all been borne cheerfully. What does the British soldier care about obstacles, led by gallant officers,— which, with scarcely a single exception, he always has been? His only idea was to "storm the place, and take it!" But will it not occur to the thinking mind how much better or with what less sacrifice of life all this might have been attained? Surely it must. Then close to the front, and, by a determined and vigorous attack, relieve us from heavy chacos, stiff unyielding leather stocks, cross-belts, and weighty knapsacks charged with (as well as for) necessaries, and provide us with a light and serviceable dress, waist-belts, good firelocks, correctly sighted, percussioned, a bayonet that will not come off in the manual exercise, and the strength that has hitherto been wasted in supporting (almost) useless burdens will, with the use in cases of emergency of a short sword, render a true and faithful account, written in legible characters, on the enemy who next shows himself in the field. CHEVRON.

COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As a constant reader of the N. & M. G., and a close observer of all the letters emanating from men who so fearlessly use their pens as they formerly wielded their swords, I must particularly offer my tribute of praise to the talented, the original Tristram: he not only deserves the thanks of the "blues" afloat and on shore, but a substantial proof of our opinion in this age of plate-giving. I, for one (on the point of coming down something weighty towards a tea-service to be presented to a worthy divine), would be happy to join in an offering to the able champion of Naval rights. Tristram has done much, but the Augean stable is not yet cleansed! I entirely agree in his remarks as to the efficiency of the Coast Guard;—the organisation of this service is near perfection. The crews being well paid, and sharing handsomely in seizures, &c., &c., do their duty, not only with spirit, but act with fidelity, and are most highly respected and looked up to by the farmers on the coast as a safeguard! Capt. Bowles has admirably disciplined this force, yet much remains to be done in ameliorating the situation of the Lieutenants. To them, as gentlemen, there are many asperities which continue to rub and goad their feelings; and they are on the one hand told the service is a civil one, and on the other a half-Military or Naval one. Let it be under the Board of Admiralty,—not connected with the Customs. This may be done by a stroke of the pen, and without infringing on the present internal and, in general, excellent arrangements. Train the men to gunnery—separate the Lieutenants from the crew as to numbering them—let the Chief Boatman be No. 1—the Lieutenant, not the mercantile appellation of "Chief Officer," but Commanding Officer, and to have his pendant flying, and his service to reckon, for every two years in the Coast Guard, as one afloat.

The subject of paying Military honours to Inspecting Commanders has been often discussed, but not settled. A friend of mine, a Lieutenant, who served the whole war, and shared in some of its most gallant actions, found it impossible to push his way to the second epaulette; he each time quitted the First Lord's Levee in sorrow—I may say in disgust—and joined with others similarly placed in giving vent to his feelings by a growl. A growl is the especial prerogative of a Naval man; and in the good old time, when England's heroes were nursed in all their glory in a cock-pit birth, how soothing to the feelings was a growl, after being pestered during a four hours' watch by a mizen staysail braile! Then have I, on board the old G——h off Brest, in 1804,

> "Scorn'd all command, drove lawless away to hell,
> And d——d the power allowed a white lapel."

In the Coast Guard, even, there are some causes for a growl. Let the subject of the honours to be paid a Commander be clearly understood, and as a Lieutenant is forbid to write to Capt. Bowles but through his Inspecting Commander, I request your insertion of this letter, that the gallant Comptroller-General may see how the highest Military honours are exacted by the Inspecting Commanders; that in this civil service, and in which martial law is not recognised, a semi-Military appearance is ordered to be kept up—a uniform appointed to be worn, and the force trained to the use of the sword and musket. My friend above alluded to, his quiver full of blessings, fruits of matrimonial bliss, not wishing to continue as an idler on half-pay, bore up to the port of refuge, the Coast Guard, and was soon snugly moored in a cottage where all the articles of life are cheap. He entered on his new duties with zeal, but considered the service in rather a more military point of view than he ought to have done; the truth flashing upon him of the degradation to his Military uniform by the exaction from him of high Military honours by the Inspecting Commander. The great man arrives in the quiet fishing hamlet of ——; his bits of blood, the wonder of all the urchins in the place—his groom alongside of him—pistols and letter bag over the quarter, and coin for the cattle lashed on astern. Up goes the jack to the mast-head—down tumble the crew to the watch-house—the C.O. is ordered to have his men under arms—the crowd press eagerly up to the very parapet to see the "Review." There, at the right of his "tail" of six men, is placed this veteran officer—all attention! The I.C. approaches—not in uniform; he might be, in the opinion of an indifferent spectator, a coachman! a butcher! a bagman! However, this man is the man; and deeply did I enter into my friend's humiliated feelings, which betrayed the tinge upon his cheek, when I heard him give the word "Present arms!" and bring his sword and hand to the Military salute: the honour was acknowledged by a nod of the head, and the hands of the man so unworthy of the honour were thrust into his pockets. This at once disgusted my friend, and commenced a coolness between him and the Commander injurious to the service.

I do not pretend to be a reformer; I want the talent, not the zeal, of Tristram. Officers should be spared these vexations. The numbers of old Military men residing in the neighbourhood, one of whom, a General Officer, intimate with my friend, has witnessed this burlesque; all despise it, as well as the arrogance of the man who so unwarrantably exacts, and so ignorantly receives, a salute from an officer who ranks with a Captain in the Army.—CRAYON.

SUBALTERNS RECEIVING DOUBLE HALF-PAY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Men who have, or suppose they have, grievances to complain of, are apt to make comparisons. It is well known to you, Mr. Editor, how many poor fellows there are holding Subalterns' commissions in the Army, who served honourably and bravely during a great part of the arduous struggle in Spain and France, who now with large families, and verging fast on old age, are receiving the miserable pittance of a Subaltern's half-pay. There are also others who, after purchasing their commissions, had their constitutions ruined by serving in unhealthy climates, who have been forced to take a commuted allowance and retire from the service. This being a fact well known to Military men, will it be believed that there are also many others (lucky fellows) who never served a day out of England, and some of them who never wore the British uniform six months, now absolutely receiving double half-pay? I allude to Officers of Militia who extended their services, with the rank they held, into the Line and Provisional Battalions at the close of the war in 1814; few of them ever joined their regiments, but were placed on half-pay, and again took Subalterns' commissions in the Militia, and have to the present time been receiving the half-pay of the Militia along with that of the Line.

Really, Sir, after the hardships and privations experienced for so many years by Subalterns of long and meritorious service, under the plea of economy and retrenchment, it seems a most unpardonable neglect that such an act of injustice has been allowed to exist so long, and cannot fail to be galling to the feelings of many gallant fellows who "deserve well of their country."—AN OLD SUB OF 1806.

[We publish this letter, though we disapprove of its contents. There are a few cases of Subalterns who volunteered to the Line living now on half-pay, and who also received retired allowances from the Militia. This is specially provided for by the Militia Acts, and the Appropriation Act also. We see no reason to begrudge the trifling good fortune of the individuals, and rather suspect our correspondent has written his letter in pique.—ED.]

CLOTHING OF THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The change in the dress of the Army made by His Majesty King William IV. was considered by all ranks most judicious, as regards comfort, neatness and economy. Much superfluity of costume was done away with by that worthy Sovereign, whose constant attention to the interests of the Army and Navy gained him the goodwill of all. Had he lived, greater alterations no doubt would have been effected; and the example of a simple and useful costume being once made, the prejudice in favour of a quantity of lace, &c. would have been as readily got over as the old one respecting pig-tails, hair-grease, and such-like encumbrances, without which, a few years back, no man was considered to have a Military appearance.

I have been in some measure induced to scribble my opinions on this subject from observing the plain soldier-like appearance of the officers of one of the regiments of Household Cavalry in what is, I suppose, their jeune de guerre, and the elegant similarity of this dress to that of the privates; the difference is little else than in the quality of materials, imperceptible to the closest observation an enemy could make, but easy to be distinguished by the admiring eyes of friendly observers. Why, therefore, should there be such a glaring difference between the officers and privates of the Infantry, the very nature of whose service in the field constantly brings them close to an enemy's marksmen? It is certainly necessary to make a change, for in his present costume an officer is almost certain of being picked out, whether in full dress or cloaked; for the difference between the blue cloak and privates' gray great coats makes the officer equally conspicuous. To effect this, divest the officer's coates of all ornaments but the epaulette; let it be single-breasted, having simply the regimental facings on the collar and cuffs, and this to be the dress for all parades and duties under arms; the present blue frock never to be worn when the privates are under arms with their officers, but kept only as an undress for walking or riding about, and ordinary barrack duties. The officer's cloak also to be gray instead of blue. In regard to the N.C. officers and men, do away with all the white worsted lace at present in use; make their coates the same in pattern as the officers', with brass buttons instead of leaden ones, and give them a pair of yellow worsted epaulettes that can easily be taken off when the great coat is worn. The present style of coates, with its laced collar, cuffs, &c., is only adapted for levees, balls, and such-like exhibitions, for which purposes it should be solely kept; in the field it must always be very dissimilar to the private's dress, and by day-light has a shabby and dirty appearance as soon as the lace begins to blacken, which very soon takes place, particularly as the British officer is so frequently on sea-voyages. Gazette may obtain, at the Office, 19, Catherine-street; of Mr. Burrill, Library, Chatham; and of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, Dublin, such back Numbers as are not out of print. Subscribers in Ireland can procure their copies from Mr. Yates, which will save postage.

We contradicted last week a paragraph going the round of the press, attributing to political motives the non-promotion of the Bishop of Exeter's son. This week the Reverend Divine has himself contradicted the paragraph, and declares it unauthorised by him or any of his family.

The letter of "Anti-Mildew" can only appear as an advertisement.

Sir Henry Fane, Commander-in-Chief in India, arrived at Bombay from Scinde on the 5th of last March. When our letters left Bombay, on the 26th March, his Excellency was confined to his room by a severe attack of gout. Head-quarters and staff from Bengal, were to remain at Bombay during the operations in Scinde, and to the North Westward.

The officer whose melancholy suicide was recorded in our last, was Capt. R. B. Galloway (retired Rl. Marines, 1826). We mention this, as there is an officer of the same name a Commander, R N. (1806).

The letter of "A Staff Assistant Surgeon, South Hospital, Chatham," is under consideration.

Although we have this week devoted considerable space to our correspondents, we yet have to ask the indulgence of several esteemed friends.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1839.

THERE are two subjects connected with the Naval profession, the study of which we have frequently recommended to young officers,—we mean the theory and practice of steam navigation and of gunnery. It has been our custom, whenever, in the course of our labours, we met with any work calculated to facilitate these studies, by elucidating in clear terms points hitherto imperfectly explained, totally omitted, or involved in a cloud of algebraic definitions, to invite the attention of those engaged in improving themselves to the existence of such facilities, by reference in our leading columns, instead of dealing with them after the manner of ordinary reviews.

About a year and a half ago, Captain T. F. Simmons, R.A., published some very clever remarks upon the "Effect of Heavy Ordnance, directed against Ships of War," and he has just launched a pamphlet, supplementary to his former work, called for by the new armament, the bored-up guns, and recent experiments on penetrations, &c., made in England and the Continent. This he has entitled "A Discussion on the Present Armament of the Navy," and the indefatigable and talented author explains many points hitherto involved in obscurity. For instance, it is a well-known axiom in projectiles that the air's resistance to bodies in their flight is as their surfaces or the squares of their diameters, whereas the power to overcome the resistance to the air increases with their weight, or as the cubes of their diameters. This is an unerring law of nature, and it should prove, in practice, that, with equal charges, guns of large calibre possess a greater range, and that the extent of the shot's flight, as well as its velocity, in every stage of its progress, is augmented in increased calibre.

Now, we all know, that in practice there is little difference in the range of an 18, 24, or 32-pounder; whereas, according to the law alluded to, the largest gun should exhibit a considerable advantage; and this has puzzled practical men, who, ready enough to admit the value of theoretical study, are desirous that [illegible] so derived should be borne out in practice. They are now for the first time made aware—for we do not remember to have seen attention drawn to the circumstance hitherto—that in the regulated windage of guns, a larger allowance is given to the greatest calibre, and this to the extent of compensating the advantage they would otherwise possess; by providing, that as the shot increases in size and weight, a greater portion of the charge shall be blown away, with the amiable intention, we suppose, of producing an equality in the range of all long guns.

Captain Simmons has effectually exposed the absurdity of this anomaly, and made some excellent remarks upon windage, particularly as regards the bored-up guns, respecting which he has adduced a point which we trust to see explained, for he makes it appear that the greatest portion of metal has been taken out of the lightest gun, for which we can assign no reason unless that of reducing the expansive effect of the charge on the weaker gun, by providing that some of the powder may be blown away, and thus secure equal charges for all guns of that calibre, on all decks, to avoid confusion. This is an ingenious contrivance certainly, but one which we do not think would influence Captain Hastings; if, therefore, there is a mistake in this matter, it certainly needs explanation. When noticing Captain Simmons's former work, we alluded to the practice on Sutton Heath in 1818. We repeat, that the results of that practice are utterly worthless. The affair was, in fact a piece of unmitigated humbug, and performed solely for the purpose of puffing Congreve's gun; we had it from one of the persons employed that the most unworthy trickery was resorted to. Capt. Simmons accounts for the great superiority displayed by Congreve's piece by reason of its sensitiveness on the trunnions, and supposes that the muzzle flew up during the recoil, and thus produced an elevation. Without entering into the point, whether a shot is or is not deflected by the recoil of the gun, we may just observe, that unless the coin was abstracted, or flew out, the breach could not be lowered; and, moreover, that all platforms,—ship's decks as well as garrison,—are arched or inclined so as to produce a contrary effect, and, in fact, raise the breach, consequently depressing instead of elevating the muzzle during recoil.

We recommend the judges, during the proposed trials at Deal, to look close to these and other matters; to take care that the shot are of the same gauge and weight; and to insure that all things are assimilated, if it is proposed to draw any useful result from their labours.

Captain Simmons's Supplement will be acceptable to the Naval and Military reader, as containing the accounts of the recent practice at Brest and Metz—the foreign weights and quantities being reduced to English standard. In fact, every Officer who considers it worth his while to improve himself on this important subject should possess this and the former book published by Captain Simmons, at so small a price as to be within the reach of all. We trust the gallant and talented Officer will prosecute his inquiries, for he evidently possesses a comprehensive knowledge of the subject, and nothing, however minute, appears to escape his discrimination. We shall take an early opportunity to remark upon some other subjects he has treated on, particularly the proposal for boring up the heavy 32-pounders for lower decks into larger calibre.

WE have on more than one occasion noticed the increasing interest taken by the public in the well-being of the Army and Navy, and this interest seems to have increased exactly as that of our legislators has lessened. On Military and Naval matters, as also on our relations with Foreign States, the Ministry has sunk into a deep apathy. A struggle for the retention of place, or a contest for a seat in the House, are the only indications of power or of strength. Our Army, as also the Navy, seems delivered over to the public—and the requisite augmentations in both are for the first time urged by the Press, which formerly was exercised as a check on overgrown establishments. We have met additional confirmation of our views on this subject, by perusing a very able article on "Peace or War," which has appeared in the West of England New Monthly Magazine. The writer is well acquainted with his subject, and clearly proves our utter want of means, military and naval, even for the duties of peace, with the present establishments, and that we have no immediate way of increasing our Army. The following extracts merit attention:—

"Putting out of account entirely the vast continent of India, the colonial possessions of Great Britain embrace an extent of territory equal to the whole of Europe; and for the defence of these enormous possessions, scattered nearly over the globe, we have an Army of 84,000 - 16,000 of which are employed in Ireland alone. Let us look at the Peace-establishments of some of our neighbours. Russia, half-a-million; Austria, 200,000; Prussia, 150,000; and our nearest neighbour, France, with only a limited territory in N. Africa, two islands in the W. Indies, and one in the East, to defend- France, with a population little more than double of the British Islands, and no colonial territories of any extent—can parade 400,000 troops of the line, and a million of National Guards any Saturday morning she pleases. In order to put this country on a footing in the smallest degree respectable, the Peace-establishment of the Army ought to be 150,000 men; of which 20,000 Cavalry, and 10,000 Artillery; and we should never have fewer than forty sail of the line, and a proportion of frigates, sloops, &c, either at sea or ready to start in a week. We may be required to state how this addition of force can be kept up without an immense increase of expense and taxation! We will ask, in turn, how our questioners suppose the continental nations above named can support their large establishments! We will answer them. By a very simple and easy method. They allow one-third or one half of their troops that have been enrolled to be absent on furlough without pay. This plan has never been even thought of in England."

"Let us look to our present means, if called for on an emergency. It requires considerable time to make even militia soldiers—they have not been called out, or the ballots completed, for some years. Many months would therefore be required for anything like organisation. The Volunteer-force, whose arms rang in every parish in England, has gone to the tomb of the Capulets: in fact, there is now a new generation. The actual force of this country is limited to 84,000 regular troops of all arms—56,000 are scattered over every part of the globe, habitable or desert; of these, 30,000 are in the territories of the East India Company, and while there, of no expense to this country. There may be set down, on an average, 2000 men as in a sort of transition state, being reinforcements going out, and invalids coming home."—"Thus 58,000 are disposed of; leaving 26,000—16,000 for Ireland, and 10,000 for the British and Channel Islands—including the Household Troops and Artillery. This will be sufficient to show the inadequacy of the force for any sudden call."

We have established, we think, the fact of our being unable to meet the demands on our Army for colonial duties by our own previous statements, and by these extracts, and we trust shortly to learn that a very considerable increase will be made to our Naval and Military Establishments. The late additions to both have been "a mere drop in a bucket."

WE annex a plan for classifying and improving the rank, pay, &c. &c., of Naval Officers, furnished by a correspondent. We concur in the justice and utility of some of the suggestions; others we think objectionable, particularly those which relate to junior officers, or Cadets serving without pay, because such a regulation would entirely preclude from the service the sons of old officers, and all those, in fact, whose friends are not in a condition to support them entirely during their noviciate. We like to see scions of noble families enter the Navy, because their adoption of the profession adds to its respectability, and insures the support of their relatives in Parliament and in influential situations, and they generally make good officers; but our correspondent's plan tends to too great exclusiveness in this respect. As regards his proposition respecting Pursers, we do not concur in his views. The emoluments of Pursers are great, certainly, in large ships, but so is their charge and their responsibility; and, moreover, the country benefits from this, because the larger the balance bill, the more saving is effected. Now, if the Purser is relieved from all this responsibility, and has no interest in saving, beyond the mere performance of his duty, it is preposterous to give him as much pay as the Captain of a first-rate, who has a large establishment and so much higher rank to maintain. Notwithstanding these objections, the plan itself contains much matter worth the serious attention of those distinguished individuals who are labouring on the Commission for the benefit of the service.

Captains.—All Captains to wear the crown and anchor on their epaulettes, to be paid according to the following Table:—

1st Division.	2nd Division.	3rd Division.
Full-pay, 800*l.* per annum.	650*l.* per annum.	500*l.* per annum.
Half pay, 15*s.* per diem.	14*s.* per diem.	13*s.* per diem.

The above are equal divisions of the Active List; and the rate of the ship a Captain commands is no longer to have anything to do with his personal pay.

Commanders—To wear the same sized bullion epaulettes as now, with an anchor on each, and to be paid according to seniority, as follows:—

1st Division.	2nd Division.	3rd Division.
Full-pay, 400*l.* per annum.	350*l.* per annum.	300*l.* per annum.
Half pay, 11*s.* per diem.	10*s.* per diem.	9*s.* per diem.

Lieutenants—To sit as members of Courts-Martial; to wear two plain epaulettes of the same sized bullion as that now composing the sword-knot;—all other parts of uniform to remain as at present. The Active List to be divided into three equal parts, and to be paid as follows:

1st Division.	2nd Division.	3rd Division.
Full-pay, 200*l.* per annum.	180*l.* per annum.	160*l.* per annum.
Half-pay, 7*s.* per diem.	6*s.* per diem.	5*s.* per diem.

Lieutenants in command of small vessels to have the highest rate of pay, 200*l.* per annum; and all First Lieutenants to have 10*l.* per annum more than the pay of the division to which they belong, except the first division, whose pay (200*l.* per annum) is never to be exceeded. Lieutenants embarking in mercantile pursuits, or in any way withdrawing from the service from choice, are to be placed on the permanent Retired List, with 5*s.* per diem if belonging to the first or second division, or 4*s.* per diem if belonging to the third division, which retired pay is never afterwards to be increased. Lieutenants being from constant ill health rendered incapable of serving (which must be proved by medical survey), to be placed on the Retired List, with the half-pay of the division to which they then belong, and which is never afterwards to be increased.

Lieutenants who, from wounds or hurts, are rendered incapable of serving, are to be placed on the Retired List, with the half-pay of the division to which they then belong, and the pensions to which their wounds or hurts entitle them, according to the medical regulations of the service on that head established: in this, and in all other cases, no increase of retired pay ever to be made after an officer is on the Retired List.

All First Lieutenants to be chosen by the Captains and Commanders as at present, i. e. with their own consent, but all other Lieutenants to take their regular turns afloat, beginning with the youngest on the list.

N.B.—The present mode of making Lieutenants go to sea, is very vexatious and unfair. Some are constantly kept afloat, and forced to lead a life of exile, while others are allowed to remain ashore for many years at a time. I am now in my 18th year in the service, and have only been on shore four months in that time, and when I am paid off again, I shall have completed 20 years! But, unless the present system is altered, I fear that I have very little chance of a rest. Country and friends are to me almost unknown. Surely this is neither requisite nor right; i. e. in time of peace.

Mates—To be appointed by Warrant from the Admiralty or from a Commander-in-Chief abroad (the same as all other officers); to be in future termed "Sub-Lieutenants; to rank with Lieutenants in the Army, according to the dates of their first Warrant; to receive 80*l.* per annum in all ships paid by quarterly bills; never to be dismissed from ship or service by any authority less than that of a Court-Martial; the coat they now wear to be made double-breasted, and in full dress they are to wear the same trousers and sword-belt as Lieutenants—in all other respects their uniform to remain as it now is *; they are not on any account to be promoted until they have completed 21 years of age, and are never to remain unpromoted after they have completed 25 years of age. Whenever they are Acting Lieutenants pro tempore, they are to receive the pay and prize-money of that rank, and to be obliged to mess in the Ward-room, but they are not to be obliged to wear the uniform unless they choose to do so; they are to receive no half-pay, and are never to be unemployed more than two months, except from choice, in which case, if they do not apply for a ship within six months from the date of being last paid off, they are to be considered as having quitted the service, and are not to be allowed to enter it again, unless they can prove, by such medical authority as the Admiralty may appoint, that sickness has been the sole cause of their absence and non-application for employment.

* Perhaps it would be better to let Sub-Lieutenants wear one Lieutenant's epaulette on right shoulder.

Masters' Assistants—To enter the service as such at the complete age of 15 (doing away with the term Volunteer 2d Class); to rank with and be subordinate to Midshipmen, taking precedence with the junior Ensign in the Army; to receive no pay until they become 2d Masters, and to be subject to the same regulations as Midshipmen with respect to remaining unemployed, &c.

Midshipmen—To be so called on entering the service (doing away with the term volunteer), not to be allowed to enter until they have completed 15 years of age; to rank with Ensigns in the Army according to the dates of their first appointments; to receive no pay until they become Sub-Lieutenants, which they are to be directly they have passed their examinations in seamanship, navigation, and gunnery; to pass at any time between the full ages of 19 and 21, but not to be allowed to do so before or after those ages. Should a Midshipman fail in this he must quit the service, being certainly in that case incapable of properly filling any higher rank in the Navy. Midshipmen never to be out of employment, i. e., they are to be subject to the same regulations on that head as the Sub-Lieutenants.

Second Masters—To receive the same pay as Sub-Lieutenants in all rates, except when in charge of vessels commanded by Lieutenants, when they are to receive 120*l.* per annum, and the pilotage in and out of every place (where pilotage is usually given) for the three first times of their having been there: but after that it is to be considered their duty, and no pilotage will be allowed; the examinations to qualify them for the rank of Master to remain the same as at present; no Second Master to be appointed as such until he has completed 18 years of age; and none are to be appointed in charge of small vessels until they have completed 21 years of age; neither are they to be promoted before that time, nor to remain unpromoted after having completed 25 years of age; to receive no half-pay, and to be subject to the same regulations as the Sub-Lieutenants with respect to remaining unemployed; to be subordinate to the Sub-Lieutenants, but to rank with them, i. e., they are to take the same precedence as the junior Lieutenant of the Army; uniform as it is now.

Masters—To be paid according to their seniority in three equal divisions—

1st Division.	2d Division.	3d Division.
Full-pay, 180*l.* per annum.	170*l.* per ann.	160*l.* per ann.
Half-pay, 7*s.* per diem.	6*s.* per diem.	5*s.* per diem.

They are only to be required (after they have served three years afloat as Master) to pass one examination, viz., that which will qualify them to take charge of any rate in any part of the British seas, &c., after which no further examination can be necessary; they are to receive the full pilotage (usually allowed) for the three first times they take their ships in and out of places previously unknown to them: but after the third time it is to be considered their duty, and no pilotage will be allowed; to be appointed to different rates according to seniority, the same as Pursers †.

Surgeons—To be paid according to seniority in three equal divisions of the list, viz.—

1st Division.	2d Division.	3d Division.
Full-pay, 300*l.* per ann.	250*l.* per ann.	200*l.* per ann.
Half-pay, 10*s.* per diem.	9*s.* per diem.	8*s.* per diem.

Assistant-Surgeons—To remain in all respects as at present, and to rank the same as Sub-Lieutenants.

Pursers—Instead of being allowed to make money afloat as now, are in future to receive regular salaries, according to the rates of their ships, one-third being withheld from them until their ships are paid off and accounts passed; the victualling stores, &c., being of course supplied by Government, and placed in their (the Pursers') charge.

Salary for 1st rate	£800 per annum.
— 2d rate	750	—	Half-pay list in three equal divisions—1st div., 6*s.* per diem; 2d, 5*s.*, 3d, 4*s.*
— 3d rate	700	—
— 4th rate	650	—
— 5th rate	600	—
— 6th rate	400	—
— Sloop	300	—

† 1st Division to be appointed, in regular rotation, to line-of-battle ships (i. e., 1st, 2d, and 3d rates); 2d Division the same to 4th and 5th rates; and 3d Division to 6th rates and sloops.

Clerks—To enter as such at the complete age of 16; to receive the same pay as Sub-Lieutenants, and to rank the same; to pass the necessary examinations so qualify them for the duties of Pursers or Secretaries at the complete age of 19 or 20, but not after that time, and not on any account to be made Pursers until they have completed 21 years of age, and never to remain unpromoted after the complete age of 25. Not on any account to be appointed as Secretaries until they have completed 25 years of age.

N.B.—My reason for giving pay to Clerks and not to Midshipmen is, because the Clerk has no intermediate step to gain between entering the service and becoming a Purser, whereas the Midshipman must be a Sub-Lieutenant before he can be a Lieutenant.

Clerks in charge of stores, in small vessels, to receive 150*l.* per annum, but are not to hold such appointments until they have completed 21 years of age. One third of their salaries is to be withheld until they are paid off, and have passed their accounts. Clerks are not to receive half-pay, and are to be subject to the same regulations with respect to remaining unemployed, as Sub-Lieutenants, &c.

Gunners, Boatswains, and Carpenters, to be paid alike in three equal divisions of the seniority list, viz.,

1st Division.	2nd Division.	3d Division.
£100 per annum.	£90 per annum.	£70 per annum.

The rates of the ships in which they are serving are not to affect their pay, and they are to be appointed to seagoing ships by the Admiral's and Captain's selections, subject to the approval of the Admiralty. No man is to be made a "Warrant Officer," i. e., Gunner, Boatswain, or Carpenter, until he has completed 25 years of age. Boatswains to be selected from Boatswain's Mates only; Gunners to be selected from Gunner's Mates only; Carpenters to be selected from Carpenter's Mates only; or, at any rate, from 1*st Class* Petty Officers only.

2nd Class.—Commander's Coxswains, Ship's Corporals, Captains of Forecastle, Captains of Tops, Coxswains of Launches, Barges, and Pinnaces; Sail-makers, Ropemakers, Caulkers, Armourers, Coopers, Captains of the Hold, Captain's and Admiral's Cooks, Gun-room or Ward-room Stewards, Purser's Stewards.

3d Class.—Captains of Afterguard, Captains of the Mast, Yeomen of Signals, Sailmaker's Mates, Caulkers' Mates, Cooper's Mates, Armourer's Mates, Coxswains of Cutters and Gigs, Midshipmen's Stewards, Gunroom or Wardroom Cooks.

Each class to be paid the same in all rates;—the first class to wear a crown and anchor on left arm; the second class to wear a crown only on left arm; and the 3d class to wear an anchor only on left arm.

Petty Officers to mess together without regard to the classes, but never to mess with men who are not Petty Officers; this to be enforced by Admiralty order.

The word "Port" to be universally substituted for "larboard," by positive Admiralty order.

Midshipmen's chests never to be stowed in the hold, or in the men's messes; and the external dimensions of each chest never to exceed four feet long, two broad, and two deep;—this to be strictly enforced, and carefully reported on by Admiralty order. I have too often seen the necessity for this regulation.

All civil situations at home and abroad, connected with Naval matters, ought to be filled by Naval officers. All Storekeepers in Dock-yards, all Dock-yard Clerks, all Storekeepers and Clerks in Victualling-yards, all situations of Agent Victuallers abroad, all situations as Clerks in the Admiralty Office, ought to be filled by Pursers, with the full-pay salaries of the division of the list to which they belong. All Masters-Attendant should be Masters in the Navy; those at the regular Dock-yards at home should be paid at least 200*l.* per annum, and be allowed a house, &c., as at present; those at the regular Dock-yards abroad should have at least 200*l.* per annum, with a house, &c., the same as at home. All situations at Naval Hospitals should be given to Surgeons and Assistants of the Navy, which I believe is nearly the case already. There are many other situations in Dock-yards, Victualling-yards, &c., that should be given to Lieutenants in the Navy, with the highest rates of full-pay. In short, every situation under Government, connected with the Naval Department of the state, should be given to a Naval officer, with the highest rate of full-pay to which his rank and seniority would entitle him afloat, according to my foregoing scale, for it is a painful and disheartening thing at present to see so many of these situations filled by landsmen, who have no right to them, and are no better qualified to fill them than Naval officers would be, if the prospect of being so appointed were held out to them. As the Ordnance Board is composed of officers of both services, Naval officers should fill some of the situations in that office.

Widows of Naval officers ought to be entitled to pensions, if their husbands, at the time of their death, had served 20 years altogether, that is, in all ranks, or in any rank; of course I mean that the husbands must have attained Ward-room rank at the time of their death. At present the "ten years on the list" regulation is cruel and unjust; for why, I should like to know, should Midshipmen's berth rank go for nothing? Many Mates are 16 or 17 years in the service before they get promoted; and surely it is a great hardship that, in the event of their death before they have been "ten years on the list," their widows should benefit nothing by their previous 16 or 17 years' faithful service, although in a humble station! Let this be altered, in the name of common sense and common justice.

The Court.

Her Majesty will hold a Levee at St. James's Palace, on Wednesday, June 5th, and a Drawing-Room on Thursday, June 20th.

The Prince of Leinengen, brother by half-blood to Her Majesty, and his consort, arrived at Buckingham Palace on Tuesday night from Germany, and are expected to remain six weeks or two months on a visit to their august relatives in this country.

The Queen gave a state ball last evening at Buckingham Palace.

We are happy to announce the return to this country of the Queen Dowager. Her Majesty and suite arrived at half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon, at Marlborough House, from Portsmouth. Her Majesty's health, we rejoice to state, is greatly improved by her voyage. The Queen visited Her Majesty yesterday afternoon at Marlborough House.

Despatches, dated 11th Dec., were received at the Colonial Department on Saturday, from the Governor of New South Wales. On Monday despatches from the Right Hon. S. Mackenzie, Governor of Ceylon, were received at the Colonial Office; and despatches were forwarded from the India Board for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India, and for the officers administering the government at the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay.

Hussein Khan, the Persian Ambassador, who is daily expected in town from Paris, brings over twenty Indian shawls as a present for Her Majesty, equally costly as those he has presented to the Queen of the French.

The Grand Duke Alexander has given 300*l.* to each of the funds for the erection of monuments to the Duke of Wellington and the late Lord Nelson. Immediately after the arrival of the Grand Duke in this country, a great number of petitions were presented from the poor Poles resident in London, who do not participate in the funds that have been raised for the benefit of their countrymen. As soon as these petitions were placed before the Grand Duke, he gave orders for a weekly pension of 12*s.* to be paid to each individual during his stay in England. The number of Poles who benefit by this noble act amounts to 600.

An announcement in the papers of Thursday, that Lord Hill had issued orders for a grand review in Hyde-park yesterday morning, in honour of the illustrious foreigners now sojourning in the metropolis, turned out to be a complete hoax. No such orders were given. In the course of the morning thousands visited the park, in anxious expectation of the anticipated pleasure, but, beyond a few straggling companies of Grenadiers, who were going through their ordinary field exercise, and which tended at first to confirm the widely-circulated rumour, nothing whatever in the shape of a military spectacle was discernible. After losing a great part of the day, the multitude separated, sadly disappointed.

The Duke of Sutherland is named as likely to succeed the late Earl of Powis as Lord Lieutenant of Shropshire.

The late Earl Powis was remarkable for physical vigour; and though he spent some years of his life in India (he was son of the celebrated Lord Clive), and indulged freely in a life of pleasure, he might have been seen, when almost 80, digging in his garden at six o'clock in the morning, in his shirt sleeves.

The Earl of Ilchester, finding it inconvenient to fulfil the duties of Lord Lieutenant of Somersetshire, from the circumstance of his not residing in the county, has resigned that office, and Lord Portman is appointed his successor.

The Marquis Wellesley continues at Kingston House, Knightsbridge, in an infirm state of health. His Lordship has nearly completed his 80th year.

Mr. Goulburn, the candidate for the Speakership, had a pension of 2,000*l.* per ann., having filled various public appointments for twenty years except one quarter of a year, including the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer. The date of the grant of the pension is May 7, 1825, when the right hon. gentleman was Chief Secretary for Ireland.

United Service Museum.—The ordinary meeting was held on Tuesday evening, Captain Parlby in the chair. The donations announced were a claymore, from the field of Culloden, from Dr. Clarke; part of a log-book, the juvenile work of the great Lord Howe, from the Rev. Mr. Newcome; a kaross or mantle, worn by the Bechuana chiefs, from Lieut. H. G. Hart; and a model, from F. W. Sadler, Esq., of the plan adopted by him in raising H.M.S. Pincher. A paper was read by Lieut. Shuldham, R.N., on his improved concentric blocks, the advantages of which consist in their superior durability, and in the facility which they afford for overhauling. Capt. Ramsay then read an essay on the Naval warfare of the ancient Greeks; the author's object being to prove that, though they excelled in Military tactics, their Naval tactics were rude in the extreme, and that for whatever improvements they exhibited in the more modern periods of their history, they were mainly indebted to the Phœnicians.

The Royal Thames Yacht Club had a grand sailing-match on Thursday for a gold cup and cover. The prize was won in capital style by the boat Success, the property of R. Hope, Esq. The other boats in the match were Widgeon, Fortuna, and Queen Victoria.

On Monday last 936 persons paid for admission to the armories in the Tower; on the following day the number of visitors amounted to upwards of 600, and on Wednesday and Thursday to about 500. The admission is now reduced to 6*d.*, but 2*s.* more is demanded to view the Crown jewels.

Five thousand persons paid to see the Painted Hall in the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, on Monday, and nearly half that number on Sunday.

The Queen has appointed John Whitehead, Esq., Consul at Archangel, and John Rendall, Esq., Consul at the Cape Verd Islands, to reside at St. Jago.

Hanover.—It was stated some days ago that Major Fancourt had resigned his appointments at this Court, and was about to start for London. Whatever may be the cause of his departure, it is clear that he has not given any offence to the King of Hanover, for he has conferred on him the Cross of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order, together with the rank of Colonel in his Majesty's service.

Miss Braham, the eldest daughter of the eminent vocalist, will be married this day to a brother of the Earl of Waldegrave. The young lady possesses a considerable fortune in her own right. The Waldegraves, by matrimonial alliance, are connected with the family of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester.

The Hon. W. Ashley, Treasurer and Vice-Chancellor to the Queen Dowager, will be the successor of Sir H. Taylor, as Master of St. Katherine's Hospital.

The double mail to Dublin will commence running on 1st June.

The Hon. W. Cowper has been returned for Hertford by a majority of 19. The numbers were 297 and 278.

Col. Thompson, of radical notoriety, is again a candidate for representing Hull in Parliament.

The Hume-an Humbug.—O'Connell has intimated to Joseph Hume that he must retire from Kilkenny, in consequence of his vote against Ministers. [Pooh, pooh! the great Greek financier comes "too far north" not to have learned from the example of one of the "most incomprehensible of all imaginable vagabonds" how to conciliate the wholesale Irish boroughmonger. "A thousand pounds"—"say, a thousand pounds." Eh, Dan? Eh, Joe?]—Salisbury Herald.

The Treasury have given orders that there shall be a copper coinage for the Isle of Man. The coin is to have Her Majesty's profile on one side, and on the reverse the shield with the three armed legs, the armorial bearings of the isle.

Mount's Bay Breakwater.—On Saturday Lord Eliot, M.P., Sir H. Vivian, Sir C. Lemon, Mr. Pendarves, Maj. Vivian, and Mr. C. W. Ellis, had an interview with Lord Melbourne and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the presentation of the memorial to the Government for the construction of a breakwater and harbour of refuge in Mount's Bay.

A third regiment has been sent from Ireland to assist in curbing the Chartists; and the Irish government is ready to detach ten thousand men on the same service, should the necessities of the case unhappily require it. Life and property are as secure in Ireland, and have been so for the last five years, as in most counties in England; and they are much more secure than they would be in any other part of the United Kingdom, if the same provocation existed to exasperate the minds of the populace and arouse them to revenge.—Morning Chronicle.

Col Hervé de Montmorency, who died at St. Germain en-Laye, near Paris, on 9th inst., was, it will be recollected, arrested at Hamburgh as Mr. Harvey Morris, some 38 or 39 years ago, with the late Napper Tandy, the late Col. Blackwell, and the present General Corbet, of the French service, and with them brought over in custody to Ireland on a charge of high treason, but was saved, as it was said at the time, from the penalties by the favourable construction of the Amnesty Act. Others, however, ascribe the escape of Col. Montmorency and his companions to the threat of the Chief Consul, that if they were brought to trial and executed, he would put to death the late Gen. Don, then a prisoner in his hands, and who was compromised by papers found on his person.

Cardinal Fesch, the maternal uncle of Napoleon, died at Rome on 13th inst., in his 76th year. The Cardinal, who is believed to have died immensely rich, was the senior Priest Cardinal of the Sacred College. He was born on 3d Jan., 1763, and was raised to the dignity of Cardinal on 17th Jan., 1803.

The Duchess of Braganza (widow of Don Pedro) is about to visit Sweden.

The situation of executioner in Paris is now being warmly contested by a butcher, a horse-slaughterer, and a surgeon.

Mr. C Mathews has become the lessee of Covent-garden theatre.

HAYMARKET.—On Monday night a dramatic version, by Mr. Lover, of La Camicia del Homo Felice of Casti, called The Happy Man, was produced at this theatre. The piece is laughable and clever, and was well received throughout.

ST. JAMES'S.—A new piece by a Lady of Rank, entitled My Lover, was brought out on Monday night. Its incidents—for it cannot be said to have a plot—are contained in the hazardous experiment of a wife seeking to excite her husband's jealousy, and being very much frightened in consequence, and therefore resolving, like a sensible woman, never to make a second attempt of the same description. The piece was amusing in every scene, and its close marked with unanimous approbation.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The King has granted from his privy purse 10,000 francs towards the immediate relief of the families of the National Guards and soldiers who were killed or wounded on the 12th and 13th inst., the Queen and the Duke of Orleans 4,000 francs each, and Madame Adelaide 2,000 francs, the whole of which sums have been paid into the hands of Marshal Gerard. Marshal Oudinot (Duc de Reggio) is appointed Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, in place of Marshal Count Gerard, Commander-in-Chief of the National Guards of Paris and of the department of the Seine. Fresh arrests are constantly made, and the individuals seized since the 13th are far more numerous than those who have been released.

BARBADOES, March 25.—A French corvette has been here for some days past, having conveyed a commission from the French Government to inquire into and investigate the system of "free labour," and how emancipation works. Before long the foreign powers in the Leeward Islands will follow the example of England in emancipating their slaves, and the land of "liberty and equality" will alone remain with the honourable distinction of adding two millions of people in bondage.

CANADA.—KINGSTON, Mar. 19.—Six or seven deserters from the American Army arrived here last week. They state that they desert because they are used like galley-slaves. They were surprised to see our soldiers walking about the town at their leisure. The American soldiers are confined to barracks, cannot go out without a pass, and then only for two hours. Twenty-five deserters from American troops at Ogdensburgh are advertised in the Times of the 30th inst., and a reward of 30 dollars each is offered for their apprehension.—U.C. Herald.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—Russian intrigue and Russian gold are at work in these islands with as much activity as in Greece, in Turkey, in Persia, and in India. Wherever British influence preponderates, there will be found Russian agents busily engaged in attempts to weaken and destroy it. In these islands it is well-known that a strong Russian party, headed by the late Count Capo d'Istrias, has long lain dormant, whose sole object is their transfer of the Ionian States to Russia, with a view of enriching themselves at the expense of their country. Late events have brought these men again into active agitation.

Literary Notices.

Memoirs of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and of the Court of Queen Anne. By Mrs. A. T. Thomson, authoress of "Memoirs of the Court of Henry the Eighth," &c. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

THE publication of these highly interesting Memoirs at the present moment is one of those singular coincidences which, however accidental they must necessarily be, are calculated to excite a degree of curiosity which the intrinsic merit and importance of the work itself might have failed to excite. Not that a comprehensive and well-digested life of so extraordinary a woman as she whose name these volumes bear could fail, under any circumstances, to be regarded as an important feature in the literature of the day; and especially in a case where such a life is so much wanted as it is in that of "Queen Sarah"—as she was aptly called in her own triumphant day. But the present moment, we repeat, is singularly fortunate for the success of the work; since a large, and the most important portion of it—that portion too which is by far the most attractive and interesting in a personal point of view—relates to circumstances which are curiously coincident with those which have recently occupied, and which still occupy, the almost undivided attention of the English people. We allude, of course, to the alleged consequences of female influence, in connexion with the late movements in the political world. The nature of the coincidence may be judged of by a brief passage from the present volumes, relating to the accession of our last Queen Regnant, Anne, in March, 1702.

"Whilst the public were amused with the pageantry of this imposing ceremony, busy cabals occupied the private hours of the Queen, and within her palace (a contemporary writer has not hesitated to affirm) there was a very busy market of all the offices of Government. For, the Queen's own relations being kept at a distance, all things were managed by one woman," &c.,—"that 'woman,' it need scarcely to be stated, was the Countess of Marlborough, whose frank avowal of her exertions to form the Queen's household," &c.

Thus much for the adventitious interest which attaches to these volumes at the present moment. With regard to the work itself, it is one, as we have hinted above, that was much wanted—there being no life of the Duchess of Marlborough but a brief one, in one thin volume, and that but poorly and unsatisfactorily got up, as regards information, and of little value as a literary work.

Undoubtedly Sarah Duchess of Marlborough was one of the most extraordinary women, in various points of view, that the world has known; and the personal history of such a woman has all the excitement of a romance, united to all the instruction of truth. But her political history is still more important; and it is with that that the present volumes are chiefly occupied. There is no exaggeration in saying that, for the first ten years of Queen Anne's reign, the Duchess of Marlborough was neither more nor less than "viceroy over her:" and the political circumstances, both foreign and domestic, connected with these ten important years were of such vast import and influence on the subsequent destinies of the world, that the details of them, as here recorded, will be read with intense interest. After this period, however, the personal career of the Duchess becomes even still more interesting;—since nothing can possibly be more characteristic than the whole conduct and bearing of this extraordinary woman, after she was superseded in the Royal favour by her own relative and creature, Mrs. Masham.

Our limits forbid more than a passing reference, as above, to the leading features of the Duchess of Marlborough's public life. Suffice it to add, that her biographer has performed her task with care, judgment, and fidelity; with a rare and most valuable impartiality; and to a result that should command for her work a place in every library throughout the kingdom.

The Poetry of the Pentateuch. By the Rev. Hobart Caunter, B.D. 2 vols. Churton.

THIS work will prove a valuable addition to the libraries not only of the pious, but of all who desire instruction in history, zoology, and the rules of that noble art which descended from the prophets to such inspired moralists as Milton and Young. Mr. Caunter's remarks on Byron and Shelley do infinite credit to his taste, judgment, and religious feeling.

Dr. Clarke's Travels in Russia, Tartary, and Turkey People's Edition. W. and R. Chambers.

THOUGH we highly approve of Serjeant Talfourd's Copyright Bill, we are free to admit that there are cases in which an extension of copyright might be injurious to the public generally, without at the same time benefitting private interests, and we have a remarkable instance of this fact in the work before us. Dr. Clarke's travels were originally published at, we believe, five guineas, and no one at the present time would think of reprinting them in their original form, or at any price in proportion to that of their first publication. The Copyright, therefore, is of no value, although the information of the traveller is almost as valuable at the present day as when it was first given to the public. The course, however, adopted by Messrs. Chambers, the copyright of the work having expired, may, indeed ought to answer. This five-guinea work is given in the "People's Edition," with additional notes, for two shillings and sixpence. In this case, therefore, the public benefit, and the family of the traveller are not injured; for it is scarcely to be supposed that under an extension of the copyright they would have printed the work at this very cheap rate, and at any other price it could not have answered them, or any other person, to republish an old and voluminous work of travels. Great credit is due to Messrs. Chambers for their enterprising spirit, and we trust that, as their selections for the "People's Edition" are all most admirable, they will be rewarded by a very extensive sale.

The Royal Review at Windsor. T. Boys.

THIS is a very spirited and bold mezzotinto engraving by S. W. Reynolds, with whole-length portraits of Her Majesty, on her favourite grey charger, with the King of the Belgians, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, &c., forming the principal group passing under George the Fourth's gate way, on leaving the Castle. The portrait of the Queen is by far the best likeness, those of King Leopold and the Duke are too young. Her Majesty is in a riding habit and cap, with the star and riband of the Order of the Garter on her breast; and her youthful, as well as graceful though small figure, is admirably shown. The print is highly pleasing and characteristic, and does great credit to Mr. Reynolds.

H.B.—We have three more sketches from the prolific pencil of this prince of caricaturists (Nos. 587, 8, and 9.) "A Cure for a Broken Head" is an admirable group, representing Lord Normanby as the wounded, nursed by Dan O'Connell, and bemoaned by Lord Morpeth and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whilst Lord J. Russell is advancing with an adhesive plaster, "Majority 22," to apply to the broken head; Lord Melbourne is leading him, and Shiel following with a pair of scissors. No. 588 exhibits Peel and Lord John settling an affair of honour. The last is the most amusing, and is in H.B.'s best style, "A Coroner's Inquest that was to have been," and founded on a passage in Sir George Sinclair's speech, in which he alluded to a coroner's inquest on the defunct cabinet. Wakley sits as coroner, and the jury are stating their opinions:—O'Connell, "wilful murder;" Peel, "death by wilfully aggravating the wound;" Lord Stanley, "a previously very unsound state of body;" others "felo de se," "natural death," &c.

La Mode à la Cour de la Grande Bretagne.—Cocks and Co.—We have before us the first Number of a set entitled the "Victoria Waltzer." It is a charming composition, and must become very popular. Messrs. Cocks have received for presentation to the Queen, from the celebrated Lanner, a superb copy of his last waltzes.

ON MILITARY PUNISHMENTS AND REGIMENTAL DISCIPLINE.—By an Old Fifth Officer.

I SHALL now mention an instance or two of the effects of abused power. When the Militia was encouraged to volunteer to the Line, two or three years before the close of the war, a commanding officer declared in Ireland, that if any of the Irish rascals dared to enter his corps, he would flog them out of their skins, or words to that effect. Such was the impression this language made, that the regiment remained incomplete, while many others were augmented with second battalions. Yet, although the officers lost the promotion they had anxiously looked for, the circumstance was passed over, as he was, notwithstanding his indiscretion and prejudice, a warm-hearted and generous man. About the same period, an unfortunate wretch, on whom kindness had never been tried, so far exceeded when on guard, that his turn of sentry was passed over, and the officer permitted him to make it up afterwards; the circumstance reached the ear of the Major in temporary command, who insisted on trying him: he was condemned to receive five hundred lashes. Every intercession was made for the unhappy man, and the President expressed strong doubts of the legality of the trial, under such circumstances. It was all in vain; the prisoner received every lash in the severest manner, and not unaccompanied with unfeeling comments; not one palliating consideration was admitted, nor was the inconsistency and irregularity of the officer of the guard once mentioned. What must have been the feelings of the Field Officer, if he reflected on this and other exercises of power, in the day of his destitution, that not long after followed? As to the poor soldier, he looked forward to his death or his discharge for that relief he dared not hope for in his corps; his constitution was of more than ordinary strength, he was inoffensive in his deportment, and, as it proved too late, might, under different treatment, have become a valuable man. Yet, without having ever committed any atrocious act, he was quite reckless, constantly in scrapes, and became a mere whipping block—having received, before he obtained his discharge, little less than three thousand lashes. I saw him afterwards near the falls of the Chaudiere, near the St. Lawrence, where I went with a party. We were weather-bound all night, and our provisions exhausted; a white-headed man, much worn, and apparently aged, having heard of us, approached with a loaf the next morning. When he saw who we were, his eyes brightened up, and I recognised the unfortunate soldier. He was then superintending timber works, content, and comparatively happy; his feelings seemed to overpower him. But this is not intended for any thing more than a plain statement of facts; I therefore omit whatever more might have been interesting on that occasion, and leave this old man of 32 years to the honest exultation he enjoyed at the confidence reposed in him by his civil employers.

Before I indulge further in American retrospect, I must revert to scenes in the Peninsula, Walcheren, and France, merely to observe that in four or five arduous campaigns I do not remember any glaring instances of severity; and the more I reflect on this subject, the more are my early convictions confirmed, that at least one half of the punishments of the service formerly arose from the worrying and tormenting practices of the old school, when the slightest irregularities were magnified into crime—when almost the only penalty was the sentence of a Court-Martial, and the severest drills treated as mere pastime. The most patient tempers were thus driven to desperation, but on actual service, when officers participated in its dangers and privations, the feelings and disposition soon altered; there was less time for fidgetting and unnecessary parades—more arduous and serious duties demanded their attention, and the soldier enjoyed comparative peace in front of the enemy.

The war once over in Europe, part of the Wellington army was sent to America, where it likewise soon terminated, and with peace, once more the soldier became liable to its peculiar hardships. This, on the very borders of the freest country in the world, tempted the men to desert; in vain were canoes and batteaux hauled upon dry land, and placed under sentries; the men were off as if by magic. This I witnessed at a certain frontier station, and thus only could I account for it. I had always observed, with deep regret, the fatigue unnecessarily inflicted, not only on the ignorant recruit, but on the best disciplined soldiers, with little distinction; incessant drills and parades, not only regimental, but on occasions too frivolous to be credited, except by practised regimental officers. The old doctrine, that soldiers never could have too much to do, was prodigiously convenient to those who had always employment for them, and who considered a passion for the drill a passion for their profession. Such men seldom discovered, that those who had for years endured all the drudgery of discipline, were entitled to consideration, and should not, without reasonable cause, be harassed with perpetual practice—that if their efficiency remained unrewarded by rest, a valuable distinction was lost, and with it the power to reward the well-trained soldier, and to stimulate the defective. Yet thus have the most active and intelligent members of a corps been placed on an equality with the most slothful and worthless; whereas the comparative comfort and relaxation to which the former are justly entitled, might act as a milder punishment to those who had not exerted themselves to merit the same indulgence. These are the readiest means of exciting emulation, and with this view the corps in question was shortly afterwards paraded but once a day; in the evening the well-conducted and efficient soldiers had only to answer at a roll-call, while all the others were paraded for evening drill under the officers on duty, to whom it afforded an excellent opportunity for practice (then much required), although the orders of the Commander-in-Chief upon this useful point have since been complied with.

It was highly gratifying to witness the honest pride of the men whose merits thus exempted them from attendance, the lively emulation it excited generally, and its happy effects. The sentries were withdrawn from the batteaux, which were no longer hauled up from the river, but appropriated to the use of the men off duty, for fishing, bathing, &c. Hope and confidence thus restored, the men were merely told, that if they could not be satisfied with the system adopted, and chose to desert, they would not be again received or pardoned, as a representation would be made on the subject to the Commander of the Forces. There were minor points that likewise tended to the success of these changes, in which I could not but attach great importance to the release of prisoners. The guard-house, I was assured, had been frequently inadequate to contain the number confined, but the examination of every case by the Commandant personally changed the scene; thus gave an insight to the characters, not only of the accused but the accusers. Charges of a frivolous character were no longer heard of as serious offences. A man might look wearied of fatigue duties without incurring the penalty of drill or guard-house, and the consequence was, that with this privilege grumbling gave place to cheerful submission and good will; but above all, the morning explanations, on the release or other disposal of the prisoners, though at first inconvenient, and possibly disapproved by the intermediate ranks, was soon found to be quite compatible with the truest support of just authority, as there are usually as many members of a corps over relaxed as over zealous, and these investigations tended almost imperceptibly to regulate the general machinery and moral foundation of true discipline.—(To be continued.)

Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Island of Trinidad—Colonel of the Londonderry Reg. of Militia.

We recorded in our paper of the 11th inst. the demise of this distinguished individual. He breathed his last at his residence, St. Ann's, Trinidad, on Friday, March 8th, at nineteen minutes after six o'clock, A.M. His Excellency's illness originated in a slight attack of fever the preceding Sunday; but, too much alive to his duty, and too anxious for the welfare of his command, he disregarded his indisposition, and transacted business the next day;—the fever then increased, and his advanced age precluding the physicians from using the usual mode of treatment, the enemy gained ground with rapid strides—his strength failed—and he ultimately sunk under the attack. Sir George Hill entered upon the Government of Trinidad in April, 1833, and he found the community, which, like Joseph's coat, was composed of divers hues and varied colours, torn by party feuds, and filled with decided oppositionists of all ministerial measures. By vigorous conduct, and shrewd political management, His Excellency conquered the angry feelings of all parties, and produced harmony and good will among them; and while doing this he effected three great and important measures: first, the amalgamation of the different Militia corps, thereby destroying the distinction of colour which had existed, and was perpetuated in that body, by enrolling the white and coloured inhabitants into distinct regiments; second, in the trying time of August, 1834, he displayed a firmness and discretion that proved alike the soundness of his judgment and the excellence of his heart; for, without riot or bloodshed, without harassing the troops, or oppressing the planters, he brought into full operation the total manumission of the negro population of his extensive and divided colony; and last of all, though not least, to Sir George Hill is Trinidad indebted for the throwing open of the debates of Council,—the most valuable boon which it was in the power of an individual to bestow upon the community under his control. Of a liberal and enlightened mind, and no bigot in religion, Sir George Hill received with equal cordiality the Roman Catholic bishop and the Protestant pastor; and, without favour or affection, he was the friend and supporter of the Christian ministers of all denominations. Hospitable and generous, open-hearted, and of a convivial disposition, his board was always free to the stranger;—a principal actor in the eventful drama of the stirring times of 1798 and 1803—possessing a raciness of humour, a fund of information, a retentive and powerful memory, and a national manner of conversation, he was at once the most instructive and agreeable historian of bygone days; and as one of the last members of the Irish House of Commons, his memory ought to be dear to the heart of every Irishman. That Sir George Hill had faults—that he committed errors during his administration, nobody can gainsay; but his faults were not those of wilfulness, but of age; and his errors those of omission, not commission. Be it remembered, he was seventy-one when he assumed the reins of his Government. How few, how very few men, could have conducted for six years, at his advanced age, such a Government, not only giving satisfaction to those under him, but receiving, on several occasions, the marked approbation of the authorities at home. On the death of His Excellency, the inhabitants of Trinidad gave an honourable testimony of their sorrow by a total cessation from business; and at half-past five o'clock in the afternoon, attended by Col. Mein, and a guard of honour of the 74th regiment, by all the public officers, and a larger assemblage of inhabitants than were ever collected on any former occasion, the remains of His Excellency were deposited in the grounds of St. Ann's, beside those of his lamented lady, soon to mingle dust to dust and ashes to ashes, becoming as inseparable in death as they were in a long and weary journey of half a century in life.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH'S PLAN.

Having now anticipated the principal objection which will probably be offered to the proposed plan for ameliorating the mariner's condition, and securing his voluntary services to the State. On mature deliberation, the means by which these important ends are to be attained should partly arise from the shipowner and underwriter (whose riches the mariner contributes to by his arduous toil), and passing through the medium of Government, be regulated by its wisdom and laws, which would at once tend to bring the trading marine in intimate connection, and identify it with the State. Hence the fidelity, zeal, and patriotism of the mariner would be encouraged, and his attachment immutably secured, in place of being estranged and deceived, as at the present moment, by the existing arrangements.

Having made the foregoing outline of those proposals, which, however unconnected they may appear in the present form, must nevertheless prove, if placed in operation, of the veriest importance to the nation, shipowner, and mariner. It now remains to describe more minutely the method and arrangements essential to its full development and practical operations.

Keeping in view the first principle of our suggestions, and in order to attain that object for the purpose of placing the trading mariner in as near as possible connection with the Royal Navy, and also to accomplish the means of affording him a frequent opportunity of experiencing the equitable, beneficial, and considerate arrangements of that service; to this end, and in equal justice to the Legislature and the nation, which, invariably holding responsible the former for all and every important change in the re-organisation of the latter, it ought to be deemed expedient, for the welfare and honour of the realm, to place at the sole disposal, and under the control of Government, those funds arising out of the before-mentioned tonnage imposts, forfeitures of pay, foreign ship-letters' postage, per-centage or stamp duty on sea-policies of insurance, and the effects left on board of all seamen who die out of the United Kingdom, for the establishing of a national institution on the basis of Greenwich Hospital, for not only the future support of decayed trading mariners, but also for affording temporary relief to those who may be unavoidably unemployed and those invalided, and watching over their interest by those necessary measures before adverted to.

The internal arrangement of the first principle of this proposed plan would be found as simple and secure from abuses as the effects of it would prove beneficial, and are as follow:—Every trading ship or vessel of all classes or denomination which may be engaged for commercial purposes, and trading without the limits of harbours, bays, or rivers, to be provided with two sets of Articles when intended for long voyages, or an abstract document from it when only employed for short trips; one of those contracts to be appropriated to the signatures of such mariners as are inclined to avail themselves of all the previously mentioned privileges, advantages, and benefits, in return for which, they should simply be expected and required, to give their services to the Royal Navy when called on, either in time of peace or war; or, should they change their intentions in the event of the latter circumstance, and wish to effect a release from the liability they had incurred, and desire to be exonerated from the contract, they accordingly might by purchasing their discharge*, the amount of which might be calculated according to the number of years which they derived benefits from the National Institution above mentioned, and by finding a substitute from amongst those seamen who do not subscribe to the above contract.

The other set of Articles of agreement to remain as at present formed; and those men who wish not to subscribe to the former National Contract, or become "national mariners"—and these advantages (both while in the trading marine and after their being worn out in that service) could not be extended to them. They would be obliged to remain in the present state they now are in. They could not ever expect to participate in any of those privileges or advantages offered by these arrangements.

The measure thus completed, the following privileges and support should be guaranteed to those mariners subscribing to the above conditions:—1st. That he should enjoy, in the fullest acceptation of the word, all the rights of free mariner citizenship in the United Kingdom; this to secure the franchise of one vote, to be exercised at any of the following ports, in which he may be during an election for Members of Parliament:—London, Liverpool, Bristol, and Hull, in England, Glasgow, Dundee, and Leith, in Scotland; Dublin, Cork, and Belfast, in Ireland. These representatives to be either from the Royal Navy, or those men qualified by being commanders in the trading marine.—2dly. A free and uncontrolled appeal to a nautical tribunal, comprised of two officers of the Royal Navy, and one master of the trading marine, together with a magistrate of the peace, at which court the testimony of his brother seamen to be taken in all cases of trial.—3dly. The same protection against compulsionary service as all other subjects of the State enjoy.—4thly. Employment secured to them on board ship, while rigging, unrigging, loading or unloading cargo—in short, all avocations consistent with the duty and trade of a mariner.—5thly. Privilege to dispose of or receive a just consideration in money for surplus provisions, and an allowance on the footing of the Royal Navy.—6thly. Entitled to be received into an hospital, either abroad or in the United Kingdom, without deduction for medicines, except a due hospital stoppage from their pay.—7thly. A proper proportion of wages secured, if the ship in which they serve be lost on homeward-bound voyage.—8thly. A reasonable objection received should he refuse proceeding to sea in his ship after articles are signed, which is to take place on the day of his commencing to work on board of any ship bound on a voyage. Amenable at all times to the decision of a nautical tribunal, and be allowed to find a substitute.—9thly. To be entitled to a certain indemnification should the owner think fit, after engaging the mariner, not to prosecute the voyage, this sum to be regulated according to the probable length of the voyage, and as before spoken of in the preceding part of this work.—10thly. That he be admitted to pass before a naval chartered Board, as proposed in this work, for the post and warrant of mate or master, if qualified by time and ability; and that an increase † of ordinary seamen, in the proportion before specified, be employed in every vessel.—11thly. That he be considered a fit object to be admitted (free of any expense) into the proposed Royal National Marine Institution, or receive proper support from the funds appropriated to that establishment, if ill or disabled in the performance of his duty, or when unavoidably out of employment, till occupied; this latter privilege only to be extended to him when he has been four months without a ship, and in no case should he possess private resources.—12thly and lastly. A permanent provision in old age, by either being supported within the limits of the institution, or as out-pensioner, with an allowance to the widows of such mariners as possess approved testimonials of good conduct, &c., and proportionable to their length of service.

(To be Concluded next week.)

* This, it is to be presumed, would be unobjectionable, inasmuch as it is analogous to arrangements practised in the Army!

† The ships at present are shamefully short-handed. The author came to England in a brig which could only afford two men in each watch: the man at the helm very frequently obliged to leave his post to let go ropes in a squall at night—in one case the vessel was almost lost by this circumstance off Cape St. Vincent.

A Frenchman's Opinion of the Duke of Wellington.—"Wellington is an isolated character in England:—no one is able to assign to him his actual place among the nobility. He is the political hero of the Tories, as he is the Military hero of the age. With the Whigs (to whom he causes great embarrassment), he is a man that cannot be attacked—a person whom they neither can nor will touch; they fear him, but honour and respect him."

"PER MARE, PER TERRAM."

A SONG,

To celebrate the Birth-day of Her Most Gracious Majesty, Victoria the First, on the 24th May, 1839. Dedicated to the Non-Commissioned Officers of the Royal Marines, by Corporal John Bradshaw, of the Woolwich division.

Air—"Believe me, if all those endearing young charms."

With zeal for old England we've met to rejoice,
And a bumper we'll drink to our Queen,
Oh, long may she reign! shall re-echo the voice
Of each brave and true-hearted Marine.
To shield her from danger by sea and by land,
Our opponents we'll proudly disdain;
And to our foes, with her Navy well manned,
"Britannia shall still rule the main."

With friendship united we joyfully meet,
Mirth and loyalty reign o'er this scene;
Victoria's birth-day with honour we greet,
"Long life to our most gracious Queen!"
Oh! may her career be successful and bright,
Care or pain ne'er disturb her repose;
And peace and prosperity ever unite
"The shamrock, the thistle, and rose."

May Victoria's reign be tranquil and bless'd,
And her happiness daily increase;
Our nation by wisdom be ever caress'd,
And abound with health, plenty, and peace.
Now fill up your glasses; our toast this shall be,
"May God save our most gracious Queen!
"To shield her from danger, 'by land and by sea,'
"Is the pride of each Royal Marine."

East India Intelligence.

On Tuesday last the overland mail arrived in London, that portion forwarded by Mr. Waghorn through Marseilles having been received on Saturday. The dates brought by this mail are from Calcutta 17th, Madras 14th, and Bombay 25th March. The Hugh Lindsay arrived at Bombay on the 20th March, with the mail of London 25th Jan., Paris 28th Jan., and Malta 6th Feb. The passengers by the Hugh Lindsay were the following:—For Bombay—Col. Whitehill, Mrs. Col. Powell, Miss Powell, Capt. Hughes, Capt. Hart (19th N.I.), Mr. Fairlie, Mr. Cormack, Mr. Huske, Mr. Foot (from Mocha), and Capt. Anderson (24th N.I.), from Aden. For Bengal—Mrs. Ogilvie, Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. Lucas, Capt. Westmacott (37th N.I.), Lieut. Mitchell (13th N.I.), Mr. Hume, Mr. C. K. Hume, Mr. Stopford, Mr. R. Stopford, and Mr. Potter. For Madras—Mr. and Mrs. Elliott.

The following are the proposed arrangements for bringing the English mails to Bombay during the ensuing monsoon.

Hugh Lindsay leaves Bombay on 12th April; reaches Suez 13th May—leaves 16th May—arrives at Aden on 1st June—transfers the English mails to a sailing vessel to be conveyed to Bombay, and remains at Aden. Berenice leaves Bombay on 20th May—reaches Suez on 10th June—and returns with the English mails at Bombay on 2d July. The Hugh Lindsay leaves Aden (without a mail) on 19th June—reaches Suez on 6th July—leaves 9th July—arrives with the English mails at Aden on 24th July—and transfers the mails for Bombay to a sailing-vessel. A sailing-vessel, to be despatched from Bombay on 22d May, which will reach Suez on 6th Aug., leave Suez on the following day, and return direct to Bombay with the English mails about 6th Sept. A sailing-vessel to leave Bombay on 20th June, and transfer the mail to the Hugh Lindsay at Aden on 15th Aug. The Hugh Lindsay will deliver this Indian mail at Suez on 5th Sept., and return to Bombay with the English mail about 6th Oct. Berenice leaves Bombay on 19th Sept., and the regular communication will be continued.

Since our last we have received the north-western journals up to 9th March. So far there appears no obstruction to the progress of our countrymen beyond the Indus. Various reports are in circulation relative to the plan of operations in the ensuing campaign. Sir Henry Fane, on the authority of the Delhi Gazette, March 6, is said to have told Brigadier ——— that their movements were arranged as follows:—"To make no delay in getting through the Bolaun pass, no matter where we halted, if necessary, for a month, to complete arrangements. Then go on to Candahar, crown Shah Soojah, (who, by the bye, says it has been very kind in Government furnishing him with the force he has, but that he does not feel quite certain whether it is under our or his orders,) detach part of the Army to take Cabul, and pass the three hot months in its vicinity;" which over, Sir Henry conceives, the Army will return to Loodianah by the 15th of Oct. this year. The Bombay force were to join the Bengal column at Dauder. Sir John Keane is now on his way up the Indus in a steamer, towards that place, whence he will take Sir Henry's camp, the Bombay force going direct from Hyderabad to Dauder. Sir Henry Fane left for Bombay on 16th Feb.

The British Government is, it is said, about to send some costly presents to Runjeet Singh.

Upon the authority of private letters, it is stated that Mr. M'Naghten is to be appointed Lieut.-Governor of the north-western provinces. Some misunderstanding has arisen between that gentleman and Major-Gen. Sir W. Cotton, which is attributed to the jealousy existing between the two services; an instance of which was exhibited in the following occurrence. Mr. M'Naghten wrote to Sir W. Cotton, "By virtue of the authority vested in me, I hereby direct you to return to Roree with your column;" to which Sir Willoughby replied, he was under Sir John Keane's orders, and could not receive Mr. M.'s.

Our letters from the Scinde Army are to 2d March. It was then fifty miles south of Larkhana, upon the banks of a river, which, not having boats to cross, will, it is supposed, occasion considerable delay. Sir John Keane was still with the Bombay force.

Assist.-Surg. Andrew Drummond, of the Bengal Medical Service, has been tried by a Court-Martial, the particulars of which will be given next week.

We congratulate Major-Gen. Nott, commanding the Bengal Infantry Division of the Army of the Indus, on the honour he has had in leading the first body of disciplined troops that ever crossed that noble stream, on the morning of the 14th Feb. On the three succeeding days, the rest of the Infantry, Cavalry, &c. crossed, and the whole of the Bengal force, including Shah Soojah's army, were assembled at Shikarpore on the 20th; since which there has been nothing but parades, inspections, and reviews, before Shah Soojah. On the 19th he went in state to look at the Infantry; and after they had passed in review before him, His Majesty passed to the Cavalry camp, which were all drawn up in review order, together with the Camel Battery and Horse Artillery to, receive him. After the review, His Majesty presented Sir Willoughby Cotton with a sword, and bags containing 8,000 rupees were brought forward and presented to the troops assembled as a gift from Shah Soojah-ool-Moolk. The troops are now on the move for the Bolaun Pass—the Cavalry and Horse Artillery moved on the 23d; the 1st Brigade of Infantry march on the 24th; the 4th Brigade on the 25th; and the Park on the 26th. The whole of the Shah's army were to remain there until the 2d or 3d of this month: also the 31st and 42d N.I. The Bombay Army will, it is said, reach Shikarpore by the 8th March; so that, including the Shah's force, it is supposed the Army will enter Afghanistan with 20,000 men.—Delhi Gazette, March 13.

Some of the incidents alluded to in the following extract of a letter dated 12th February, from the army of the Indus, have already appeared in our columns, but as every item of information from the quarter alluded to possesses considerable interest, we submit it to our readers without any curtailment:—

"We are on our way to Shikarpore, and are to cross at Roree over the bridge of boats the day after to-morrow. We are to halt for two days or so at Shikarpore, and then make the best of our way to Candahar, where we expect to arrive on the 2d April. I hear that the Candahar chiefs have given in, and that Dost Mahomed has retreated to the mountains. Barnes says, that we are to summer at Ghizuee, of which place we shall be in the provinces by November next. You will have heard before this that the Amuers of Sy-dabad have agreed to pay the 36 lakhs demanded, and to maintain a contingent of 5,000 men in Scinde; they are also to defray the expenses of our march towards Hydrabad."—Englishman, March 8th.

A letter from Cawnpore informs us that the Court-Martial on Lieut. Elmslie (62d) had closed its proceedings, and that another Court was sitting on Ens. Campbell, H.M.'s 16th Foot. Captain Templar, the Brigade-Major, had been seriously ill, but had recovered. Ens. Oakes, of the 45th, was married on the 21st ult. to Miss Jemima Mackenzie, daughter of C. Mackenzie, Esq., of the Civil Service.—Englishman, March 4th.

The 2d brigade of Infantry was to remain at Shikarpore with Shah Soojah's force until 2d or 3d March, when all would follow the Bengal column.

Major Todd had quitted Shikarpore for the purpose of joining the Bombay troops under Sir John Keane, the greater part of whose force would occupy Upper and Lower Scinde.—Delhi Gazette, March 13th.

The 3d and 65th regts. Bengal N.I. are about to obtain a step each by the retirement of their respective Majors.—Agra Ukhbar, March 2d.

We record with much regret the decease of Colonel Frith, C.B., late Principal Commissary of Ordnance which melancholy event took place, after only two days' illness, on the 2d March. Col. Frith's remains were attended to the place of interment, the burying-ground of St. George's Cathedral, by a numerous assemblage, both civil and military; amongst whom were observable most of the officers present at head-quarters of the Artillery, of which distinguished corps Col. Frith had been, during a period of thirty-five years, a much-valued and highly-honoured member.—Madras U. S. G., March 5th.

Maj.-General Sir W. Casement, K.C.B., Military Secretary to Government, has returned to Calcutta preparatory to taking his seat in Council, on the expiration of the period of service of Col. Morrison, C.B., Deputy Governor at the Council Board.—Delhi Gazette,

The duties which the troops have to perform at Aden are harassing in the extreme, and all agree in the opinion that the present force is wholly inadequate to sustain them for a much longer period. We regret to learn that, owing to this overwork, sickness is beginning to make its appearance amongst the troops. The part of the European regiment now in Aden has at present 20 in hospital; of those patients, ten are attacked with scurvy, and ten men have died in that regiment since its leaving Bombay.—Ibid.

Military Movements.—We have just heard from Meerut that orders have been sent to the Buffs directing their immediate return to that station; this we have on the best authority. Brigadier Dennis arrived there, e route to Cawnpore, on 4th March. The regiment is expected to arrive about the 27th inst. We have also just learned that the personal Staff of the Commander-in-Chief are ordered from thence to Bombay to join him, and are not a little annoyed; they are going by way of Ferozepore, having luckily, some time since, secured boats in case of such a contingency as has occurred.—Delhi Gazette, March 6th.

General Elphinstone, who is about to proceed to Calcutta, we understand, has taken his passage in the remarkably fine new ship Maidstone, which was launched at Blackwall last Tuesday, and will sail for that presidency on the 1st of July.

On dit that a gentleman in the Civil Service, well-known and of very long standing, is about to take the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and that the schedule of his debts will exhibit a total of about seven lacs.—Bengal Hurkaru, Feb. 20.

When Lady William Bentinck was about to quit India, the native community subscribed for a picture of her Ladyship, which might be suspended in some conspicuous part of a public building, and continually recall to the spectators the memory of their benefactress. This picture has been completed, and has reached Calcutta.

G. O. issued by Gen. Sir H. Fane on taking his leave of the Army of the Indus.

Head Quarters, Bengal Column of the Army of the Indus, Camp Bukkur, 16th Feb, 1839.

1.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, being about to leave the Bengal column of the Army of the Indus in its progress where his duty calls him, finds it due to the troops, previous to his departure, to record what he has witnessed of their conduct during their march from Ferozepore into Scinde, and to hold it up as an example for their brother soldiers on all future occasions.

2.—The excellent discipline and good behaviour of the troops have conciliated the inhabitants of the country wherever they have passed, and he is glad to be able to point out the consequences. These have been, not only the exaltation of their fame and character as soldiers, but the circumstances have greatly conduced to their personal advantages, because the confidence of the inhabitants which such good conduct has produced, has led to their freely resorting to our camp with the produce of their villages, by which means we have been free from all wants and privations.

3.—His Excellency desires that officers of all ranks and departments will accept the expression of his approbation of their zeal and of the good example they have set.

4.—He feels it just more particularly to notice the corps of Bengal Engineers and the Sappers. The manner in which they have completed the important work of throwing a bridge over the Indus (400 yards) reflects great credit on their zeal and industry; and his Excellency requests that Capt. Thompson—the Chief Engineer, the Officers, Non commissioned Officers and soldiers under his command, concerned in the work, will accept his thanks. By Order of H. E. the Com.-in-Chief in India,

P. CRAIGIE, Dep.-Adj. General.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial assembled at Dinapore on 2d Feb. 1839, Assist.-Surg. Andrew Drummond was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—"For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman in the following instances:—First, In having, at various times, previous to June 1838, appropriated to his own use several sums drawn by him as Postmaster at Hazareebaugh, on account of a writer at Chyabassa, and of dawk bearers to and from Ramah and Kurhey. Second, In having, by habitual intemperance, contributed to induce a degree of mental excitement and disorder, which, on the 3d Sept. 1838, incapacitated him for the discharge of his professional and other duties."

Finding.—"The Court, upon evidence before it, finds the prisoner, Assist.-Surg. Andrew Drummond, on the charge preferred against him—Of the first instance, guilty; of the second instance, guilty. The Court is further of opinion, that the conduct of which it has found Assist.-Surg. Andrew Drummond guilty, was unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

Sentence.—"The Court sentences Assist.-Surg. Andrew Drummond to be discharged from the service."

20th February 1839. Confirmed. JOHN RAMSAY, Maj.-Gen.

The sentence to have effect from the date of this order being made known to Mr. Drummond.

HEAD-QUARTERS, MEERUT, Feb. 26, 1839.—At a General Court Martial assembled at Cawnpore, on 9th Feb. 1839, Lieut. Kenward Wallace Elmslie, 62d Regt. N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—"For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—First, For having, on 6th Dec. 1838, entered the bungalow of Surg. John Menzies, and, with a loud voice and violent gestures, delivered a hostile message from Ens. Henry Bishop, grounded on circumstances which Lieut. Elmslie well knew had been officially reported by Surg Menzies to Lieut.-Col. Thomas Dundas, commanding the regiment. Second, In having subsequently, on the same day, sent to Surg. Menzies, and to other officers for general circulation, copies of a paper signed by Lieut. Elmslie, in the nature of a posting of Surg Menzies. Third, in having, on 10th Dec. 1838, in a note addressed to Surg. Menzies, asserted that the paper referred to in the second instance had not been circulated, and requested that it might be returned, but without making any apology for having written it, thereby suggesting the erroneous inference that it had not been shown to officers of other regiments."

Finding.—"The Court is of opinion, from the evidence recorded, that Lieut. Kenward Wallace Elmslie, of the 62d Regt. N.I., is—On the first and second instance of the charge, guilty; and on the 3d instance, guilty, with the qualification that the Court does not conceive that he had any wilful design to mislead Mr. Surg. Menzies with respect to the erroneous inference his note suggested. And the Court is further of opinion, that he is guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman."

Sentence.—"The Court sentences Lieut. Kenward Wallace Elmslie, of the 62d Regt. N.I., to be suspended from rank, pay, and allowance for six (6) months."

26th February 1839. Confirmed. JOHN RAMSAY, Maj.-Gen.

The sentence to take effect from the date of its publication at Cawnpore. By order of the Commander of the Forces,

J. R. LUMLEY, Maj.-Gen., Adj.-Gen. of the Army.

At a European General Court Martial assembled at Rorce, 26th Jan., 1839, Lieut. Sir Alex. Mackenzie, Bart., 48th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

With conduct highly unlike an officer and a gentleman, and grossly disrespectful and insulting to Major R. A. Thomas, of the same regt., his then immediate commanding officer, on 13th Jan., 1839, the Major being in command of a wing of the said regt., and in charge of treasure, then in camp with the 1st Brigade, 1st Div., Bengal column, Army of the Indus, in the following instances:—First Instance, In having, when asked by the Major where Lieut. Bird was, replied "where the hell" or "devil she did he be but in his tent," or words to such effect. Second Instance, In having, on the same morning, when asked by the Major to make the Sepoys assist in loading the said treasure upon the camels, replied that "he (the said Major) was a damned beast, a brute, and if he was not such an old man, he (the Lieut.) would have liked to have given him a good kicking," or words to such effect.

Upon which charge the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding.—The Court are of opinion that Lieut. Sir Alex. Mackenzie, Bart., 48th N.I., is not guilty of the charge exhibited against him, and do acquit him of the same.

Revised Finding.—The Court, having attentively considered the letter from the Deputy Adjutant General of the Army to the President, beg to state that they by no means intend to impugn the credibility of Major Thomas's evidence; but, being of opinion that the Major might have misapprehended the words uttered by Lieut Sir Alex. Mackenzie, owing to the hurry and confusion of the moment, the Court, with the above qualification, adhere to their finding of acquittal.

Confirmed. Sir WILLOUGHBY COTTON, K.C.B., K.C.H. Major-Gen. Com. the Bengal column of the Army in the Indus.

Crosbie Dawson, Secretary of the Deaf and Dumb Institution, at Liverpool) assembled on last Wednesday week at the house of Dr. Turnbull, in Russell-square, to witness the results produced by a process recently discovered by the Doctor, and applied for the cure of deafness and blindness. Between twenty and thirty patients attended, many of whom it was stated by their parents had been born deaf and dumb. They were submitted to various tests, by which it was proved that their deafness had been cured by the application of Dr. Turnbull's remedies, and what appears most singular is, that whether the disease depended on paralysis of the auditory nerve, rupture of the tympanum, or obstruction of the internal passages, relief had been immediately obtained, or the complete cure effected, without delay, pain, or inconvenience. Several patients, who represented that they had been completely blind, said that they could now see perfectly well.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 12s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 71s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tabl s, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 66s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s each; Japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 26s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. DR. HANCOCK'S THERMAL, SULPHUREOUS, HOT MINERAL WATER, and MEDICATED VAPOUR BATHS, 49, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-sq. The Medical Faculty, the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, are respectfully informed, that these auxiliaries for the cure of Chronic, Inflammatory, and Cutaneous Disorders, are NOW OPEN, under the approbation of the most distinguished Physicians in the Metropolis. The Artificial Thermal Waters are composed of the same ingredients as the natural Springs of Bareges, Vichy, Aix-la-Chapelle, the Sulphureous Springs of Virginia, and the Island of Nevis, being in all respects equal to these, and possessing, moreover, the advantage of increased strength, and any additions to suit particular cases. They are available for the cure of a great variety of disorders, as gout and rheumatism, dropsy, scrofula, foul scorbutic ulcers, eruptions of the skin, coughs, and diseases of the chest, lungs, and nervous system. For the convenience of Invalids, apartments (with every accommodation and attendance) are provided on the premises.—Usual hours of attendance from Nine A.M. till Eight P.M.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 13s. each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 35, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE DOURO CLOAK!—The elegance of its appearance, the facility of its advantages, its convenient portability—folding in a case the size of a pocket-book!—its being perfectly waterproof and allowing the free egress of perspiration, recommend it as an invaluable personal accompaniment for the Opera, the Ball-room, and the Rout—to the Nobility and Gentry generally, to the M.P., to the Tourist, the Sportsman, the Traveller—to all exposed to cold, damp, or rain: whether from leaving the crowded assemblages of fashion, or by the sudden external changes of a variable climate.—"The Douro Cloak," the invention of George Walker, 33, St. James's-st., London, is equally adapted for Walking or Riding.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.

No. 188, New Bond Street (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

HICKSON, 1828, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Larenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—On 28th ult. a silver cup was presented to Lieut. and Adj. Anderton, through Col. the Hon. H. Cavendish, commanding the reg., with the following inscription:—"The Gift of Gen. Lord Viscount Combermere, G.C.B., Colonel of the First Regiment of Life Guards, to Lieutenant and Adjutant Wm. Anderton, for his zeal, assiduity, and exemplary conduct, whilst he held the important situation of Riding-Master."

Rl. Horse Guards (Blue)—The Grand Duke of Russia reviewed this regiment and the 14th Dragoons, in the Home Park, Windsor, on Wednesday. The Grand Duke came on the ground attended by Lord Hill and a brilliant staff, and was received with the usual honours. After which the regiments marched past by squadrons and threes, trotted and cantered past, and went through various evolutions. At the conclusion, his Imperial Highness addressed the officers of the regiments, and passed a high compliment on the soldier-like appearance of the men, and the admirable precision in which the various evolutions were performed.

6th Dragoon Guards—We have elsewhere given a memoir of the late Colonel of this corps, Gen. Hon. R. Taylor.

7th Dragoon Guards—District Memorandum:—

Adjutant-General's Office, Edinburgh, April 14, 1839.

Maj.-Gen. Lord Greenock cannot allow the 7th Drag. Guards to leave Scotland without expressing to Lt.-Col. Kennedy and the officers of that reg. his very great regret at parting with a corps which has so perfectly acquired his esteem and regard, both in respect to their private relations and their public duties. The appearance, discipline, and efficiency of the 7th Drag. Gds. afford very satisfactory proof of the zeal and attention with which the service is conducted by them in every department. The Maj.-Gen., at the same time, requests that the Non-commissioned officers and soldiers may be assured, that he has fully appreciated their excellent and soldierlike behaviour on all occasions during the period the regiment has been stationed in the district under his command.—By order of Major-Gen. Lord Greenock, K.C.B., commanding in N. Britain.

13th Light Dragoons—Dr. Clark, Assist.-Surgeon, has arrived from India.

15th Hussars—The Herefordshire, in which the head-qrs. and the greater part of the reg. will embark for Bombay, was detained for some days in the East India Docks, in consequence of her having grounded, through the great quantity of cargo in her. She has, however, been lightened, and has proceeded to Gravesend, from whence she will sail the beginning of next week. The first division embark on Monday. Lieut.-Col. Badcock, and Majors Phillipps and Wathen, proceed in the Herefordshire. The second division, under Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter Scott, proceed in the Malabar.

17th Lancers—Lt.-Col. Pratt is on leave, and Major St. Quintin commands.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards (2d batt.)—Col. Hay and 33 r. and f. have embarked for Canada.

Coldstream Guards, 1st Batt.—Yesterday morning a General Court Martial was held at the Wellington Barracks, St. James's-park, to inquire into the case of Charles Donellan, who stands charged with an attempt at murder. On the night of the 14th ult., (see N. & M. G. 18th) the prisoner was ordered to bed by his Corporal (Jeffery). He refused; and the Corporal was compelled to call in the picquet, who were about entering the room when the prisoner fired his musket, and the ball struck Private Henry Turner, entering his left shoulder and coming out under the bladebone of the right shoulder. Upon the prisoner being seized he declared it was his intention to have shot Corporal Jeffery, and he was sorry he had not done it. Turner, the wounded man, was taken to the infirmary, where he lay many days in a precarious state, and has only recently been declared out of danger. Evidence embracing the above facts was given in the court yesterday, and after the investigation had continued about two hours, the court found the prisoner guilty of the capital offence. The sentence will not be passed until Lord Hill, as Commander-in-Chief, has consulted the usual authorities; but it is generally expected that it will be transportation for life. The prisoner is as hardened as ever, and on Thursday last told the Serjeant who was on duty over him that he knew he should only get six months for it, and after that he would find means to shoot the —— Corporal.

10th—under command of Lt.-Col. Custance, proceeded from Liverpool, May 24th, by railway, to Manchester. The officers were entertained at dinner by the Mayor of Liverpool, May 23d.

This reg., 700 strong (recently from Dublin), arrived in this town yesterday, by railway, from Liverpool. The Military force here at present, therefore, consists of one regiment of Drags., three regs. of Infantry, and a company of Artillery—a force amply sufficient to preserve the peace of the town and neighbourhood, if it should be threatened by the Chartists.—Manchester Guardian.

12th Depot—Hd.-qrs., Newport; detachments at Llanidloes and Montgomery.

13th—Capt. Meredith has arrived from Calcutta.

16th—Lieut. W. A. Kirk has arrived from Calcutta.

21st—Quartermast. Fairgrieve died at Hobart Town on the eve of the reg. embarking for Madras.

21st Depot—Capt. Bunbury has leave to July 13.

22d—Three officers and seventy men moved, May 28, from the Royal Barracks, Dublin, to Island Bridge, the reg. being so complete that there was not sufficient room for their accommodation in the royal square.

24th—The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has appointed Capt. Williams to be Master of the Horse, in the room of Maj. Brownlow, who has declined the office.

25th—This fine reg. was reviewed by Major-Gen. Ellice, on the 27th ult., and went through their manœuvres and evolutions in such style as to elicit the highest praise of the General, and a great number of military officers who were present.

26th—Lieuts. Thompson and Sibley have arrived from Calcutta.

31st—Lieut. Stock has arrived from India.

32d—Lieut. Campbell, ordered to embark with the draft, has received a further prolongation of leave of absence until the arrival of the vessel at Cork.

34th Depot—The route from Nenagh is countermanded, and the new destination of the depot is Buttevant, not Cork. Two cos., under Capt. Norris, Ensigns Still and Bertles, have arrived in Limerick.

36th—The band and a detachment of the 36th, under command of Capt. Wyatt, started this morning for Fredricton. The departure of those troops was witnessed with regret by many of the inhabitants of this village, to whom (from the gentlemanly deportment of the officers, and steady conduct of the men) they were much attached. The officers of the garrison at Woodstock entertained the Governor, Sir J. Harvey, on his visit, at which all the officers commanding corps and heads of departments were called in succession upon their legs, and the neat and soldierlike reply of Major Brookes (commanding 69th) seemed to elicit general satisfaction. One circumstance added much to the conviviality of the evening,—the meeting of the 36th and 69th regs.—two corps (as Col. Maxwell expressed it) whose friendship, feelings, and facings, were alike—"ever fresh and ever green." Previous to his departure, Sir J. Harvey reviewed the troops in garrison on the ice, on the Meduxnakik Creek. They consisted of the Rl. Rl. Engineers—At Limerick, on the Queen's birth-day, the Horse Brigade Rl. Artillery, Rl. Sappers and Miners, 42d Highlanders, and 46th Depot, paraded before Major-Gen. Sir W. Macbean, who, having rode up to the right of the line, at which the 16th company of Rl. Sappers and Miners, commanded by Second-Capt. Stotherd, Rl. Engineers, was stationed, addressed the men as follows:—

"I take this opportunity of expressing to you how highly pleased I am with your very good behaviour and conduct, since you have been under my command, and although I have not had the pleasure of inspecting you under arms before, I have been gratified to see the orderly and clean state in which you have had your appointments on going to, and returning from, your Sunday parades, and the creditable manner in which you have always appeared in the streets while in this garrison. Everybody now knows the nature of the duties of the Royal Corps of Engineers and of Sappers and Miners, and the manner in which those duties have been performed; and I am sure that when your services are again required, you will emulate the conduct and example of your predecessors. I am highly gratified in saying that, although the nature of the duties of the Ordnance Survey on which you are now employed causes you to be much dispersed throughout the country, and therefore liable to great temptation and irregularity, your conduct has been such, that since you have been in this district, not a single case of irregularity has been brought under my notice."

The Major-Gen. having concluded, Capt. Stotherd thanked him for taking that opportunity of expressing to the non-commissioned officers and men his approbation of their good conduct and appearance, assuring him that no body of men could more highly deserve it. In the evening the non-commissioned officers present, amounting to fifteen, dined together, and spent the evening in a most social manner. Second-Capt. Gordon proceeds to N. Britain, to establish recruiting parties at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Inverness. At present Capt. Gordon commands the 4th comp. at Woolwich, Capt. Oldershaw the 7th, and the newly raised company to be commanded by Capt. and Brev.-Major Du Plat, K.H., will be the 10th.

CIRCULAR.—Barrack Damages.

Horse Guards, April 29th, 1830.

Sir,—The monthly inspection of barrack-rooms occupied by officers having been represented as productive of much personal inconvenience, the General Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to bring the subject to the attention of the Ordnance Department; and the Master-General and Board, desirous of promoting the comfort of officers, as far as may be consistent with due protection to the public property, have issued an order to Barrack-Masters, directing the extension of the inspections to quarterly periods, and the assessment of damages in the officers' rooms until the movement of troops from barracks, with certain exceptions, as stated in the order. In transmitting for your information and guidance a copy of the document above alluded to, I have the commands of the General Commanding-in-Chief to desire, that you will cause all its provisions to be strictly adhered to in the regiment under your command. In the event of its being necessary immediately to place an officer in a quarter which has been vacated, during the period that a regiment remains at the same station, you will be pleased to cause every facility to be afforded to the Ordnance authorities in effecting the repair of all such damages as may have been committed by the officer who had previously occupied the quarter.

And in every case you will be held responsible for the due payment of the amount of barrack damages, in conformity with the provisions made in the royal regulations and orders of the army on that head, page 264, so soon as the assessment shall be made. I have, &c. J. W. Gordon, Lt.-Gen., Qr.-Mr.-Gen.

Officer commanding —— Regiment.

G. O.—Home and Foreign Stations.

Office of Ordnance, 20th April, 1830.

The attention of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance having been drawn to the subject of monthly inspections and assessment of barrack damages in officers' quarters, with a view to a modification of the regulations on that head:—They are pleased to order that, except for the object of effecting the repair of broken glass, officers' quarters shall not be visited more frequently than once a quarter, and then not to assess damages, unless called upon to do so by the commanding officer, but to make out a statement, for the Commanding Royal Engineer's Department, of repairs required by fair wear, and the assessment of all barrack damages committed by officers shall be allowed to stand over until the marching out of the regiment, depot, or detachment; but, in granting this concession, the Master-General and Board trust that no difficulties or disputes will arise as to payment of the claim for damages which Barrack-Masters may deem it just to make in the regular and due performance of the multifarious and arduous duties they are called upon to execute on troops quitting a barrack. It is at the same time to be understood that in cases where Barrack-Masters are called upon by Article 48, page 176, of the Army Barrack Regulations, and the same article, page 24, of Barrack-Master's Instructions, to take up the quarter of an officer absent on his private affairs for any period extending beyond that of the monthly return, the assessment of damages committed must then be made and the amount paid, so that no question may arise on such quarter being given up to another officer. And further, that in all cases where, under Article 47, page 273, of the Army Barrack Regulations, and the same article, page 23, of the Barrack Regulations, officers change quarters for their own accommodation, an inspection is to take place on such change being made, to ascertain and assess any damage committed, and which must be forthwith paid for and repaired, in order to prevent any disputes that might otherwise occur, as to which officer might be subject to the charge. By order of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance.

R. Bynam, Secretary.

G. O.—Adjutant-General's Office, Dublin, May 18th, 1830.

The whole of the troops in Ireland are to be under arms at noon, on 23d inst., in or near their respective garrisons or quarters, and will fire three rounds at one o'clock P.M., in honour of Her Majesty's birth-day. The Rl. Artillery will fire 21 guns at their respective stations. The General Officers commanding districts will attend at the stations most convenient to their respective quarters. By command of the Lieutenant-General commanding, R. H. Wynyard, Dep. Assist. Adjut.-Gen., in the absence of the Dep. Adjut.-Gen.

In obedience to the above order, the troops composing the garrison of Dublin, viz., the Rl. Artillery, 6th Dragoons (three troops), 17th Lancers, 19th, 22d, 89th, and 97th Regts., assembled on the Fifteen Acres in the Phœnix-park, at 12 o'clock, on Thursday, 23d ult., and fired a feu de joie, at 1 o'clock, in honour of the Queen's birthday. The troops also performed some evolutions, under the orders of Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, K.C.B., Commanding the Forces.

A Court-Martial was held at the Marine Barracks, Chatham, last week, on a drummer named Dine, for disobedience of orders, he having refused to carry his sword. The excuse was, that it was against his religion to take up arms, he having become a member of the Society of Friends. Many of the Quakers from Rochester attended, and assisted him in his defence. The Court found him guilty, and sentenced him to three months' hard labour.

The Rank of Full Colonel in the Army.—(From a Correspondent).—It is confidently rumoured that some change is under the consideration of the Military Commission, relative to the rank and pay of Colonels in the Army. That rank, not being attainable by purchase, is usually the result of long service, and which, when attained, has no increase of pay or remuneration of any kind. It is known that such a system does not exist in any other Army but the British. The system also is different even in our own Navy, where a certain number of the senior Captains who rank with full Colonels have an increase of pay. The newly-established remuneration of service money has also been conferred upon a certain number of the senior Post-Captains. In the Army the whole has been given hitherto to General Officers. It results, therefore, that by the present system no officer, however considerable his services, can ever attain anything beyond the half-pay of Lieut.-Colonel.

We have the painful duty of recording the murder of of Serjeant-Major W. Shepherd, 2d Batt., Rl. Foot Artillery, a man held high in the estimation of the officers of that corps, and who has been Serjeant-Major for nearly 24 years, and served in several of the Duke of Wellington's campaigns. The following are the depositions before the magistrates:—

Central Criminal Court to wit.—The information of Andrew Patten, acting bombardier in the fifth batt. Rl. Artillery, taken upon oath 26th May.—The said Andrew Patten, on oath, says as follows.—This morning, between the hours of 9 and 10, at which time the soldiers of the garrison were assembled on the parade in the front of the Rl. Artillery Barracks, in the parish of Woolwich, but had not fallen in, I saw the prisoner George Willis at about 10 yards in front of the flags or pavement of the said barracks. He raised his musket and took a deliberate aim at the late Serjeant-Major William Shepherd. He then fired, and I saw William Shepherd fall. The prisoner then turned round and threw his musket on the ground. I ran to the prisoner and Serjt. T. Polson did the same, and we both laid hold of the prisoner and took him into custody. Serjt. Polson asked him what made him do the act, and he (the prisoner) replied, "I meant this some time." I then took him to the guard-room.

(Signed) Andrew Patten.

John Snowbell being duly sworn, saith:—I am a Corporal in the 9th batt. Rl. Artillery. This morning, between the hours of 9 and 10, I was on the parade in front of the Rl. Artillery Barracks, and I heard the report of a musket. On looking round I saw the Serjeant-Major, William Shepherd, falling, and I also saw a musket lying on the ground at about eight yards from the Serjt.-Major, and the prisoner was walking from it. I immediately went to the Serjt.-Major, who was lying flat on his face. I took hold of him by his left arm and endeavoured to raise him, which I did, and perceived blood on his forehead and the blood gushing profusely from his breast. He cast his eyes slightly towards me, but never spoke. I then went to get a stretcher to remove him, but when I returned he had been carried away.

(Signed) John Snowbell.

Thomas Mason, being duly sworn, saith,—I am a bombardier in the 2nd batt. Rl. Artillery. This morning, between the hours of 9 and 10, I saw the late Serjeant-Major W. Shepherd lying on the parade in front of the Royal Artillery Barracks, apparently wounded. Soon afterwards I saw him conveyed into No. 7 barrack-room, to all appearance lifeless. Assist.-Surg. Richardson, of the Ordnance Medical Department, came in soon afterwards, and desired me, with some others, to take off the coatee of the Serjt.-Major. We did so, but found that he was quite dead.

(Signed) Thomas Mason.

On Tuesday an inquest was held on the body, when the jury returned a verdict "Wilful Murder against George Willis." The prisoner heard the verdict without betraying the slightest emotion. The coroner's warrant for his committal to Newgate was then made out, whither he was removed in custody of the civil power. The prisoner is stated in the orderly book to be a native of Lymington, and was enlisted at Winchester on the 3d of May last year, when he represented himself to be 18 years of age. He refuses to disclose any particulars respecting his family. It is said that a correspondence has already taken place between Sir John Webb and Lord Bloomfield on the propriety (should the prisoner be convicted of the murder) of taking means to induce the judge who tries him to order his execution to be carried into effect on the spot where the crime was committed. The reason assigned for this departure from the ordinary rule is, that the sight would act as a lesson to the other soldiers stationed in this garrison. A communication has been made to the Secretary at War, embracing the principal facts of the diabolical act, by the Commandant.

We understand that poor Shepherd has left a wife and six children; two of them are Non-Commissioned Officers in the regt., and two other sons have been put on pay in the books of the regt. since this dreadful occurrence, and we have no doubt but that the Master-General will do everything in his power to ameliorate the unfortunate situation in which the unhappy widow is placed, by her husband's loss of life while in the execution of his duty. Although the wretched perpetrator of this vile act during the whole of the inquest did not appear to feel the awful situation in which he had placed himself, and when the jury returned their verdict, which consigned him to prison as a murderer, scarcely a change could be seen in his countenance, yet we understand that afterwards he fainted several times. On a careful examination of the evidence produced at the inquest, we are of opinion that nothing has appeared to palliate this dreadful act, but that, on the contrary, the wretched man Willis had been treated with great forbearance by the deceased, whose general character was that of an exemplary soldier, and a kind man; he was 49 years of age, and had served 32 years in the regiment.

[From a Correspondent.]—"The funeral took place this afternoon (Friday); in addition to the pall-bearers (see the Garrison Order), there were two of the Scots Fusilier Guards, the Serjeant-Major, and Quartermaster-Serjeant. Several Serjeants and Corporals of the Guards attended, as well as some of the Warders from the Tower. If I may apply the term grand to a funeral, the poor man had a much grander one than will fall to the lot of most officers. The greater proportion of the Artillery Officers attended the funeral, and also many of the Marines, as well as the Engineers. The Commander, Lord Bloomfield, was present. There were several respectable inhabitants of the town also there, and most of the shops were closed; the crowd immense. The excitement caused by this dreadful affair is extreme and unabated; every person wishes, that in case the prisoner is convicted, he may pay the penalty of his crime as near as possible to the spot on which it was committed."

Among the officers who followed in the procession were: Lord Bloomfield, Commandant of the garrison; Colonels King, Cruttenden, Bastard, Crawford, Petley, Dickson, and Gore; Major Sweeting; Captains Wingfield, Skinner, Teasdale, Furneaux, Mead, Rowland, Wright, Best, and Savage; Lieutenants Hamilton, Younghusband, Wilson, Clark, Rogers, Borroughwood, and Campbell, of Rl. Artl.; and the following officers belonging to the Rl. Marines—Col. Wingrove, Commanding Officer; Col. Mercer; Captains Hughes, Leonard, Gray, and Wood; Dr. Parkin; Lieuts. Onslow, Henley, besides a number of officers of the Rifle Brigade, and all the Quarter-Masters and Non-commissioned officers of the Artillery, Rifles, Marines, and Sappers and Miners stationed at Woolwich. The three Turkish officers who had been practising for some time at Woolwich were also present. Mr. Watts, the High Constable, and a posse of peace officers, preceded the procession, followed by Captain Wingfield, the Adjutant on duty, and Lord Bloomfield and his Aide-de-Camp on horseback. After his Lordship came the brass band of the Sappers and Miners, and the bands of the Rl. Artillery and Marines played "The Dead March in Saul." The body of the murdered man came next, followed by his eldest son George Shepherd, as chief mourner, and next to him two younger sons of the age of about eight and ten, and lastly, an exceedingly pretty little girl about three, and a fine chubby-faced boy about four or five years of age, who appeared to be quite unconscious of the cause that attracted the anxious gaze of the multitude. They excited great commiseration from the spectators. The Non-commissioned Officers of the same rank as the deceased, belonging to the Marines and Artillery, and wearing large crape scarfs, followed; and after them the warders of the Tower, and friends of the deceased, many of whom had known Shepherd in his most trying campaigns. The respective officers and privates of the three corps at Woolwich brought up the rear, and the procession altogether could not have been much less than a mile in length. The Rev. Mr. Greenlaw, Rector of Woolwich, met the Rev. Messrs. Henslow, Scott, and Guthrie, Chaplains to the garrison, at the entrance to the churchyard, and the corpse was taken from the gun-carriage, and borne into the church. Here also the deepest anxiety was displayed to witness the ceremony, and the galleries were densely crowded by ladies who had taken their seats two or three hours before. The Rev. Mr. Greenlaw and Mr. Henslow performed the burial service, and the band of the Royal Artillery executed with brilliant effect the anthem from the 15th chapter of Corinthians. The coffin was afterwards deposited in the churchyard, and three rounds fired over the grave by twenty-five Artillerymen, which is six above the usual compliment. In short, every possible mark or respect was paid by both the superiors and inferiors of this upright soldier. It is painful to add, that in all probability the children of the deceased will be bereaved of their mother. Drs. Goldsworthy and Richardson were unremitting in their attentions to the afflicted widow during Thursday night, and one of the Chaplains has repeatedly visited her, and afforded spiritual solace; but it is feared she will sink under the loss that she has sustained.

Major-Gen. Sir Wm. Macbean, K.C.B., has received leave of absence to proceed to England; and the troops serving in the South Western District of Ireland will report through the Assistant Adjutant-General to head-quarters during the Major-General's absence.

Wednesday being the anniversary of the Restoration, a general inspection of the Foot Guards, by their Commanding Officers, took place on the parade in St. James's Park, where the peculiar Military usages of the day were duly performed—the band at intervals executing several national and favourite airs.

At the Surrey Sessions on Wednesday, a private in the 1st batt. Coldstream Guards was convicted of robbery, but recommended to mercy on account of his former good character. The Serjeant was asked by the Court whether a soldier was taken back to his regiment after a conviction; and the reply was in the affirmative, if the sentence of imprisonment did not exceed 12 months.

We understand that the new pontoons, tried last week at Woolwich before the Master-General of the Ordnance, may, after some alterations, be found useful to pass infantry over narrow rivers, but that they will never compete with Blanshard's tin pontoons.

PORTSMOUTH, May 31.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Lily was not paid off until Monday: in the afternoon she was taken charge of by the Britannia, and on Tuesday Com. Deare, from the Clio, assumed the command. Commander S. G. Freemantle has joined the Clio. Lily is to return to the Coast of Africa when she is manned. Flamer steamer came to Spithead on Tuesday last, from Plymouth, but previously from Bermuda. She is in a defective condition, and to add to it had a very bad passage home of 32 days: she brought despatches from the North American squadron, which were landed at Plymouth. An explanation of the affair between the Medea and French brig Griffon has arrived by Flamer. Commodore Douglas was at Bermuda on 6th April, with his broad pendant on board Cornwallis; Ringdove and Medea were there. Edinburgh had been on shore, and so seriously injured her false keel, as to oblige her to come to England to be docked. Britannia was taken out of dock on Monday, and afterwards masted: she is now in the basin fitting. Queen is in dock to be coppered: an alteration is about to be made in the bust of Her Majesty, which is found to be ill-proportioned. Benbow has bent her sails, and will probably go to Spithead to-morrow or Monday: she cannot go to sea, however, as her gun-carriages are not ready. Hastings is making good her trifling defects at Spithead, and will be able to go to sea again next week, if required. The cabins fitted for the Queen Dowager are to be dismantled, and the stores returned to the Dock-yard, an evident intention that in future the ship is to be sent to a foreign station: it is believed she will relieve the Minden. Avon transport steamer came here yesterday with the Revenge's Marines, and Mr. King, formerly Master of the Messenger, is appointed to command her: she will be employed in moving troops, volunteer seamen, or such other duties as may be required of her. The Messenger will still continue the tug-vessel in the harbour. Revenge is fitting alongside the jetty. Childers is to go to Plymouth next week, and afterwards to the East Indies: she was moved out of the basin this morning. Hydra is in harbour ready, but without orders. Clio is beginning to fit: she has only her Marines and a few boys. A strong party of men are at work on the Magicienne, and a few on the Warspite, Rattlesnake, and Sapphire. Blonde has been taken out of the basin: she is ready for officers and men, but no one yet appointed. Diligence transport is unloading alongside the Dock-yard: she is afterwards to take provisions from the Victualling-yard to Deptford. Flamer has gone to Woolwich. Ships in Port—Hastings at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Benbow, Excellent, Royal George yt., Hydra, Lily, Clio, Childers, Avon, Messenger, Diligence, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, 31st May.—(From our own Correspondent)—24th—Sailed Curlew, 10, Lieut.-Com. G. Rose, for Cape of Good Hope and Coast of Africa; she has taken out Supernumeraries for the men-of-war on that coast. Lieut. T. C. Ross appointed to the Melville, and Mr. Norcock, Clerk-in-Charge of the Waterwitch, have taken their passage in her. Sailed the Sylph, tender to the Impregnable, with Supernumeraries for the ships at Portsmouth, and returned here the following day. 25th—Arrived Flamer, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. J. M. Polbury, from West Indies, and sailed again on 26th for Woolwich where she is to be paid. 27th—Arrived Prospero, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Hoseason, from Pembroke, with volunteer seamen for the Navy. Off the Dodman, she fell in with and spoke the Earl of Durham transport, having on board a detachment of the 1st Dragoon Guards, bound to Canada. Lieut. H., on being made acquainted that Cornet J. B. E. W. B. Leigh, belonging to that regiment, was dangerously ill on board, he kindly took him on board the Prospero, and on his arrival here, Cornet Leigh was conveyed to the Rl. Military Hospital, and we regret to say he expired the same night. Prospero sailed on her return to Pembroke, the following day. 29th—Malabar, 72, was taken out of dock, and the Forth, 44, was hauled in to have her copper repaired and scrubbed. 30th—Harpy, 10, ordered to be sold, was hauled on the graving slip, to ascertain the difference between the composition copper and the copper generally used in the Navy, when it was found that the latter was far superior to the other. Nine joiners have been added to those already entered in the Dock-yard, making in the whole (joiners and house-carpenters) 64 in number; but they are only engaged for three months. The 28th of June, the anniversary of Her Majesty's coronation, is the day fixed for the launching of the Nile, 92. 31st—Pandora, 4, Lieut.-Com. R. W. Innes, will be taken into dock this day, to have her copper repaired and scrubbed. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Pandora, Carron, st.-v.

MILFORD HAVEN, 29th May.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Prospero steamer, en passant from the Clyde, put in here for coals on Saturday last; her Second Master, Mr. Pritchard, who has succeeded Mr. Yule, joined her on that occasion: on Sunday she left for Plymouth, having on board the seamen employed in navigating the Hecate. On Monday the Tortoise lighter arrived with Naval stores from Plymouth; she is waiting for fifteen shipwrights ordered from Pembroke to Plymouth-yard. To-day the Prospero returned to the station, having been absent between six and seven months undergoing repairs; she will relieve the Monkey, at present employed as an extra packet. Mr. T. C. Jones, the Surgeon of Pembroke-yard, is gone on public leave. The anniversary of our beloved Queen's birth-day was hailed on the 23d inst. throughout the port with every demonstration of respect. Up at the Dock-yard the great guns fired a royal salute, which was re-echoed to by the small ones of the Marine detachment. The Royal Sovereign yacht and the packets in port were tastefully decorated, and every signal staff, both here and up at the Arsenal, had its flag "fluttering in the breeze." The Castlemartin Yeomanry Cavalry are ordered for permanent duty on the 1st of August next; the corps consists of three troops, and is in an efficient state.

Deptford.—Sailed Admiral Moorsom for Jamaica; Marquis of Huntley for Cork and Quebec; Neptune, to Gravesend for Australia; Sackville, for Sierra Leone. Arrived—Barrosa transport, Lieut. Scrymgour, Agent, from West Indies, and Stakesby, for Quebec. Remain—Middlesex and Mary Anne, male and female convict ships; Florist, for emigrants for Australia; the Devon lighter, loading for Portsmouth and Plymouth. The Lively lighter has arrived with Queen Adelaide's baggage from Portsmouth

Jamaica, 6th April.—Commodore Douglas arrived here on 25th March, in Medea st.-frigate, 14 days from Vera Cruz, and from Havannah, four days; Edinburgh, 72, and Cornwallis, 72, had sailed from the Havannah, the former for Bermuda and the latter for Port Royal; Dee steamer arrived at Jamaica, on 31st March, with the mail from St. Thomas; Andromache, 28, on 1st April, 21 days from Vera Cruz; Shipjack, on 2nd, from a cruize; Pique, 36, on 3d, 20 days from Vera Cruz, and the Wanderer; on 4th arrived Rover, 12 days from Honduras; and Pickle schooner, from a cruize. Hercules, 72, sailed from Jamaica for Halifax, on 24th March, with 57th reg. on board, under command of Maj. Bradshaw; Tartarus st. sailed on same day for St. Thomas's; Flamer, on 28th, for Bermuda; Sappho, on 2nd April, for Carthagena; and, on 6th, Charybdis, for Bermuda.

H.M.S. Wasp was at Gibraltar 10th May; also the Volcano, Lieut. West. Truncelo was at Cadiz; at Lisbon, Donegal, Ganges, Implacable, Daphne, and Espoir. Harlequin, 18, was at Teneriffe on 10th May.

The Deputy, Master, and Elder Brethren of the Trinity House have munificently granted out of their private charitable fund the sum of 100*l.* to the Royal Naval Benevolent Society. This act of private benevolence will be fully appreciated as a testimony of the close sympathy existing between the Royal and Commercial Navies of this country.

The Kite steamer, Lieut. George Snell, R.N., leaves Woolwich for Portsmouth on Sunday next, on her way to the West Indies, and takes some supernumerary officers for ships on that station.

The Fantome, 16, was this week launched at Chatham.

The Defence, Black Prince, and Tremendous, seventy-fours, are to be moved from Sheerness to the Chatham Ordinary.

The Barham is to be docked and examined at Sheerness. It appears doubtful whether she is worth repairing.

The Speedy cutter has sailed from Sheerness, and the Dolphin cutter will soon follow, on the Scotch Fisheries protection duties.

Lieut. Crispin, R.N., of the Revenue Coast Guard Service, has been recently presented with a splendid set of silver dishes, for his zealous attention to a merchant-vessel in distress.

The Cockbush, Coast Guard Station, Chichester, has recently driven off a smuggling boat attempting to land, and has also taken 25 tubs and a flaggon of contraband spirits.

The Firefly and Echo steamers have been paid off at Woolwich. The Alban and Flamer are also expected at Woolwich, to be paid off.

The Avon steamer has taken 125 officers and men of the Rl. Marines from Woolwich to Portsmouth for the Revenge.

Royal Marines.—The Chatham division was inspected by Major-General Sleigh on Monday last, both in their field exercise and interior economy. We understand that the General expressed his high opinion of the corps in the most gratifying terms. The Woolwich division was inspected on Thursday. The Portsmouth will be inspected on the 4th, and the Plymouth on the 10th, of this month.

Malta, May 12.—Immediately upon the arrival of the French steamer Lycurgue, from Marseilles, Admiral Stopford gave orders to the brig Jaseur to be ready to sail, and the next day it immediately left for Corfu, with despatches from Commodore Parker. Those despatches contained orders for the Commodore to sail immediately for the Levant with Rodney, Talavera, Belleruphon, and Castor. On Wednesday the officers of the garrison gave a grand ball at the Hotel de Provence, in honour of Prince George of Cambridge's [illegible]

Royal Naval School Society.—On Tuesday the annual general meeting of the above-named society was held at the Horticultural Society's Rooms, Regent-street, Sir G. Cockburn in the chair. The meeting was well attended, and amongst others present were the Earl of Yarborough, Sir G. Seymour, Adm. White, Sir E. Codrington, Sir R. Dobson, Sir F. Ommanney, Capts. M. Smith, Carnac, Dickenson, Dickson, &c. The Chairman having opened the business of the meeting by an introductory speech, the Secretary read the annual report of the council of administration, which stated that the building fund had continued to accumulate, and that its more speedy augmentation might be fully anticipated when the building should be commenced. The amount also subscribed exclusively for this object, the report stated, was 2,203*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.*, including a third donation of 100*l.* from Sir Isaac Coffin, whose distinguished liberality and support entitled him to the warm gratitude of this institution. In reference to the system adopted by the institution, the report stated that drilling, so essential to youth for the attainment of a gentlemanlike carriage and deportment, now forms a part of the discipline and exercise of the pupils; a Drill-Serjeant having been recently appointed to attend regularly for that purpose; and that an alteration in the system of education had been experimentally adopted, by which, after acquiring the necessary rudiments, the attention of the pupils was directed more particularly to those branches of education suitable to their future prospects in life. The report further stated that, in compliance with the resolution of the last general meeting, pupils were now permitted to continue in the school until they had attained the age of 18, instead of 17, as heretofore, thus giving them the opportunity of completing their education at this establishment. The report was received and adopted unanimously.

Sir E. Codrington addressed the meeting at length, explanatory of several of the statements in the report; after which the especial thanks of the meeting were directed to be conveyed through the council to Sir Isaac Coffin, for the liberality and personal interest he had evinced towards the society.

Sir Richard Dobson proposed, as an enlargement of the rule relating to the qualification of members, that the Assistant Surgeons of the Navy be eligible to become members of this society, and participators in its benefits, to which he contended they were entitled by their education and permanent attachment to the service. A lengthy discussion followed, in the course of which several propositions were made to further enlarge the rule by a declaration of the rights of Mates, Second Masters, and passed Clerks (of six years' service), to become members, which terminated in the matter being referred to the council for their consideration, with a request that they would report on it at the next year's meeting. The vacancies by rotation in the council were then filled up, and the officers for the ensuing year elected. Capt. J. Jones, for whose valuable services the Chairman said the society was deeply indebted, was unanimously elected a vice-president of the institution. The receipts for the year ending 31st Dec. last amounted to 5,020*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, and the disbursements to 4,905*l.* 14*s.*, leaving a balance in favour of the society of 114*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Thanks to the Earl of Yarborough, the medical and legal officers, the members of the council, and the chairman of the meeting, were passed, after which the meeting broke up.

In the evening a number of noblemen and gentlemen, and including (besides the Earl of Yarborough, who was in the chair) the Earl of Devon, Lord Byron, Admiral Sir G. Cockburn, Vice-Adm. Sir E. Codrington, the Hon. Sir C. Boyle, Major-Gen. Sir J. Savage, Dr. Russell, Sir F. Ommanney, and others, sat down to dinner at the London Tavern. After the usual loyal toasts, the Chairman proposed, "Prosperity to the Rl. Naval School Society." He said that amongst the many advantages contemplated by the promoters of this institution, the one which was most calculated to attract the general benevolence of the British public was that which provided education for the orphans of the men who had served their country and had died in its cause. This was a valuable institution, in so far as it supplied a vacancy which the poverty, and perhaps the pride of many a widow of a deserving officer, who had served his country, left unprovided for. The noble Earl concluded an eloquent speech by calling upon all present not merely to send in their names, but to canvass their friends, and to render substantial support to the society.

This toast was drunk with great enthusiasm, and, instead of the hackneyed "one cheer more," the jolly navigation guests substituted "one rattle more,"—a feature in the evening's entertainments which, if not comme il faut, was at least characteristic.

Several other toasts and healths were proposed, including "The memory of Dr. Bell," who bequeathed the munificent donation of 10,000*l.* In proposing the health of the Chairman, Adm. Sir G. Cockburn observed that, although the noble individual was not exactly attached to the service, yet he might not altogether be considered as a fair-weather sailor. Lord Yarborough returned thanks, and admitted that he was not altogether to be considered as a "foul-weather jack," but he confessed that he regretted that he was not more intimately connected with the service.

H.M.S. Hastings.—Queen Adelaide, on leaving the ship, was very much affected; Her Majesty several times cast her eyes towards the poop, and said, "Ah! there is my old place where I used to sit." She remained on the quarter-deck for half an hour, taking her last farewell, and remarking how nice the ship looked since her carriages were landed. She curtsied to all around her when she quitted the deck; and as the barge shoved off, the cheers given by the ship's company of the Hastings were warmly returned by every one in the barge. As the steamer passed close on the starboard side of the Hastings, Her Majesty was again cheered, on which she approached the side of the vessel and waved her handkerchief; the steamer went round the Hastings twice, and those on board describe the scene to have been very affecting; there was scarcely a dry eye on board the Lightning. Her Majesty made a very handsome present of silver plate to Com. Worth, and a necklace for his lady. After Queen Adelaide had quitted the Hastings, Capt. Loch addressed the officers and ship's company as follows:—"It is the Queen Dowager's gracious pleasure that I should take this mode of informing the officers and ship's company under my command of the gratification and satisfaction Her Majesty has received from their general good conduct while the standard has been flying on board the Hastings. Queen Adelaide also takes this mode of bidding the officers and ship's company farewell, wishing them health and prosperity."

Lt. Crighton, R.N., the Manager of the Leith and London Steam Navigation Company, is now engaged with a plan for converting all the merchant steamers of the United Kingdom into war-steamers. All he requires of Government is, we find, to have the steamers periodically inspected, and to have the proper guns always ready to place on board of them the instant a hostile demonstration is made by any of our continental neighbours. England, again, against the world in arms!

H.M.'s packet Swift, Lieut. Welch, arrived from the Brazils, has brought home on freight about 22,000*l.*, and did not touch either at Bahia or Pernambuco on her homeward voyage.

The Portsmouth Harbour Humane Society last week bestowed their highest reward on W. Corbie, a marine of H.M.S. Childers, for periling his own life in saving James Berry, a boy who had fallen overboard from the ship; at the same time Thomas Holloway, H. Hobbins, Corporal of Marines, and James Kingswell were also rewarded for extricating a woman from death, who had attempted suicide by drowning in the Moats.

The following ships of 80 guns are ordered to be built—Majestic, Mars, Chatham; Aboukir, Albion, Plymouth; Centurion, Colossus, Pembroke. These are Vanguard class, and precisely the same tonnage and dimensions as that noble ship.—The following brigs, of the same dimensions as the packets, are also ordered to be built—Dispatch, Dove, Chatham; Cygnet, Heroine, Hound, Woolwich; Mariner, Martin, Pembroke. They will be armed with 10 guns each.

Volcano, st.-ves., Lieut.-Com. West (1814), arrived from Malta at Gibraltar, and sailed on her return May 10.

Calliope, 28, Capt. T. Herbert (1822), sailed from Hobart Town for Monte Video 18th May.

The late Capt. John Filmore, R.N., entered the Navy early in life as Midshipman on board the Sirius, Captain Prowse, which ship, at the battle of Trafalgar, having to take charge of one of the disabled prizes, Mr. Filmore was sent on board her. On being made Lieutenant, he soon became first of the Crocodile, Capt. Colombine, on the African station, where, on the death of that officer, he succeeded to the command. He subsequently was appointed to the Ordinary, at Plymouth; and having volunteered his services, he was a second time sent to the Coast of Africa, to command the Bann sloop-of-war, when, on the death of the Commodore, he became Post-Captain, and succeeded to the command of that station in the Owen Glendower frigate. After remaining there twelve months, he was at length so reduced by fever, as to be obliged to resign the command and come home; since which he never entirely recovered from the debilitating effects of disease acquired on that pestilential coast.

The crew of the Tartar, revenue cutter, have been presented with 50*l.*, and her Commander Lieut. Davies, R.N., with a pair of elegant Etruscan Models, through Capt. Rauberg, of the Danish Navy, for their recent services to a vessel of that nation.

The late Capt. Edward Hawkins, whose demise was recently recorded, had been in the service upwards of sixty years, and was the son of a very meritorious old officer, Mr. Hawkins, Master, R.N. Capt. Hawkins was one of five brothers who had devoted themselves to the country; and of whom four died in actual service, or from the effects of wounds received in action; viz., Lieut. Charles, perished in the Mucheron when she was lost; Lieut. George was carried off by yellow fever when first of the Plantagenet; Lieut. Abel lost his life whilst first of the Endymion, in boarding an American privateer; and Richard, the fourth brother, was desperately wounded at the Nile, when first of the Theseus; on which occasion he obtained his rank as Commander, and was subsequently posted: but though a severe sufferer from his wounds, and which ultimately caused his death, he could never be prevailed on to solicit a pension. Edward, the subject of the present memoir, was the last of this patriotic family, and, like his brothers, was ever active and zealous, and saw considerable service in rencontres which the "profession" are in the habit of considering as "things of course," and which his extreme diffidence induced him to account as of little import. He, however, took an active part in the affair of Toulon, and was conspicuous for his gallantry, when commanding the Dispatch brig, in bringing to action the President, a French 44-gun frigate, one of the roving squadron from L'Orient, under Commodore Jean l'Hermitte, which had done much mischief in the West Indies and African coast. The President, having parted from her consorts, fell in with Sir T. Louis' squadron, and was chased; the Despatch taking the lead succeeded, after a hard run and skilful manœuvring, during three hours, in getting within gunshot, when a smart fire was interchanged between the bow and stern chasers of the brig and frigate, and maintained for upwards of an hour, not another vessel being within three miles. About 8 P.M. the President gave up the contest, wore round, hauled down her colours, and was taken possession of by the Despatch, and Com. Hawkins was honoured with Post rank very shortly after. The only scion of this gallant and meritorious band of brothers, is one boy, about 12 years of age, the son of Capt. Edward Hawkins, left to perpetuate the name.

THE LATE GEN. THE HON. ROBERT TAYLOR.

THIS veteran officer, uncle to the Marquis of Headfort, died at his seat, Davestown, in Ireland, on 23d ult., at the advanced age of seventy-nine. He was appointed Cornet, 5th Dragoon Guards, 26th Apr. 1783; Lieut., 1st Oct. 1784; Capt., 25th June, 1785; Major, 31st July, 1790; and Lieut.-Col., 28th Feb. 1792. He served in Ireland with these ranks till Oct. 1793, and from that period in Flanders and Germany until Dec. 1795. He was present at the investment of Landrecy and the actions that took place in consequence on 17th Apr. 1794; at the siege of the same place; at the action on 26th April, when the French attacked the covering Army at Cateau Cambresis, and were defeated, at the action on 10th May following, at Cysoing, when the French attacked the lines of the allies before Tournay; with the Duke of York's column when the allied Army advanced into the French territory, on 17th May, to join General Clerfayt in West Flanders; at the general attack made by the French on the whole line of the allies, on the 22d of the same month.

The 3d May, 1796, he received the Brevet of Colonel. From Feb. 1798, till July, 1799, he served as Brigadier-General in Ireland. He was second in command under Gen. Lake when the British Army pursued, attacked, and captured the whole of the French force, with their General, 8th Sept. 1798. His name was, on this occasion, particularly mentioned by General Lake in his despatch to Lord Cornwallis, as will be seen by the following extract:—"To Brigadier-General Taylor I have to return my most sincere thanks for his great exertions and assistance, particularly on this day."—The 1st Jan. 1801, he received the rank of Major-General. He served again in Ireland from Oct. 1803, to the 25th Apr. 1808; when he received the rank of Lieut.-Gen. The 12th Aug. 1819, he was promoted, by Brevet, to the rank of full General. The 30th April he obtained the Colonelcy of the 6th Dragoon Guards. His estates descend to his nephew, Capt. Taylor, of the Inniskilling Dragoons.

LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALEX. BURNES.

SIR,—In your valuable Journal of 25th May, An Old Officer and Constant Reader has addressed a letter to you, headed "Indian Rewards and Justice." In this epistle he commences by saying he would be the last to disparage any man, and then proceeds to indulge in some ungenerous and sneering remarks on Lieut.-Col. Sir Alexander Burnes, whom he is pleased to denominate a favourite of fortune, and whose veracity of statements, in his "Travels to Bokhara," the Old Officer seems to doubt, characterising the book as a work which rests on his own (Sir A. B.'s) authority, without power of contradiction. Your correspondent then complains of the many favours heaped upon "this single individual," and draws an invidious comparison between two other officers and Lieut.-Col. Burnes. Even the notice of the movements of the latter in an unauthorised newspaper paragraph (taken, perhaps, from a Cadet's last letter to his mother), excites the indignation of the Constant Reader, while Her Majesty's Government is called to account for conferring honours upon him. It is also stated by your correspondent that Sir A. Burnes, for the publishing of his book, was promoted to Captain, and a Cadetship given to his brother. In answer to the first statement, I beg to inform him that Col. B. remained a Lieut. for two years after his book was published, when he became Captain by seniority after 14 years and 10 months' service. The Cadetship to his brother was the generous private gift of Mr. John Loch, late Chairman of the East India House, "in testimony of his opinion of Lieut. Burnes' eminent services." As to Col. B.'s good pay when at home, we presume it was such as would be given to an officer specially sent home by the Governor-General; Lord W. Bentinck, "to communicate authentic and valuable information obtained by himself to the Home Government." I forbear alluding to his remarks on the Government's neglect of other officers, and will now supply him with these few facts:—

First—That three years before receiving any mark of Government favor, Sir A. Burnes had obtained the gold and silver medals of the Royal Geographical Societies of London and Paris, a special honorary diploma from the Royal Asiatic Society, and had been elected an F.R.S., I believe, without his knowledge. Second—That he had received 800 guineas for his book from Mr. Murray, which called forth the praises of every Review, from the Quarterly and United Service to the Penny Magazine, and has since been translated into French, German, and Russian, and reprinted in America.

Surely these were evidences of the possession of some merit by Sir A. Burnes; but if further proof were necessary, I would recommend him to consult the eminent men under whom Lieut.-Col. B. had the honour to serve—Mr. Elphinstone, Sir Thos. Bradford, and the late Sir John Malcolm,—who first discerned his worth, and sent him on diplomatic service. In conclusion, Lord Auckland, the Governor-Gen. of India, has thought "our fortunate author and favourite of fortune" worthy of being removed from his own Presidency, and to act under the Gov.-General's orders; and I refer the Constant Reader to the voluminous Parliamentary Documents lately published, containing the valuable correspondence of Sir John McNiel and Sir Alex. Burnes, on the late intrigues in Persia and Cabul, for a further illustration of the services and merits of both these officers. DELTA.

TRISTRAM'S SURVEY OF THE MEASURES OF THE PRESENT NAVAL ADMINISTRATION.

(Concluded.)

"I lastly was with Curtis, among the floating batteries,
And there I left for witnesses an arm and a limb,
Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me,
I'd clatter on my stumps at the sound of the drum.
Lal de daudle, &c."

SIR,—I fully anticipated that Lord Minto would have obtained of his royal Governess, in 1839, the same nominal army rank for the subordinates of the Navy, conferred upon them by Governor Elliot, at the siege of Gibraltar, in 1782, viz. "Midshipmen with Ensigns;" however, as Military rank for the Mates and Midshipmen will consequently follow the report of the "Military Commission," the Naval gentlemen will be indebted to his Lordship for a title that will make them as stiff-necked in the dock-yards as Subalterns in a market-town.

Continuing the survey of his Lordship's measures, I will say, that the Order in Council respecting the service pensions for the non-commissioned and privates of Marines, was both wise and beneficial. They are henceforth to count two years' playing at soldiers in barracks or country quarters, for one year's service on the deep, or on the sod over the deep. It will give the Marines a smack for the grog and prog of our native sea—a gusto for the wines and olives of foreign lands. In the four divisions and the detachment at Pembroke, at least 400 idlers never sniff the saline breezes of the ocean, but inhale the fragrant zephyrs of the land—marching, not in regimentals with shouldered arms, but promenading in liveries or jockey-tights, flourishing canes or riding-whips, purchased with the extra fees of their situations or employment. This selected battalion consists of writers, grooms, orderlies, sick attendants, valets, and

Suppose this an objectionable measure in the opinion of this barrack-nursed and Sunday-mustering battalion, it cannot be so considered, when at least 200 of them will be taken from Chatham, Portsmouth, and Plymouth, to form, with every officer and man at Woolwich, "the Gibraltar Division," and the Admiralty Memorandum issued for all Marines at home, holding livery places and staff appointments, to take their turn of service in the foreign battalion. The garrisoning of Gibraltar with Marines will redress their every imaginary grievance. It will give the officers army pay and allowances—the non-commissioned and privates equal pensions with those of the Infantry.

"The Rock" would have been garrisoned with Marines long ago, and Admiral Fleming Governor of Malta, had not the battalion in Parliament cried "Halt!" the magic or panic word of command to every Minister willing to honour or reward a sea officer. Sir Sydney Smith at Acre, and Sir George Cockburn in America, displayed the effect of combined Naval and Military evolutions and manœuvres. Both these Naval heroes are General Officers of Marines. What other Generals are more deserving of, or more eligible for, the command of the Naval Ports and Arsenals, Malta and Gibraltar, by right of conquest Naval governments? For the saving of 100,000*l.* per annum to the Exchequer, and in justice to the Navy and Marines, they who stormed and defended should alone govern and garrison Gibraltar.

Glorious the day, happy the hour, when friend Tristram sports his wine and walnuts upon that "table en mosaique," (which he would border with lapis lazuli, to remind him of his friends at the Rock and on the main,) and drinks "THE QUEEN," who dispenses her royal favours, Military rights, to "the proud old British Union," which has engraved on its heart "THE SIGNAL,"

"ENGLAND EXPECTS EVERY MAN TO DO HIS DUTY;"

"PER MARE, PER TERRAM,"

which signal and motto mean, in British lingo, for their Queen and country, and to set the captive free. Seamen and Marines have but one hand, one heart, one chorus:

"At sea or on shore, boys, let us fight till we die."

Next, as to their Lordship's heavy-metal measure. I allude to the new armament of ships-of-war, which are now armed with GREAT GUNS. The broadside of each ship consists of 32-pounders, supported with two or three 68's. The enemy cannot hereafter choose his distance and riddle a frigate with impunity. "That tarnation old country's PIQUE is a stick-legged, long stinging serpent, blast her! I guess she'll be a tormenting close-hugging viper in our waters." It will be seen, in the Naval and Military Gazette, 2d March last, by the scale of armament, that the only ships-of-war unable to defend themselves against long-gun antagonists are the School's and Shipwright-Surveyor's Actæon, North Star, &c. My Lords are, however, making troopers and store-ships of these beasts of burden and creeping reptiles. French, American, Russian, and British guns, being of one length and calibre, the strongest powder and the longest shot will have the greatest chance of bearing off the bells. These powers will avoid closing, if possible, with the British: the Yankee don't mention it since the Shannon's coup-de-grace in fifteen minutes. They will wait the attack, and take all advantages of the English bull-dog instinct—"Not first to bark, but go right at him and seize him." Attacking an American, give him shot for shot after his first. If the British is the smaller ship, she would play well bowled single balls as she goes into action. The Wasp confessed that the worst part of the game between her and the British 18-gun brig of 24-pounders, was the dead-play of the Reindeer's forecastle 12-pounder before a broadside was bowled into her. "Shot," said Nelson, "will knock away spars of friends as well as foes." We shall soon boast of the fastest Fleet, the most excellent of gunners and expert of seamen,* for the protection of "ENGLAND, HOME, and BEAUTY."

The equalisation of the Petty Officers' pay and increase of the Seamen of the Fleet, are measures which must create pleasure and satisfaction to officers and men; for if officers did manage to pull and haul their ships about with over-reduced crews, they can now work them like a top. The entry of first-class lads, from 17 to 20 years of age, instead of landsmen of that chicken age, is adding helping hands to the tars whose duty is aloft. The Navy can always pick up deck-rangers. Tobacco reduced to 1*s.* per pound shows their Lordships' inclination to indulge the relish of Jack the Sailor and Joe the Marine.

I first submitted the equalisation and increase of the Petty Officers' pay four years ago, and have occasionally reverted to the subject, Sir John Barrow checking it to windward†. Although the bill is not the whole bill which I most respectfully submitted (as I wished the executive Petties, the Quartermasters, &c. equally paid in all rates, as with them the smaller the rate the greater the duty, which is the reverse with the mechanical Petties, the higher the rate the greater the work and charge), yet, so liberal is the general consideration to these deserving classes of Her Majesty's Fleet, that I must gratefully acknowledge the BOON in their honest-hearted style—as the Jacks thanked BONLY on board the Undaunted, when his "EMPEROR'S HONOUR" ordered them a cask of rum to drink his health.

So immediately after the increase of seamen, I cannot but consider Sir Edward Codrington's motion "to man the Fleet in peace with war complements" both ill-timed and ill-judged—the more so, as the Naval system of promotion and retirement are under the considerate revision of the Government and Military Commission.

Thousands are required of the legislature to pension the superannuated, and to remunerate the active of the Naval profession. No money bill should, therefore, be laid upon the table of the House of Commons by any Naval Member who has the service at heart, which has not for object, the ARMY'S RIGHTS to the UNREWARDED NAVY.

The correction of the errors of former Boards being already known and felt by the Navy and Dock-yards, I will conclude my Survey of the Measures of the present Naval Administration, which I trust I have holden with the usual impartiality, care, and equity of their Lordships' and thy friend, TRISTRAM.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

The following measures have been arranged at the Horse Guards:—The Ceylon Rifle Corps is to be largely augmented, so as to render two regts. available for service in India. A Colonial Corps is to be formed immediately, for service at the Mauritius, which will afford the means of sending one of the regts. now there to India. These arrangements will cause the recall home of the 16th, 6th, and 55th Regts., in the course of 1840. Arrangements for corps not proceeding from Australia to India, not having been finally settled, the 50th Regt. is to relieve the 49th in Bengal. We have not heard what regts. are to proceed from Ceylon and the Mauritius to India, but we suppose the 18th and 90th from the former, and the 35th from the latter station. Such is the outline of the proposed measure for the relief of regts. from India, and we hasten to lay it before our readers even in this imperfect form.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1839.

We have several communications upon the subject of a collision in the West Indies, between H.M. steam-ship Medea and the French brig-of-war Griffon, letters, purporting to detail an account of which, have appeared in the daily papers; and from the opinions expressed by our correspondents, being those entertained by Naval Officers generally, and a perusal of the exparte statements—the authenticity of some of which is however doubtful—we come to the conclusion, that in the late affair, the misfortune was produced by the conduct of the British Commander; and, although the Frenchman may be accused of want of courtesy in not bringing to (when fired at with blank cartridge), or in not replying more satisfactory to the hail of Medea, it is probable that, all circumstances considered, many in command would have declined a closer communication with an armed vessel, of whose identity they had doubts—produced by her somewhat alarming manœuvres.

Let us state the case, as far as we can ascertain it to have occurred.

On the night of the 11th of April last, H.M.S. Medea, having on board Commodore Douglas, the Commander-in-Chief (ad interim) on the North American and West India station, fell in with, off the south coast of Cuba, a vessel suspected, by her square rig, to be a slaver, and immediately gave chase. After firing some blank cartridges from guns and muskets, Medea gets within hail, and ascertains the chase to be the French brig-of-war Griffon, bound to Vera Cruz from France. Some conversation takes place, differently reported in the three published letters; but the upshot is, that the French Commander had supposed Medea to be the English packet, and he doubtless saw no occasion why his course should be intercepted, or his brig brought to, by a vessel of that character.

Medea being satisfied that the chase was a French man-of-war, resumed her course (nearly in the opposite direction); but, in a short time, Commodore Douglas, conceiving he should have informed the Frenchman that hostilities between France and Mexico had ceased (of which, be it known, the Frenchman was ignorant), hove about, hoisted a light, pursued the brig again, and approaching too near, by some mismanagement on one side or the other, ran her on board, carrying away her studding-sail booms,—on which the French Commander became alarmed, and ordered a shot to be fired a-head of her; this, as is very likely, produced the discharge of a broadside, but happily with no greater effect than to wound one of the Medea's crew, besides damaging that vessel.

Now, let the reader consider this case fairly, and imagine himself in command of a ship, approaching an enemy's waters, unacquainted with the termination of war with Mexico, but prepared by the accounts prevalent in Europe to meet with vessels cruising under that flag.

He is chased in the night by a steam-vessel, which may or may not be the English packet, the vessel pursuing him on a course directly contrary to that she was steering when first discovered. It is his duty to prepare for action; and recognising no right to be brought to under such, or indeed any circumstances, he disregards her firing, and signals with that view, and continues his course with all sail set.

Presently she ranges up, hails him, and, being satisfied, puts about, and resumes her original course. But anon she returns to the chase, hoists a light, and comes up at the rate of nine knots (which is described at half steam), the Frenchman going five. A collision takes place, and the consequence is, that the men at quarters in the French vessel, misinterpreting the order to fire, discharge their broadside; but this is not repeated, the mistake is discovered, the French Commander repairs on board Medea, and makes the only reparation in his power—an apology.

Now this is an affair totally different from that of the Express packet—that was an insult; as such it was treated and considered by our Government, and the French, very much to their honour, made an ample apology—sufficient in the conventional usages of life, and of nations too, we suppose, to atone for a wrong, unless our contemporaries would insist, like some punctilious gentleman who has been horsewhipped, to be permitted to lay the whip on their antagonist's shoulders; and to satisfy those so scrupulous, our course would be to take a pilot out of a French vessel, and so cry quits. But the press, in dealing with this matter, has treated the two cases alike. The Times, to be sure, in publishing the letter, placed it in somewhat of a questionable shape, and headed it, "From a Correspondent," without a word of comment. But the Herald, our venerable relative and neighbour,—that untiring advocate of England's honour,—although expressing some doubts as to which party was in fault, in the present instance, rings the changes upon "British flag, equivocal outrages,' &c., and uses up its stock of expletives kept in type for these occasions.

The good old lady appears to disregard a homely saying much in vogue with people of her character, "that what is sauce for the goose, is sauce for the gander," and forgets that a French Commander has also the honour of his flag to support, and that a strict account of his conduct is exacted from a Government and a nation extremely jealous and sensitive on the very score that disturbs grandmama. And does she wish our Commanders to roam about the world like bullies on the crown of a pavement, exacting tribute or submission from everything they meet, as was the case in the good old times? In which event, it appears to us, that, like the aforesaid bullies, we should find ourselves, on summing up our accounts, in the receipt of "more kicks than halfpence;" for the strong would assuredly resist, whilst the weak would be ready to strike, when they could take us at disadvantage; and such overbearing conduct would insure us the hatred of the world, and but little of its respect.

A renowned nation like England should not condescend to raise an alarm about every case of this kind, produced nine times out of ten from mistake or misapprehension. It would be like a merchant, whose credit is undisputed, displaying his banker's book in the window of his counting-house. Our officers have arduous and onerous duties to execute, and they are responsible to the authorities for the due performance of them; and our flag will be more respected by maintaining an exalted dignity, than if we resorted to bickering and squabbling on every petty occasion that accident produces. In the present case, we repeat that the principal blame rests on the British Commander, his movements and intentions being, not without reason, considered by the Frenchman to indicate a hostile purpose; for he no doubt supposed the Medea to be a Mexican privateer or national vessel, particularly when she resumed the chase.

Since the above was in type, the First Lord of the Admiralty has explained in Parliament, that the affair was the result of mistake, and the explanation was allowed to be satisfactory. His Lordship read the following letter from Commodore Douglas:

"Medea, Bermuda, April 20, 1839.

Sir,—I beg you to acquaint the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that on the evening of the 11th inst., at seven P.M., a vessel was discovered, supposed to be a slaver, standing along the land to the southward of Cuba. The course was immediately altered with the intention of boarding her; a gun was fired without shot, and after that a volley of blank cartridges was fired, and as she did not shorten sail, the Medea stood after her, and on approaching her, and hailing, found her to be a French brig of war. The vessels separated a little, and wishing to inform him that all was settled at Vera Cruz, I ordered Commander Nott to approach him a second time; the vessels came in contact with each other from the Medea not answering her helm so quickly as was expected, when several shots were fired from the stranger, intended to cross our bows, which unfortunately wounded a seaman, Matthew Harper, whose leg was afterwards amputated.—The stranger proved to be the Griffon, French brig of war, 20 guns, from Brest, bound to Vera Cruz, and on the French Commander, Capt. Olivier, coming on board, he offered the most ample apology, and stated, the reason of his firing was, that he considered it possible that we might have been a Mexican vessel of war, as he had heard that several vessels had been fitted out in America to cruise against the French, and regretted very sincerely the unfortunate occurrence which had brought the two vessels in contact with each other, and declared that he never intended to fire more than one gun across our bows, but that his men disobeyed his orders, and that he would inquire into their disobedience.—I am, &c., P. J. Douglas, Commodore, Commander-in-Chief.

"C. Wood, Esq., Secretary to the Admiralty."

Lord Minto also read a private letter from the same gallant officer to Sir Charles Adam. It is in these terms:—

"H.M.S. Medea, at Sea, April 13th, 1839.

"My dear Sir Charles,—You will perceive by my public letter that we have had the misfortune to be fired into by one of the French brigs of war, who unfortunately took us for a Mexican cruizer, as he had heard that several vessels had been fitted out in America, and were cruising among the islands; we had hailed him, but could only make out that he was a French vessel of war from France, and wishing to learn what news we could, as well as to tell him that all was settled at Mexico, I wished to speak him again, and in doing so (the Medea not answering her helm so quickly as Capt. Nott expected) we unfortunately hooked his quarter-boat, which he considered might be an attempt on our part to board. He had directed one of his guns to be fired across our bowse; but as his men were at their quarters, by one of those unforeseen as well as unfortunate occurrences, six of his guns went off, and I regret to say three shot struck us, and wounded one of our men. As I was aware that she was a French vessel of war, I did not like to fire into her (and occasion, God knows what mischief, to both vessels), but hailed him to heave to, which he did; when he came on board, made the most ample apology and excuses, and no one could deplore the accident more than he did, which he assured me most energetically on the quarter-deck, arose entirely from his men having mistaken his orders. I cannot tell you how much this unpleasant affair has distressed me, though it is one of those occurrences over which I had no control, and I trust that my forbearance in not firing into her, knowing her to be a French vessel of war, will meet your approval, as I could not consider this an attack on our flag, as it was perfectly dark, and no colours could be seen."

THERE is a report that Lord Hill is about to retire, and that the Marquess of Anglesey will succeed to the command of the Army;—that Lord Fitzroy Somerset will relieve Sir Henry Fane in India, and that Sir Frederick Stovin will be the Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief

WE hear that further tenders for shipping to convey troops to India will be called for in the course of a few days It is many years since so many men have returned from India to be invalided, and those great exertions used to recruit the several corps Should the chartists cease to agitate the country, one or two infantry regiments could be sent out direct to India.

THE remarks which we made in a late number, respecting the complaints which had reached us from officers and men lately embarked in the vessels taken up for conveying troops to India, have had all the effect we contemplated The Honourable Court of Directors are now in possession of the facts, for the Military Secretary from the India House went on board the Owen Glendower—the first vessel which took troops—and personally inspected the excellent accommodations of that noble ship.

We have been informed by one of the passengers, that the Military Secretary held on board that ship a long conversation with Lieut.-Colonel Weare, who superintended the embarkation, and from him, we have no doubt, learned "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth,"—we quote the words of our correspondent. We beg to remark, that on all occasions the arrangements on board the ships of Messrs. Green are satisfactory to all parties We must, however, here again observe, that to put men into the orlop for so protracted a voyage as that to India, during nearly the whole of which time the heat is excessive—is really to make the poor soldier a mere bale of goods to be taken to the East Indies! The troops should be always on the gun-deck, where they can have air and some light,—on the orlop-deck they are under water-line, and consequently have neither air nor light but what may come in from the hatch. How little of either visits the hold of a ship those alone can tell whose lot it has been to stew there for four or five months on a voyage, twice over the Line, to India

WE regret to state that small-pox has this year been very prevalent among the troops at Chatham, not have the officers escaped, five or six officers have either lately recovered or are still suffering from it Few can expect to escape, where no separation of the diseased from the healthy takes place; nor can this be done in consequence of the exceeding crowded state of the barracks, in which officers are congregated, not merely of the corps and depots at Chatham, but belonging to all the colonial corps and the veteran companies. There was not last week even one vacant quarter in the garrison of Chatham, and several officers were living at the hotels in the town.

ALTHOUGH we entirely coincide with the sentiments of a writer, whose letter we annex, we, at the same time, are too well aware of the innumerable difficulties attendant upon the measures he proposes, to hold out any prospect of their being carried into effect, at least for many years to come.

An unlimited full-pay retirement, upon a well-digested principle, is the thing above all others most to be desired; and if we add to this the promotion to Major-General of one Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel from the full-pay for every three casualties amongst the General Officers, the vacant commissions being filled up by promoting the greatest claimants in the respective ranks, we think very little complaint would exist on the score of promotion.

The present system of promotion by General Brevets is not only most injurious and ruinous to the meritorious hard working officer, but it holds out an absolute premium to inactivity In one regiment we find an officer, who has lately returned to full pay, receiving, at the same time, the Brevet of Major, with only six years' full-pay service—he having been on half-pay, at his own request, since December, 1825, and having also been promoted to a full-pay company out of his own regiment only two months prior to his voluntary retirement upon half-pay. In such cases, we cannot but consider that promotion is diverted from its legitimate channel; and having said thus much, we, at the same time, beg most distinctly to disclaim intending to cast the most distant reflection upon the authorities by which the Army is governed, they are, as we have before observed, the pure dispensers of a corrupt system.

But to return to our subject In the regiment to which the Brevet-Major in question belongs will be found four unbreveted Captains, two of whom have served twenty five years, and the other two twenty-four years on full-pay—three having also purchased their companies Such being, then, the distribution of promotion, would it not be better that the entire system of General Brevets should at once be overthrown, root and branch? We should unfeignedly rejoice to see so desirable a measure carried into immediate effect, and we know this to be the feeling of the Army at large These sentiments may obtain for us the appellation of Radicals by a certain interested class, and so were those, we dare say, denominated, who did not think it perfectly comme il faut that infants in their cradles should hold Major's commissions.

We will hypothetically state a case, and which will prove to demonstration the cruel injustice that could, and no doubt would be inflicted on the old officer by the Brevet We will suppose the regiment to which the above officers belong to be in India, and, together with a regiment of Native Infantry, besieging a fort On carrying the fort by assault, the few officers holding senior Army rank to the Brevet-Major are killed, the command of the whole force, consequently, devolves upon him, and a large amount of treasure being discovered, he takes his share of the prize-money as officer in command, by which he falls into a large fortune, whilst the four hard working long-service Captains receive some insignificant trifle. But under the most unfavourable circumstances he would receive prize-money as a Major.

We must conclude the subject for the present; but shall not fail to keep it, from time to time, before the public

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In a late number of the N. & M. G. appears a communication from Boulogne, which, after many very judicious and pertinent remarks on the present state of the service, and exhibiting by undeniable reference the withering position of the old Captains (many of whom have more full-pay service than most of the present General Officers) proceeds to point out a mode of providing for that class (which the writer himself evidently considers most adequate, as he merely "hopes that it may prove satisfactory to the Brevet"), viz., by giving them the unattached rank of Major, and thus placing at the disposal of Government their companies This would, I admit, unquestionably be a most admirable arrangement, if practicable, as it would not only at once get rid of the Brevet Officers (an objectionable rank, in many respects, in a regimental point of view), but place at disposal some 240 companies with an equal number of Lieutenancies and Ensignicies; thus affording the means of provision—say for 100 old Subalterns, by promotion to companies, without purchase, while the remaining companies, Lieutenancies, and Ensignicies, might be old

But, Sir, your correspondent cannot surely for a moment seriously suppose, that a Captain holding Brevet rank, who, in nine cases out of ten, in the present day, owes his position to long service, being generally without the means of purchasing, and, consequently, peculiarly dependent on his pay and allowances, he cannot suppose that so situated, he will voluntarily give up his full pay allowances and the 7*d* per diem for 9*s* 6*d*, and find himself with the certainty almost of never again being able to get upon full-pay,—the number of candidates rendering this nearly impossible, without paying a heavy difference, which be is, in most instances, utterly unable to advance to say nothing of the interest required to get promoted to full pay, even where the funds may be forthcoming! No Sir I do not believe that a dozen Captains, holding Brev. rank, would accept the boon which your correspondent hopes may prove satisfactory to the Brevet Officers," unless some rara avis of that class to whom their pittance may be of no great importance—as obtaining no additional rank The only advantage they can possibly derive from accepting it is the qualification to come in (when they can) as a Regimental Major and for this chimera they are to relinquish a serious portion of their income for, credit me, Mr Editor, that however trifling an affair to some of your more fortunate and aristocratic friends the loss of four or five shillings a day may appear, to the great mass of Brevet Majors it would be of serious and vital importance indeed independent of which, and the loss of their present allowances they would have the cheering prospective of being called upon for a sum almost equal to the purchase of a Majority, should they ever have the gracious offer of again being placed on full-pay

If, however, the plan which has been suggested, of doing away entirely with the rank of Major, be adopted thus placing the Line on an equal footing, in this respect with the Ordnance and Marines, making all Majors Brev. Colonels, those on half pay with the Brevet Majors, according to their Army rank, being, of course, Unattached Lieut. Colonels and if to this were added the right of retirement by the sale of that commission, after a full pay service of 25 or 30 years—if the former period be considered too short this arrangement would be received as a boon, while its accomplishment would entail trifling, if any, expense to the country—the sums attainable by the sale of the vacant commissions forming a fund to meet any addition to the half-pay that might be incurred

Should you, Mr Editor, consider the above remarks worthy of a place in your valuable Paper, you will perhaps, afford them an early insertion Yours, &c FIRELOCK

THE plan of Miles, subjoined, would certainly in time bring all the commissions into the hands of the Horse Guards, without any material injury to the sellers, if there existed an adequate retirement for old officers. Until this be established, the sale of commissions is the only means left to the veteran. All these plans are premature. Establish first a retirement, and then this scheme, among others, will merit attention

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am not now going to question the advantage or the disadvantage of the sale of Military commissions, though I know the practice has both advocates and dependents My present purpose is one which, in a measure embraces the views of each The sale of commissions in the British army whereat the patriots pay for the honour of serving the country had its origin, I believe in the system of raising regiment for the national service at the private expense of individuals for once sanctioned by Government To embody troops (as every one knows a considerable sum of money is for to be done, whereto as some aid towards the levy of necessary funds, an especial privilege was granted by the Crown to such chiefs authorising them to distribute commissions in these newly raised regiments, at a certain definitive price, according to rank the amount accruing from which sales being allowed as a compensation for the risk encountered in the outlay of private property in other words it was an indirect tax imposed by Government upon the purses of the ambition of youth to repay monies advanced by individuals for the increase of the national debt or instead of applying to Parliament for a grant to the same end being to the country at large, a cheaper mode of organising troops and as a tax on the voluntary principle only, least likely to excite the animadversions of legislative economists although as a matter of course, regiments once raised must according to the nature of the constitution, be paid and fed at the cost of the nation as a appendage to the Crown

Having thus shown what I understand to have been the origin of the purchase and sale of Military commissions, I would now draw attention to the reasonableness on the part of the Crown, in laying claim to a progressive reversion of a right which it had for especial purposes transferred as it were, by way of mortgage (unless, indeed the original grant for these sales express that the right of sale shall be in perpetuo) and observe, that if a first commission—say an Ensigncy at 400*l*, the second transfer of it shall diminish the cost 50*l*, making the purchase money 400*l*; the third sale 350*l* and so on diminishing the price 50*l*. at each succeeding transfer until eventually the last purchaser at 50*l* shall leave it as a restored right to the Crown, and to be ever after at the free disposal of Government,—by which arrangement no one can complain with reason, because 5*s* 3*d* a day pay is an ample annuity for the advance of 450*l* (even though a life interest be an excess of the purchaser's death, money laid out in the original purchase, besides a return of 350*l* on resale, and is full compensation for the loss, or rather for the diminution of 50*l* on any subsequent transfer, and thus a wholesome patronage would be vested in Government for the reward of meritorious officers, unbiassed with the boards of Croesus, and commissions of every grade in regimental rank, as well as of every shade in price will, from time to time, fall to the disposal of the Crown, and tend to cheer the spirits of numerous deserving men who under the present restrictive system, are doomed to pine in disappointment, but who, under the proposed altered scheme, may command small sums for purchasing in turn whereas the full prices must remain an insurmountable bar to advancement This suggestion is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Honourable Board of Military and Naval Commission, if not too late Miles

WE are really puzzled to understand the letter of G. A. C. In the first place, the writer strangely calls our leading article a "Correspondent's communication;" and again, in his confusion of ideas, he calls our statement "an assertion," in contradistinction to his own assertion, which he calls "a fact." The Assistant-Surgeon may not be "young," but he is decidedly rather "whimsical." We can assure him that we have had no short experience ourselves in all matters respecting the recruiting and the examination of recruits; and we can give many instances of very fine young men who have been rejected, and at Chatham too, and that not only by Regimental and Staff Medical Officers, but by a Board of them, who are now serving in corps most rigid in the selection of recruits. Some of the names of these men can be seen at our office; and one of the finest young men now in the London Recruiting District is a man who was rejected at the South Hospital, Chatham. If the writer wishes to have our facts, in contradiction to his assertions, he can have the names. We did not profess to give "an account of the medical examination of the recruits,"—that account would be disgusting and indecent. The curious may see a very graphic description of the examination in the "Instructions," p. 145, published by the War Office, Nov. 20, 1830, at the end of "The Explanatory Directions for Paymasters and others." We would refer the thin-skinned G. A. C. to the United Service Journal for Dec. 1837, pages 441 and 442, where he will see more, probably, than he may relish to read respecting the "youth," "inexperience," and "whimsicality," of Assistant-Surgeons at regiments and depots, as developed in their rejections of recruits passed by their seniors, the District Surgeons. We extract a passage or two:—

Before this final approval takes place, the recruit has, however, to pass through another ordeal. It is not sufficient that he has been medically inspected, first, perhaps, by a civil practitioner, and then by a district surgeon; he has still to be examined by the medical officer in charge of the regiment or depot. Now, if this medical officer could be supposed to possess superior discrimination, or had longer experience than those who preceded him, there might possibly be some advantage in such an arrangement, but when we state that, in a great majority of instances, the person exercising this controlling power is an Assistant Surgeon, scarcely initiated into the first rudiments of his profession, while the District Surgeon has had some thirty years' experience, and probably passed in that time thousands of recruits, it must excite surprise how such an anomaly could so long have existed in our service.

It is true, a Medical Board has to be held upon the recruit before he can be discharged, but that Board may, and often does, consist of another Assistant-Surgeon, as raw and inexperienced as the original objector, and who, even if better acquainted with the tricks of recruits, would, to avoid those disagreeable altercations which generally result from a difference of opinion among medical men, probably be glad to give his concurrence to the discharge. All the money expended on the recruit from the date of his enlistment is thus lost to the public, and forms no small item in the recruiting expenditure.

The District Surgeon who inspected the recruit is generally called on to state why he passed such a man into the service—indeed, at one period he was forced to refund the whole expense incurred by the public; nor was this harsh regulation rescinded till it had been proved, from the subsequent inspection and evidence of several of the recruits who had been discharged, that it was the Regimental, and not the District Surgeon who had been the subject of imposition.

Though the District Surgeon has been thus freed from any pecuniary responsibility in this respect, still the dread of having his professional opinion cavilled at by those who are, both in a Military and Medical point of view, his inferiors, and the fear of removal from his situation, which the present regulations would still warrant if the recruits he passes are not perfectly in accordance with the taste of the regimental authorities, has been quite sufficient to induce an undue degree of fastidiousness in the selection of recruits; for to no other cause is it possible to attribute the large proportion of rejections. For doing so we have no less a warrant than that of his late Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, who, in 1825, when the rejections averaged little more than thirty per cent., directed a circular letter to be addressed to the recruiting authorities, stating—"That he could not reconcile this large proportion of objections with a fair examination of the recruits."—How much more strongly must his remark apply now, when the rejections are, in some districts, nearly four times as high.

It is quite clear to us that G.A.C. is neither young, nor inexperienced, nor even logical,—but exceedingly sensitive; in short, the incarnation of Mackenzie's "Man of Feeling."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am induced to address you on the subject of a statement in your Paper of last week, containing a most erroneous account of the medical examination of the recruits, which I beg, in the fairness and impartiality which has ever characterised your Paper, you will suffer me to refute, in justice to that rank in the Medical Department of the Army to which I have the honour to belong, and which is the subject of the complaint.

It is there stated that a recruit who has been passed by an old and experienced District Surgeon can be and often is rejected by a "young and whimsical Assistant-Surgeon." Now, Sir, I am an "Assistant-Surgeon," but not one either so "young" or "whimsical" as to allow this assertion to pass without a most peremptory contradiction.

No Assistant Surgeon can reject a district recruit. He may object to him, and if that objection is tenable, a Board of "older" and more "experienced" officers than the said District Surgeons decide on the merits of the case. This is a fact, your correspondent's communication an assertion. I need make no comment. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

A STAFF-ASSISTANT-SURGEON, South Hospital, Chatham.

P.S.—In regard to the objection or confirmation of the district recruit, the Assistant-Surgeons here have the advantage of the presence and experience of a Medical Officer, equal to most if not all District Surgeons in active service and experience.—G. A. C.

THE Court of Directors of the East India Company have determined on augmenting the number of their officers in India, and likewise to form an additional regiment of Europeans at each Presidency, which will create very extensive promotion throughout the Army, and an additional number of Cadets.

WE annex the letter of a Correspondent, who, while deprecating the conduct of those that "bring forward exaggerated arguments, on one side, to carry a point on the other," lays himself open to the same censure, which the alarmists have so justly incurred, by underrating our own force, and exaggerating that of our rivals.

That we have not more heavy frigates is much to be regretted, seeing that the sum which has placed us in possession of fifty vessels of the Hebe class, built since the Peace, would have sufficed to provide between thirty and forty Vernons; but this is an evil in the course of remedy, and will not be repeated, we should presume, under any circumstances. However, our Correspondent, in making his statements, should have availed himself of the means open to every one, to state correctly, and then he would have ascertained that instead of ten, we do possess nineteen heavy frigates*, all—except the Warspite, not quite finished—ready for immediate service.

Independent of these, we have Castor, Inconstant, and Pique in commission, and six more of that class building, of greater tonnage and scantling than the fourth rates, and armed with guns of greater weight, although fewer in number, besides Endymion and Isis—so that if Candour had taken the trouble to ascertain our real position in this respect, he would have found that it approaches very nearly to what he considers it should be; and, moreover, he must not suppose that, because rival navies enumerate a number of first-class frigates, ergo, that they are all perfect, or, as some have assumed, in commission; but in different degrees of efficiency, some building, some worn out, and some requiring extensive repairs; whereas the vessels we have enumerated are all ready, and kept ready, for immediate service.

Neither is it fair for Candour to contrast this period of profound peace—which has now endured for nearly a quarter of a century—with the years 1805, 1810, and 1815, which were seasons of active war. Taking the average duration of a ship's existence to be fifteen or twenty years, it would be preposterous to maintain the whole amount required for war in peace, and to incur the expense of millions in providing vessels that might never be wanted, or, when wanted, unfit to match the fleets of our rivals, as events prove, owing to their having adopted classes of increased size. There must be a medium in these matters, and our argument has been to show, that, although we are not so perfect as we could wish, still we are more so than at any former period; and that, comparing the force we possess with that of rival nations, and supposing war to occur to-morrow, we are in a much better position, as regards the efficiency of our Navy, than in 1756, 1776, or 1793, at each of which periods the ships of France alone were nearly equal in number to our own—to say nothing of the fleets of other nations.

* Chichester, Java, Lancaster, Portland, President, Southampton, Winchester, and Worcester, of 52 guns; Alfred, America, Barham, Conquestador, Cornwall, Dublin, Eagle, Gloucester, Vernon, Pindictive, and Warspite, of 50 guns—being all fourth rates.

We acquit our Correspondent of any wilful inclination to mislead his readers, but we consider it the duty of every one who addresses the public through the columns of a newspaper, or any other channel, to inform himself of the real state of the subject on which he treats; and this Candour will perceive he has neglected to do. Very great and material improvements have been effected within these few years in the Naval departments; and although the discussion which has taken place of late may have had some effect in stimulating the authorities to greater exertion, we will by no means admit that they were negligent in this respect, for the increase to our Navy was commenced in 1836, and it has since been gradually made, and was in progress long before the alarmists commenced the attack, now generally admitted to have been raised for party purposes.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I felt flattered by your taking notice of my letter, but you did not go into particulars; but though I am an inefficient advocate, the topics are of deep if not of momentous interest. Let Sir J. Barrow look over his paper again, and answer the query, "How many first-class frigates does England now possess, and how many ought she to have?" I repeat, we have ten, and ought, in my opinion, to possess at least thirty.

There may be much point in what you say about the past state of the Navy, and no man disapproves more than I do, of the bringing forward exaggerated arguments on the one side, to carry a point on the other. However, you must admit that greater attention is paying to the state of the Navy this year, than was the case last or preceding years, and no doubt past administrations were to blame in allowing its strength to be cut down so far. But I disclaim all political bias when I remark that we are yet too far behind, and not at all in the position we one occupied. I will demonstrate this. Look at a Navy List of 1805, 1810, or 1815, and say how many ships we had in our Navy (about 1,000 on an average), and what proportion did this strength of force bear to united Navies of other countries? Then look to the state of this in 1839, why, in first class frigates alone, we have actually fewer than any respectable Naval power; and I have seen, of this description of ships alone, in the port of Genoa, nearly as many as we now possess, belonging to a power scarcely heard of before, that of Sardinia. What I complain of is, that we do not keep pace with the times. I know well that, in the event of a war, our great steam Marine could at once be brought into play, and could supply the deficiency of many line-of-battle ships, equipped for sea, by merely towing hulls into action, if necessary—a la Copenhagen. But battles may be fought at a distance, where smart ships are wanted, and steamers are scarce—and it is but fair to give our sailors fair play, in ships, men, and weight of metal. What chance would Beahow have with an American 74, or Madagascar with United States? Just Java and Guerriere all over again.

You must not lose sight of the loss of our Indiamen, those noble merchantmen were equal to a fleet of 30 or 40 frigates at any time. So let us keep up with other nations, it is required of us; our foreign possessions are not diminishing, rather the contrary; Aden is a grand acquisition, it's usefulness will tell some day.

CANDOUR.

7th May, 1839.

Designs for the Nelson Monument.—The Committee appointed to carry into effect the object contemplated by the public subscription for a Monument to the memory of Lord Nelson, met yesterday for the transaction of business, but as we were under the necessity of going to press before their deliberations were concluded, we postpone until next week a report of their proceedings. Meanwhile, it may not be uninteresting to our readers to be made acquainted with what has been done in the interval of two months, between the present and last meeting of the committee, which period was granted to the competitors who had already deposited designs for the purpose of altering or improving them, as well as to give those artists who had not entered the lists an opportunity for the display of their talents.

The place fixed upon for the reception of the models and drawings, is the large up-stairs room in St. James's bazaar, which is evidently much better adapted for the proper display of the various works than Mr. Ramy's Gallery, which was used on the former occasion. Saturday, the 25th inst., was the latest day allowed for the delivery of the designs, and long after midnight vans and waggons might be seen depositing their loads of talent at the door in King-street. Monday and Tuesday were given to the artists who deposited models for the purpose of touching them up, and arranging them in something like order, but on the evening of the latter day the doors were shut against any further ingress, in order to allow the attendants to hang up and display the drawings, of which there appeared to be a considerable number. We have seen, and can speak of the models (which are 51 in number), but the drawings have not yet been exposed to view, consequently they must remain unnoticed for the present.

If poetry were sculpture, and sculpture poetry, we should say that the present exhibition of modelled designs gave abundant proof of the existence of a very large amount of corresponding talent in England; but as no two things can be much more opposite, we are bound to say that nine-tenths of the designs are failures, so far as a Monument to Nelson is concerned. Until the present display, we had no notion that the realms of imagination were peopled with half so numerous a progeny of non-descripts. With some few exceptions, there is not a design in the room in which the impersonation of fabled beings is not carried to a ludicrous extent. Had Homer lived in the times of Queen Victoria, he would certainly have been indebted to the creative fancies of English artists for a hitherto unknown imagery, and his epic poems would have abounded with mythological illustrations of a character, as the play-bills say, "entirely novel." But as Allegory-run-mad is not, or should not be, the motto of the Committee, let us hope that these imaginative creations will return to the studios of their respective inventors, as perpetual indices of a truth in art as well as nature which cannot be too strongly impressed on their excursive minds, namely, that the world goes forward, and not backward.

In the midst of much that is meretricious, there are, however, some few designs which possess great merit, as designs. The largest and grandest in the room has been deposited by Watson, who must have expended much time, labour, and money, upon its preparation. Bailey, in addition to the one which appeared in the former exhibition, has sent in another; but we do not like it so well as the first, to which a prize was very deservedly awarded. Woodington has also sent in a second design, which is, we think, no improvement upon the first. Fowler and Sievier, who obtained one of the prizes, have enlarged their former design. Goldicutt has furnished a globe with Nelson on the top of it, to be placed in the middle of a fountain in the centre of the square, and of which a drawing was exhibited on the last occasion. Hopper has deposited an open temple, and Messrs. Salvin and Smith a close one. Both these were in the last exhibition, but they have since been altered and improved. Behnes has sent in two new designs (sketches) alike in principle, though somewhat different in detail. It appears to us to be a very odd circumstance, that these, and one or two others at most, are the only models in the room which can lay any claim to the merit of simplicity and perfect freedom from allegory. The physical means by which Nelson obtained his immortal victories were sailors and marines, and we think Mr. Behnes has exercised a sound discretion in confining himself to these adjuncts to his proposed monument, which is intended to bear a colossal figure of Nelson at such a height from the ground as will enable passers-by to recognise the features. If we have an opportunity, we shall return again to this subject next week.

The Court.

The Queen, accompanied by her august mother, and the Prince and Princess Leiningen, arrived at Windsor Castle on Monday evening, escorted by a party of the Royal Blues. The Grand Duke of Russia, Prince William Henry of the Netherlands, and a number of distinguished visitors, arrived at the Castle in the course of the day.

Her Majesty arrived in town yesterday afternoon, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, and their Serene Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Leiningen.

Her Majesty, after dancing with the Grand Duke of Russia and Prince Frederic Henry of the Netherlands, at the state ball at Buckingham Palace last week, danced in quadrilles with the Prince of Lieningen, Earl Bruce, and Baron de Lieven. Her Majesty led off the last dance (a country dance) in the north ball room with the Grand Duke. This dance was kept up with great spirit till past three o'clock, when the ball concluded.

The Queen will hold a levee at St. James's Palace on Wednesday, 5th June next, at two o'clock, and a drawing-room on June 20th, at two o'clock, when the Knights of the several Orders are to appear in their collars, Thursday, 20th June, being a collar-day.

The Earl of Uxbridge, Lord Chamberlain of Her Majesty's household, has been sworn of Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baron of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Hon. James Abercromby, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by the name, style, and title of Baron Dunfermline, of Dunfermline, in the county of Fife.

The Queen has appointed the Hon. G. S. S. Jermingham, now Secretary at the Court of Portugal, to be Secretary to Her Majesty's Legation at the Court of Spain.

It has been announced from authority that the Queen Dowager, contrary to rumour, has no intention of holding any drawing-rooms this season. We look upon this, and so will the public, as an instance of marked good taste and discretion, not to say of forbearance. There does not exist in the world, perhaps, a person possessing a reputation so high and unblemished as Her Majesty Queen Adelaide. Even the voice of party slander, which formerly attributed political motives to her conduct, has been silenced by the purity of that conduct itself. The domestic virtues are those which she cultivates, and they acquire no weight from outward display.

Accounts have reached Marlborough House conveying the intelligence of the death of Prince William of Saxe-Weimar, nephew to the Queen Dowager. His Highness expired at Nimeguen on the 22d ult., after a few days' illness.

On Monday despatches, dated Feb. 20, were received at the Foreign Office, from the British Consul at Pernambuco, and from the British Consul at Rio de Janeiro, dated March 24. Despatches, dated 16th Jan., were received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India; and despatches, dated March 12, were received at the Colonial Department from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope; and also from the Governor of Newfoundland. On Thursday despatches from Sir William Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius, were received at the Colonial-office.

Yesterday the Grand Duke of Russia, the Prince of the Netherlands, and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, and attendants, arrived at Deptford, where they were received by Captain Shireff, R.N., Captain-Superintendent of Her Majesty's Dock-yards at Woolwich. A Captain's guard of honour of the Rifle Brigade received the Grand Duke on the parade, the fine band of that corps playing the National Anthem. A troop of the Royal Horse Artillery, under the command of Colonel Whinyates, was in attendance, and fired a salute of 21 guns immediately on his Imperial Highness's arrival. Lord Bloomfield, Colonel Walcott, and several officers, were present. The Firebrand and Lightning steamers were to convey the Grand Duke and Princes to Rotterdam. The Firebrand was moored alongside of the parade, and had had a saloon built on deck for the accommodation of his Highness. Capt. Hornby received the Grand Duke on board. Shortly before the steamer left her moorings, the guard of honour of the Rifle Brigade advanced several paces and gave three cheers, uncovered, in compliment to His Imperial Highness, who then bade adieu to all the officers. A battery of four 12-pounders from the Field Batteries was on the wharf in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, where the royal standard was hoisted, and on the Royal Duke passing he was saluted with 21 guns.

The marriage of the Duke of St. Albans with Miss Gubbins, youngest daughter of the late General Gubbins, took place on Wednesday, at Harby Rectory, Leicester.

The Hanoverian army, it appears, is to retain the scarlet uniform for the present, in consequence of the energetic remonstrances of the Dukes of Sussex and Cambridge.

A few days since the Commanding Officer at the Horse Guards had occasion to inspect the guard-room in the Tilt-yard, and perceiving that a raised platform, which was used by the soldiers on duty as a bed, had become decayed, he desired its removal, and a new one to be substituted. Accordingly, while in the act of removing it, and the rubbish that had accumulated underneath, a number of gold, silver, and copper coins, of the reigns of Queen Anne, George I. and II., were found. The soldiers who were at work, considering them as their perquisites, pocketed the money, and afterwards disposed of them. A few, however, were delivered up to the Adjutant.

The Countess de Lipona, ex-Queen of Naples, died on the 18th inst., at Florence, in the arms of her brother, the Count de Montford, and his daughter, the Countess de Rasponi. The ex-Queen sunk under the same disease as destroyed her brother, the Emperor Napoleon, and their father—cancer in the stomach. She was delirious, with occasional lucid intervals, during the last fifteen hours. The two sons of the Countess de Lipona are in the United States, where they are practising as barristers. Last year the French Chambers voted an annual income of 100,000f. to the Countess, as a compensation for certain claims of property which she had come to Paris to support. The Countess was born 26th of March, 1782, and was therefore in her 58th year.

On Monday evening, May 27th, Mr. G. A. Kollman, the inventor of a new patent piano-forte, gave his third concert of this season, during which he exhibited the powers of his new instrument. He was ably supported by Miss Birch, Messrs. Begrez, Phillips, and other very talented singers. Sig. Puzzi played a solo from I Puritani with great effect on his French horn, which very deservedly received an encore.

Trinity House.—The annual procession of this corporation by land and water, and the ceremonies and festival usual upon the occasion, were celebrated, according to ancient custom, on Monday. The elder brethren and the officers of the corporation left the Trinity House soon after eleven, and proceeded to the Tower, where they were received by a guard of honour and the wardens in full uniform, and immediately embarked on board their state barges for Deptford. As they passed down the river, the flags were hoisted on the public establishments, and salutes were fired from the cannon on the wharfs. arriving at Deptford, they were joined by the Duke of Wellington, the master of the corporation, and, after attending Divine service at the old church, they proceeded to inspect the almshouses for aged and decayed Master Mariners and others. The almsmen were mustered in their new dresses, and refreshments were bountifully supplied to them and the visitors, while buns and favours were distributed to all comers. The Duke was proposed and unanimously re-elected master for the ensuing year. The procession returned in the same state to the Trinity House, and the banners and flags on the shallops, waving in the breeze, had a very gay appearance. The corporation dined together in the evening.

The Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, have pronounced sentence against Yore and his co-conspirators, for having feloniously enticed away and married the daughter of Colonel Tucker. Yore has got nine months' imprisonment, and his assistants three months' imprisonment each.

Ascot Races.—This fashionable meeting commenced on Tuesday, and was honoured by the presence of Her Majesty and her distinguished visitors. On this day and on Thursday Her Majesty was greeted with cheers from all parts of the course, and immediately after her arrival the start took place for

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas—won by Mr. Pettit's St. Francis. The Ascot Stakes of 25 sov. each, 15 ft. and only 5, &c., with 100 added; second to receive 50 sov. out of the stakes—won by Mr Forth's ch. f. by Merchant. The Ascot Derby Stakes of 50 sov. each—won by Mr. W Ridsdale's Bloomsbury. Sweepstakes of 50 sov. each, h. ft.—won by Lord Exeter's c. Stamboul. Her Majesty's Gold Vase, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sov. each—won by Mr. Thornhill's Mendizabal. The St. James's Palace Stakes of 100 sov. each—won by Mr. Thornhill's Euclid. A Plate of 50*l.*—won by Capt. Gardner's Ochiltree.

Wednesday.—The Swinley Stakes of 25 sov. each—won by Col. Peel's Ion. The Albany Stakes of 50 sov. each—won by Duke of Grafton's Æther. Sweepstakes of 100 sov. each, h. ft.—won by Mr. Thornhill's Euclid. The Postmasters and Innkeepers' Plate of 50*l.*—won by Mr. Corbett's Jenny.

Thursday.—The Buckhurst Dinner Stakes of 200 sov. each—won by Lord Lichfield's bl. c. The Corsair. A Sweepstakes of 30 sov. each—won by Lord Lynedoch's b. c. Jeffy. The Gold Cup, value 200 sov., by subscription of 20 sov. each, with 200 added from the Fund—won by Hon. Capt. Berkeley's Caravan. Sweepstakes of 100 sov. each—won by Mr. Ridsdale's Bloomsbury. A project was on foot some time since for lighting all Paris, by means of a light placed on one of the highest monuments in the capital, and the result to be obtained was to have been derived from a combustion of gas with certain chemical substances. The idea was laughed at at the time, but it seems about to be reduced to practice, and the public are, it is said, shortly to witness the experiment.

At the recent ball given by the Queen, Her Majesty made a point of giving a most cordial shake of the hand to Lady Peel, as if anxious to prove that her political sentiments did not interfere with her private feelings.

Mr. Rowland Hill's plan of an uniform Penny Postage is to be carried into full effect.

The Isle of Sheppy is fast decreasing. Over a week since a spot of land, about two acres, in the cliffs near Warden, sunk simultaneously from six to eight feet. A cottage standing on it was not in the least injured; the wife of the owner was ill in bed, and did not know till her husband told her. From Minster to Warden the inroads of the last two years tend to confirm the old traditionary tale, that the Isle of Sheppy at one time extended to the Nore.

The Radicals.—At a meeting recently held in Southwark, Alderman Humphery stated that in order to conciliate the people, the Ministry had determined to concede the penny postage, to make the ballot an open question, and to abolish the rate-paying clauses of the Reform Bill; also that an abandonment of the registration shilling was under consideration. Sir Lytton Bulwer has been stating the same facts to the liberals of Lincoln, and has added that Ministers intend to extend the suffrage by allowing 10*l.* voters for counties, and by creating a new class of freemen in cities and boroughs.

The Olympic Theatre closed last evening. Madame spoke the farewell address, in which, after returning thanks for the patronage received since her and Mr. Mathews's return from America, she stated their having become the lessees of Covent Garden Theatre, and that, although several had prophesied they must fail, she trusted, by adopting a proper course of management—having herself determined not to enact Queen Catherine and Mr. M. having also resolved not to play Macbeth,—to ensure the same distinguished patronage as she had been honoured with for the last nine years at the Olympic.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, May 27.—Colonel Prince—Charge of Murder—Lord Brougham inquired whether any steps had been taken to stigmatise a person in the Canadian Militia of the name of Prince, who, if there were any truth in the reports of his conduct, had disgraced the name of a British officer—he meant the person who had ordered to be shot in cold blood four miserable persons, taken prisoners by the Indians, and afterwards released that they might be reserved for the tender mercies of an English Colonel of Militia, who instantly drew them out, one after another, and ordered them to be shot on the spot? That was true, for it had been reported by Col. Arthur, who stated that Col. Prince was excited at the time. There was but one kind of excitement which would justify his conduct if he were tried before a jury, and that was an unsound state of mind at the time when the act was perpetrated. Col Arthur stated that the four persons had been butchered in cold blood without a trial. He asked whether Col. Prince was still allowed to hold a commission in Her Majesty's service? The Marquis of Normanby said, the matter had been inquired into, and on the report made to Her Majesty's Government they had signified their disapprobation of Col Prince's conduct.—Lord Brougham had read the sentence, which was anything but satisfactory. The men had been taken prisoners, and quarter had been granted to them by the officer who took them. They were brought in one at once, and an hour or two afterwards were taken out separately and ordered by Col Prince to be shot. For an act similar to this Governor Wall had been hanged, having flogged a man to death without trial by Court Martial. He had no hesitation in declaring, as a lawyer, that Col Prince was guilty of murder. The Marquis of Normanby would observe, that Her Majesty's Government had conveyed their disapprobation of Col. Prince's conduct even after his explanations had been given. Lord Brougham said, that death was inflicted long after the action, after surrender, after quarter had been asked, in the streets, and in the presence of ladies. Disapprobation of murder no doubt there would be, but there must be something more—there must be punishment, and severe punishment too.—Lord Fitzgerald stated, in answer to a question from Lord Brougham, that Sir J. M'Neil received no salary whatever from the public, the whole expense of his mission to Persia having been defrayed by the East India Company.

TUESDAY, May 28.—The Lord Chancellor, in the name of Her Majesty, expressed the royal approbation of the Speaker being at the head of the Commons' choice of Speaker.—Conversation again arose regarding Col. Prince's conduct in ordering certain prisoners to be shot. The Duke of Wellington observed, that it was absolutely impossible to discuss this subject with reference only to the conduct of Col. Prince. It would be necessary to take into consideration the whole system of warfare carried on in N. America, to which he was perfectly able to show the entire mischief was to be attributed.—Lord Ellenborough said, that his noble and learned friend, in bringing this charge of murder against Col. Prince, at the same time brought a strong charge against the officers who had sat on the committee of inquiry. Lord Brougham said that the sentence of the Court of Inquiry had been printed in the Gazette by Sir G. Arthur, and the sentence did not acquit Col. Prince of having killed four or five men after the battle was over. Sir G. Arthur stated, that he severely reproved Col. Prince for having put to death the four or five men who had surrendered, without any trial or legal proceeding whatever.—Lord Ellenborough said that Col. Prince's statement was, that the five men were put to death while they were in momentary expectation of an attack.—The Marquis of Normanby would be prepared to produce the papers required by Lord Brougham, and make what he should consider a satisfactory statement.—Lord Brougham presented a bill declaratory of the power of the mother country in the colonies, and prohibitory of the practice of acting on "resolutions" in the colonies as if they were laws.

THURSDAY, May 30. Lord Strangford inquired whether Government had received any intelligence respecting the collision between the British Government steamer Medea, and a French vessel.—Lord Munro explained the circumstances, and said that the affair resulted from "mistake," for which the amplest apologies were made as soon as discovered.—Lord Strangford thought, although the explanation was full, that these "mistakes" occurred now much oftener than they used to do. [We have noticed this matter in our leading columns].—Lord Brougham brought forward his motion for papers regarding the conduct of Col. Prince, in ordering certain American prisoners to be shot.—The Marquess of Normanby entered into lengthened explanations of the conduct of Col. Prince, urging that it in a great degree arose out of the peculiar circumstances and nature of the service.—The Duke of Wellington gave a most appalling description of the warfare now carried on, on the frontiers of Canada. "It was a war," he said, "full of the greatest horror, misery, and outrage. At this moment our guards and picquets were necessarily kept on the whole line of frontier, from one end of the country to the other. If by any accident we were obliged to withdraw our troops from one part of the line, the persons very appropriately designated brigands came over in sledges, or some other description of carriage, crossed the country, and the houses of the inhabitants everywhere in that particular direction were destroyed, the taken, and property plundered [hear]. All along this frontier there was a perpetual fire kept up from the side of the United States, across the imaginary line, upon our Guards, our picquets, and even on the single sentinels posted along the line [hear, hear]. In war, every means was justifiable on both sides to get the better of the enemy; but certainly he had never before, in the whole course of his experience, heard of such a thing as firing on single sentries, not to say guards or picquets [hear, hear]. Yet this species of warfare is going on at present in this province." The noble Duke considered this the natural result of employing volunteers. "Volunteers and that description of troops would always carry on war after the manner of civil war, and the same consequences would always ensue." He had, in his experience, more than once had the offer of men of this description; but he had always sent them away, preferring rather to have a limited body of troops than to have a force of this description, which would not obey the orders received. Unless a sufficient Army were provided, we must," he said, "in the end abandon the country."

FRIDAY, May 31.—The Earl of Winchilsea brought forward his motion, of which the object (he said) was to compel Lord Melbourne to afford some explanation as to the principles on which he intended to conduct the Government. Referring to the statement by Lord Melbourne, when he announced his resignation, of the reasons which led to that step, that he had not the confidence of the other House, and consequently could not carry on the affairs of the country, either with benefit to the Sovereign, with interest to the country, or with that honour and dignity that become the Ministers of the Crown,—Lord Winchilsea would ask the noble Viscount, if the same principles which directed and guided the Government which was constitutionally extinct upon the resignation, and the acceptance of the resignation by the Sovereign, influenced and directed the present Government.—Lord Melbourne considered that he had already given the explanation. He had stated the grounds of his resignation, also, very shortly, very plainly, and very distinctly, the circumstances which induced him to resume the situation which he held—circumstances of such a nature as made it impossible for him, with a due regard to the interests of the country, and as a man of honour and a man of feeling, to act in any other manner than he had done. "I am prepared to admit," added his Lordship, "that the difficulties with which I had to contend are, as far as I know, still undiminished; sure I am that they have not diminished by any abandonment of principle on my side; and sure I am that the Government will not be conducted on other principles than those on which I understood it was originally formed. Those principles are principles unquestionably of progressive Reform."—Lord Brougham, the Duke of Wellington, and Lord Normanby addressed the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 27.—Election of a Speaker.—Mr. Handley proposed and Dr. Lushington seconded Mr. Shaw Lefevre; and Mr. C. W. Wynn proposed and Mr. Wilson Patten seconded Mr. Goulburn. The numbers were, for Mr. S. Lefevre, 317; for Mr. Goulburn, 299;—majority in favour of the Government nomination, 18.

TUESDAY, May 28.—The new Speaker took the chair.—New writs were moved for Ludlow, in the room of Lord Clive, now Earl Powys, and for the city of Edinburgh, in the room of Mr. Abercrombie, called to the House of Lords.—Lord J. Russell stated, in answer to Mr. Hume, that the latest information of the Government was, that the Turkish army had advanced to the eastern bank of the Euphrates, but had not crossed. His Lordship declared that he knew of nothing calculated to make him believe that the efforts to preserve peace between the Porte and Egypt would not be successful.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that in a fortnight he hoped to propose resolutions on the subject of "postage of letters," and that he would then make his "financial statement."—Lord J. Russell said that a bill would be proposed for the amendment of the Poor Law Act, of which one feature would be the continuance of the Commissioners for one year longer. With respect to the plan for "national education," his motion was postponed.

THURSDAY, May 30.—Mr. Labouchere moved for leave to bring in a Bill to provide for the enactment of certain laws in Jamaica, in consequence of the abolition of slavery. His object was, now, to have the House of Assembly called together, and to afford that body an opportunity of passing laws on the subject of vagrancy, &c., and to renew various annual acts, the expiration of which would be productive of the greatest inconvenience. In the event of non compliance, to empower the Government to continue them.—Sir R. Peel expressed his approbation of this mode of proceeding; but reserved to himself the right to discuss the details. Motion agreed to.

FRIDAY, May 31.—Mr. Warburton adverted to Lord J. Russell's statement on the subject of an alteration of the postage, and wished to know whether the postage was to be one penny or twopence.—Lord J. Russell answered that the plan would be a uniform penny postage. If it received the sanction of the House, it could not be carried into effect for several months. He should deem it his duty to submit a resolution, pledging the house to make good any deficiency in the revenue that might result from its adoption.—The Attorney-General called attention to the decision of the Judges in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of "Stockdale v. Hansard," and said that as Lord Denman and the other Judges had unanimously decided in favour of Stockdale, and against the right to cover with Parliamentary protection the sale and publication of the Commons' printed papers, it was urgent to ascertain what course ought thereupon to be adopted. He, therefore, proposed the revival of the Select Committee on this subject.—Considerable conversation ensued; but Sir R. Peel, and other members, admitted that not a moment ought to be lost in the institution of inquiry.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—The inquiry instituted by order of the Minister of War into the conduct of the Polytechnic scholars, with regard to the late riot, has ended in the condemnation of 31 of these young men to some weeks' confinement in the Military prison of the Abbaye.

The Prince de Joinville left Paris on Sunday night for Toulon, to assume the command of the frigate which is placed under his orders, and proceed to join Admiral Lalande in the Mediterranean, of whose staff his Royal Highness is nominated the Chief. The Duke of Nemours has also left the capital on a tour of pleasure up the Mediterranean.

Hanover.—Count Munster died on the 20th ult. His office as Hereditary Marshal devolves on his son, who is still in his minority. The King of Hanover will therefore have to appoint a substitute.

Egypt.—Hostilities have broken out in Syria, between Egypt and the Porte. Fifty thousand Turks have entered El-Bir, on the Euphrates, and have passed the frontier. Boghos Bey and the four Consuls have returned here. The Pacha has left Cairo, and is expected hourly at Alexandria.

Van Diemen's Land.—Capt. M'Konochie, it seems, accompanied Sir John Franklin to V. D.'s Land deeply imbued with all those prejudices which are so rife at home amongst the colonists, and more especially as regards the prison discipline observed on that island, and the treatment of the convicts. It appears, further, that this prejudice carried him so far as to induce him to write and forward with the despatches of the Governor to the Secretary of State, his own views of colonial policy, and this without in the least apprising Sir J. Franklin of his intentions. On discovery of this under-current, Sir John acted with all the decision which might be expected from his character. He informed his Secretary that all further official intercourse was impossible. Capt. M'Konochie, therefore, closes his official life, stamped with what is very like a breach of confidence, and branded with the stigma of having allowed his zeal to carry him far beyond the bounds of discretion.—Graham's Town Journal.

Literary Notices.

The Gentleman of the Old School. A Tale. By G. P. R. James, Esq. Author of "The Huguenot," "The Gipsy," "The Robber," &c. 3 vols. Longman and Co.

This is a beautiful book. It may not be the cleverest (according to the usual acceptation of the phrase), and certainly it is not the most powerful, of Mr. James's performances, but to our simple taste it is incomparably the most beautiful. It is not a work of exaggerated passion—of violent excitement—straining the feelings to torture as it were. Yet the excitement is sufficiently strong to create an intense and unflagging interest. With all the soft and sun-light beauty of Claude, it has all the deep feeling of Poussin.

The fable of "The Gentleman of the Old School" is artificially—or rather artistically—constructed, its characters and incidents are numerous, yet all its points are distinctly preserved, and every thing is worked out with the utmost clearness and precision. If the plot possess a fault, it is in the denouement, which carries with it too much of a melo-dramatic air. It is by no means our intention to describe the story; that is a penalty which we rarely inflict upon either ourselves or our readers. In the present instance the task would be extremely difficult, and unsatisfactory in proportion to its difficulty. But it is not in the plot that the chief merits of the work consist. It is rather in the fine portraiture and admirable discrimination of character, and in the pure and elevated sentiments and principles which are throughout inculcated. Nothing can be in more exquisite keeping than the character of Sir Andrew Stalbrooke, "the gentleman of the old school." Let not the reader imagine that the title of the book, or aught that it contains, bears the slightest reference to politics. Nothing so base or sordid, so heart-withering, as politics, has found its way into Mr. James's story. Sir Andrew Stalbrooke is a gentleman, in the best meaning of that sadly abused word. He is an elegant scholar—accomplished—of refined taste and manners, of highly cultivated intellect, of unstained integrity, of noble and lofty purpose in all things;—a man who fears God, honours his king, and does as he would be done by.

Lady Mallory is another character of surpassing beauty and interest. Young—possessed of every personal attraction and charm—impassioned in her nature—high principled—loving almost to madness—fierce are her temptations, deep and agonising her struggles against unrequited affection. Principle triumphs over all, and the moral thus enforced is noble. In drawing, sustaining, and conducting this character through all its manifold trials of heart and mind, Mr. James must have experienced difficulties of no common order. That he has been completely successful is high praise.

Edith Forrest, on the other hand, is the very beau ideal of loveliness and excellence in woman. Sweet and gentle—ingenuous—accomplished, yet unpretending—intellectual—firm—the very soul of faith and honour. If Mr. James had departed from the principles of poetical justice with regard to Edith Forrest, we could never have forgiven him.

As Sir Andrew Stalbrooke is contrasted with old Forrest, a villain of the deepest dye, so Ralph Strafford, the lover of Edith, a fine, frank, brave fellow, is contrasted with the junior Forrest, a rascal as worthless as his uncle. And then we have the honest young farmer, Castle Ball—and Lucy Williams, the charming little girl that he loves dearly—and his termagant but in the main good-hearted mother—and various others of minor note. But the most truly original character in the work—the most essentially serviceable, too, in working out the plot—is Timothy Meakes, Esq., landowner, retired soldier, amateur poacher, &c. &c. How to describe him we know not; nor have we space sufficient at command in which the author himself may be allowed to exhibit him with any tolerable effect. However, a glimpse—only a glimpse—of him must be given:—

"In early life he had been a wildish lad in the village of Stalbrooke; and his father, who was the miller there, and well to do in the world, used to treat his son Timothy with a degree of harshness which Timothy was not inclined to endure. He accordingly enlisted in a regiment destined immediately for foreign service; and went out to see the world, and to try the smiles of the fickle Goddess. He proved a brave and gallant soldier; received various wounds, of which the musket-ball through the hand was one; and might have gradually gone on by various degrees of promotion, till he had even mounted the epaulette, had it not been for a certain sort of inherent fondness for the beasts of the field, which somewhat interfered with the regular discharge of his military duties. He had every quality on earth for a good soldier, but one. He was brave, active, clever, obedient, respectful, quick in thought and in deed, cleanly in his person and his habits almost to foppery,—boasting that his General had more often a dirty shirt on than he had; and with a certain degree of shrewdness and clear-headedness, which made him invaluable as a non-commissioned officer. He submitted to discipline without the slightest murmur; but the unfortunate point of his character was, that if there was bird, or beast, or fish, to be caught, shot, or hunted, from a rat to a rattlesnake, from a tortoise to a tiger, Tim Meakes could not resist it, let the time and circumstances be what they would. Indeed, all his comrades and friends applied to him, and none but him, on such occasions; for, whether by long conversation with birds, and beasts, and creeping things, he had acquired an intimate knowledge of their characters; or, by a peculiar instinct derived from nature, had a sort of sympathetic intelligence with the brute creation; or by some metempsycosical process he had been passed in succession through the bodies of every animal under the sun, and retained a recollection of the changes—he was certainly far better aware of what any given beast would do, under particular circumstances, than the beast itself. It was natural, therefore, that he should love to deal with things whereof he had so intimate a knowledge: it was natural, too, that his companions should constantly call for his aid, when they had anything to do with that part of the creation over which he seemed to exercise a superior influence: and these circumstances, during the six-and-twenty years that he remained in the service, and of which he had passed seventeen or eighteen in India, brought him into various difficulties, from which he would have found great trouble in extricating himself, had it not been for his excellent character in every other respect.—He thus, therefore, remained in an inferior rank, but nevertheless he contrived to acquire, by care and forethought, a very tolerable pittance, to enable him to return to his native country in comfort. That pittance was increased by a share of the property of his father, who just lived to see his son return; and buying a small patch of freehold ground, which happened to lie in the very midst of the common, Tim Meakes, with his own hands, and very little assistance, reclaimed the land, fenced it from the waste, built the house, made the furniture, and established himself as we have described."

This, we must repeat, is only a glimpse, presenting the faintest sketch imaginable of the original. The full-length is admirable. Altogether, we have not for a long time read a novel with so much gusto as "The Gentleman of the Old School."

History of the Navy of the United States of America. By J. Fenimore Cooper, Esq., Author of "The Pilot," "The Red Rover," "The Water Witch," &c. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

We have perused this history with no little curiosity, and with great interest. Considering the brief existence of the American marine, its annals are more eventful—more romantic, and more various than any in existence. Nothing can surpass the energy which enabled the United States to form an effective Navy, at a time when they could hardly be said to have had a political existence; and when they were beset by greater difficulties than any which an infant nation had ever yet to encounter. This consideration has animated the present historian, whose enthusiasm seems to be kindled by his office of chronicler, even more than when he formerly sought inspiration from the same source, in constructing his famous stories of the sea. His national pride has, however, not tempted him to be, after the manner of his countrymen, vain-glorious as regards his own nation, and abusive towards others. His work, accordingly, is more fair and candid than could have been expected on such a theme from an American pen. It is true that he here and there suppresses an inconvenient fact or so; but then he acknowledges the bravery and ability of the English, even when they were conquered by the Americans in several frigate actions. On our side, it has been alleged that the frigates of the United States were seventy fours in disguise, an assertion industriously denied by our transatlantic enemies. This question may, however, be unequivocally and for ever set at rest by the following extract from an official paper presented to Congress by the American Secretary-at-War, in consequence of a complaint regarding the enormous expense in the construction of the so-called frigates, built for the express purpose of encountering English vessels of the same nominal rate.

"It appears, that the first estimate rendered to Congress was for frigates of the common size and dimensions, rated at 36 and 44 guns, and that the appropriations for the armament were founded upon this estimate. It also appears that, when their size and dimensions came to be maturely considered, due reference being had to the ships they might have to contend with, it was deemed proper so to alter their dimensions, without changing their rates, as to extend their sphere of utility as much as possible. It was expected, from this alteration, that they would possess, in an eminent degree, the advantage of sailing, that, separately, they would be superior to any single European frigate of the usual dimensions; that, if assailed by numbers, they would be always able to lead ahead; that they could never be obliged to go into action but on their own terms, except in a calm, and that, in heavy weather, they would be capable of engaging double-decked ships. These are the principal advantages contemplated from the change made in their dimensions. Should they be realized, they will more than compensate for having materially swelled the body of expenditures."

From the above state-paper it is quite clear, by their own showing, that we scarcely ever went into action at sea with the Americans on equal terms. In describing the engagement between the Shannon and Chesapeake, Mr. Cooper is tolerably impartial. We think, however, that he ought not to have suppressed the previous chivalrous correspondence between Captains Broke and Lawrence.

Altogether the work is a valuable one, and cannot fail to pass into universal circulation. The incidents which took place in the Naval war with Tripoli, are grander and more heroic than anything in the circle of romance, and are detailed with all the vigour and animation of Mr. Cooper's genius. We may take another opportunity of examining some of the professional points.

Fair Rosamond; or the Days of Henry the Second. By Thomas Miller, author of "Royston Gower." H. Colburn.

We are delighted again to meet Mr. Miller "on the shores of old Romance,"—a locality that seems native to him, and (like our native air) calls forth powers and energies which he never exhibits elsewhere, in so high and valuable a degree, either for himself or for his readers. In those scenes of rural simplicity, in which this charming writer so loves to expatiate, he is doubtless quite as much himself, and it is possible that he may feel more at ease and at home, and therefore more simply and securely happy. But he is not performing so high an office in itself, or one that will lift him to that high place which we confidently believe he is destined to attain, in the annals of his country's literature. "Fair Rosamond" is in fact a production of rare and of high merit; it is really and truly what it aims to be—an historical romance of the Waverley school, and one which does at least as high honour to that school as any other which we are at the moment able to call to mind,—not forgetting the best of Mr James's productions; and of course not including those of Sir Lytton Bulwer, which do not belong to that or any school, but have created one of their own. We are most happy to report, too, that it makes a marked and important step in advance of the author's last production—"Royston Gower,"—which, with all its great merit, was deficient in some of those more delicate and refined features which cannot be absent from a first-rate work of this class. There is an elegance and a finish—"a grace beyond the reach of art"—in several of the scenes of "Fair Rosamond," and in the general execution of the heroine's character, which indicates a fair conception of what is needed in such a character, as regards the purposes of fiction, and a fine power of hand in exciting that conception. In some of the other characters too there is great skill and force displayed,—particularly in that of Thomas à Becket, who plays a most conspicuous part in the work—and also in Henry the Second,—who is conceived and drawn with admirable truth of effect. If, on the other hand, there is a degree of harshness about Queen Eleanor which it does not fully warrant, there is quite sufficient excuse for such a tone of character, in the absence of anything to the contrary in what we know of her, and in the contrast which the nature of a work of this class requires, to give it due effect.

We have often occasion to regret that our limits do not admit of extract; and we are especially reminded of this cause of regret now, since it prevents us from confirming our opinion of the extreme elegance and grace of some of Mr. Miller's scenes, by quoting the first introduction of Fair Rosamond to the notice of the King. As this, however, is one of the few novels of the present day which ought to command, and we trust will command, universal attention, we shall only further commend it to the readers, without exception, the most extraordinary and interesting proof our own day has afforded, of the beautiful power of the human mind to triumph over adverse circumstances, and prove its absolute supremacy over external things.

Insurrection of Poland in 1830-31, and the Russian Rule preceding it, since 1815. By S. B. Gnorowski. J. Ridgway.

The details in this political and military volume are of considerable interest. The author commences with a description of Poland, in the progress of restoration, and at the Congress of Vienna; and to this prelude succeeds an historical sketch of the administration of the "constitutional" kingdom, as established by the Congress, with the fifteen years despotic rule of the Grand Duke Constantine. Of the unprincipled character of the Grand Duke, M. Gnorowski furnishes abundant evidence, although he assures us that volumes would scarcely suffice to relate all the singularities of that remarkable tyrant. The accounts of the Secret Societies, of the Insurrection at Warsaw, and the various battles, terminating with the subjugation of the Poles, are narrated with apparent fidelity. M. Gnorowski is well acquainted with the political history of Russia, and he has shown himself no mean historian of the woes of Poland.

Iniquities of the Opium Trade with China. Allen & Co.

From the introduction we understand that several gentlemen connected with India placed in the hands of the Rev. A. S. Thelwall a number of documents having reference to the Opium Trade, and the information they afforded is condensed in this little volume. The purport of the publication is to point out the effects of opium, when used as a stimulant or intoxicating drug, to show the vast extent to which it is introduced into China, and in what light the Chinese look upon this traffic, and upon us, as a people engaged in it. A number of startling facts are adduced, to prove that this deleterious drug ruins those who indulge in it, in mind, body, and estate—depraves and enervates them, physically, intellectually, and morally, and finally brings them to an untimely grave; and that it is introduced into China in such immense quantities, as to effect the ruin of hundreds of thousands, if not millions of the inhabitants. The community owe a debt of obligation to Mr. Thelwall for his labours, which we sincerely trust may have some effect in diminishing such "wholesale murder."

H.B.—Nos. 590 and 591. The first is a Game at Whist; the Queen and Melbourne partners against Wellington and Peel: the Duke asks his Lordship to "see the last trick," which is covered by his Lordship's hand; whilst Sir Robert, addressing the Queen, says, "Pardon me, your Majesty has revoked." The nine of diamonds, a significant card, is just laid on the table by the Queen. The likenesses are excellent. The other is from the farce of the Invincibles. Peel, as a grenadier, protected by Wellington, as a wooden-legged old pensioner, is driven out by the Household troops, commanded "forward," by the Queen in person. It is a gallant charge, and the Bedchamber never turned out better.

East India Intelligence.

Burmah.—We have intelligence from Akyab to 22d Feb. Speculations of an unpleasant connexion were prevalent at that station upon the absence of all information from or concerning Col. Benson for two months preceding that date. The account of the Suddya affair had just reached Akyab, and seems to have created a greater sensation than it otherwise would have done, in consequence of a report which had spread from the Aeng Pass, that a party of 800 Burmese had appeared on our side the border, and burned a small guard-house constructed there by the British. The numbers of this party it was supposed might be exaggerated, but little doubt was entertained that the Burmese authorities, having intelligence of a recent visit which the Commissioner and Commandant of the province had made to the Pass, had sent forward a party to reconnoitre. From all this may be inferred the uncertain and suspicious state of affairs at the present moment in Arracan, as well as in other parts of Burmah.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 5.

Troops for Burmah.—Two strong detachments of the 13th and 40th Regts. are to proceed in the Greyhound and Thalia, which vessels are now busily occupied in taking in Ordnance and Commissariat stores for Moulmein.—Madras United Service Gazette, March 8.

Nusseerabad.—A case of heavy pecuniary involvement which has just come to light has created a considerable sensation at this station. The party involved is a young officer, generally reported to have possessed property at home, on which he drew to a very heavy amount. It now, however, appears that he had no property to draw against. It is even said forgery had been committed, and large sums obtained this way. A fashionable tradesman of Calcutta has, it is further reported, been duped out of jewellery to the amount of 12,000 rs. The affair, it is thought, will give employment to the Judges of Her Majesty's Supreme Court.

We learn by letters from Kamptee, that orders from the Supreme Government had just been received by Major-Gen. Wemyss, directing him to send, with all haste, two corps to Jubbulpoor and Hoosheenabad. The 11th, under Lieut.-Col. Calder, and 42d, under Major Ely, have, consequently, moved, the former to Jubbulpoor, and the latter to the other station.—Agra Ukhbar, Feb. 28.

The Court of Directors have, by a recent resolution, determined that the effective strength of the Indian Navy shall henceforward consist of four Captains, eight Commanders, forty Lieutenants: the remainder, to complete in all one hundred officers, to consist of Midshipmen. By the retirements consequent upon the new arrangements, there will be many promotions.—Bombay Times, March 23.

A letter from Shikarpoor dated 18th Feb. states, that it is Mr. M'Naghten's intention to get us (the contingent) off from here the first week in March, and we shall be at Candahar the latter end of April, and there appears little doubt but that Candahar will be a station for half the Shah's force. The road between this and Candahar will be very good. Coolies and hackeries are abundant, and there will be always some troops at Tukkur.—Delhi Gazette, March 6.

The 7th Regt. Bengal N.I., arrived at Mhow on 16th Feb., under Lieut.-Col. Dunsterville, and in consequence the 71st B.N.I. move towards Nusseerabad. A wing of the Bombay 3d N.I. was to arrive at Mhow on the 1st March from Dhoolia, the other being from Asseerghur, to march towards that place when relieved by the Madras 20th N.I. about the beginning of next month.—Bombay Times, March 20.

Bombay General Orders announce the restoration of the Military Board at that Presidency, with one Stipendiary Member in addition to two or three Staff Officers. This is an improvement upon the constitution of the former Board, and we are bound to add that the Bombay Government have selected for their stipendiary member an officer very highly qualified for almost any military charge that could be given him. They have also appointed as Secretary, an officer of high character and considerable talents for business.

Mr. Tatham, the head of the firm of Ashton and Co., died suddenly on the morning of the 11th March at Madras.

Mhow.—Extract from a letter of a correspondent, dated 17th Feb., 1839:—"I was obliged to come here to get within the limits of the Bengal Presidency; for by the Court's late orders, the circumstance of my regiment being at Benares precluded my drawing pay, and my Indian service being reckoned from the date of disembarkation at the Western Presidency. This appears hard and particular in operation; for instance, an officer arriving overland at Bombay, whose corps is quartered at Loodianah, has, to enable him to join, to perform a journey of about 1,200 miles, but he is entitled to pay and allowances, &c., from the date of his landing at Bombay. An officer, on the other hand, arriving at Bombay under similar circumstances, whose corps is quartered at Benares, has only a journey of about 900 miles to perform to enable him to join his regiment, and yet he is not entitled to pay, or to have his Indian service reckoned till he arrives within the limit of the Bengal Presidency."

The Supreme Government have sanctioned the grant of field batta to the 20th and 21st reg. Madras N.I., now on their way to very distant stations under the Bombay Presidency.

A friend has communicated to us the sudden death, by a fall from his horse, of Capt. Thomas, of the 7th Madras Cavalry. It seems a dinner-party had been given by the officers of H.M. 39th reg. at Bellary, to the officers of the other regiments at the station, and it was in returning from this party on horseback that the accident happened. Capt. Thomas had mounted his favourite horse "Cetus," and saying he would be home before any of them, started off at a good canter. A short distance from the Fort Gate, there is a sharp turn at right angles over a bridge, which poor Thomas could not have seen. The horse ran against the parapet, Captain Thomas was thrown over into a small nullah, and was killed on the spot, the front part of the head being knocked in, and the face much mutilated. Thus has been cut off, in the prime of life, full of health and happiness, a good soldier and a most delightful companion. —Bombay Times, March 13.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' INSTITUTION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

As Chairman of the Directors of the United Service Benevolent Institution, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of officers, Major-General Wright, Royal Engineers, is of opinion, that many of the readers of the Naval and Military Gazette, who may be interested in the success of this Institution, will be desirous of knowing the sentiments of the Secretary at War with respect to its affecting Government pensions, has the pleasure to forward to the Editor a copy of Lord Howick's official reply to the Major-General on the subject.

U. S. Benevolent Institution, Carlton Chambers, May 30, 1839.

War Office, May 29, 1839.

Sir,—I am directed by the Secretary at War to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, with its enclosure, and to acquaint you that the Regulation under which pensions are granted to widows of officers of the Army, directs, that pensions shall not be allowed to widows left in wealthy circumstances; and as it does not appear that the pensions to be granted from the private fund lately instituted would place the widows receiving them in the condition contemplated by the Regulation above alluded to, Lord Howick does not consider that the circumstance of a widow receiving a pension from the private fund would preclude her from obtaining a pension from the public, if she were in other respects eligible.—I have, &c.,

To Maj.-Gen. Wright, Rl. Engineers. S. Sullivan.

[We perceive that the suggestions we offered in a note last week are in strict accordance with the opinions of our excellent contemporary, the U. S. Journal. In the Number for June, published this day, the Editor says, "Let us request of those, to whose exertions this benevolent project owes its origin, calmly to investigate what is likely to be the number of claimants on the funds, in consequence of the contingencies of foreign service; and, when they have done so, to ascertain from some experienced actuary what rate of annuity and provision they will be able to afford to the widows and children of each rank, instead of setting down hypothetical sums—one-third of which, we may safely predict, can never, under any circumstances, be paid."—Again we recommend the Directors to revise the Rules and Regulations, and not to receive any subscriptions until they have consulted an experienced actuary. We have already explained that an institution of this kind originated with a deceased Field Officer and ourselves 25 years since; we therefore have some experience in the matter. Our first course was to obtain the approval of an eminent actuary—the late Mr. Morgan—of the various calculations. The Royal Family and the Army then offered us every support, but the Government opposed the measure on the liberal ground that, as it appeared from the calculations that officers would be made independent, "they would have too great an influence in the state."—Ed.]

H.M.'S SERVICE IN INDIA. No. 15.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It is known on the best authority that a Lieut.-Colonel of H.M.'s forces had, at a very recent period, a conversation with the late Chairman of the Hon. Court of Directors on the subject of the grievances of H.M.'s officers serving with regiments in India. The Hon. Chairman stated that Field Officers could have no possible cause of complaint, and on this being at once admitted, and the case of the three junior ranks (Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns) being brought forward to shew the degraded situation in which these officers were placed, the fact was readily agreed to, but the hon. gentlemen asserted that the Court of Directors never intended that H.M.'s officers who were qualified by a knowledge of the languages should be excluded from the offices of Brigade-Major, Adjutant and Quarter-Master-General, &c. Now, Sir, my object in this letter will be to show that the three junior ranks in H.M.'s service in India are entirely, and most unjustly, sacrificed to the exaltation of the Hon. Company's own officers principally, but also to the Field Officers of H.M.'s Army; and that whatever may have been the intention of the Court of Directors, the Indian governments have wilfully neglected any orders they may have received to the effect above-mentioned. I will commence by observing that the pay of Field Officers in India is on the most extravagant scale when compared with those of the junior grades. In Europe a Lieut.-Colonel has four times the pay of an Ensign, and a Major three times, but in India the Lieut.-Colonel has ten times the Ensign's pay, and the Major five times! Your Correspondent produces Sir Thomas Munro as a great authority in this case, but Sir Thomas here displayed his ignorance; for whatever high reward the Company's officer may obtain by remaining in the service—which is said to be the reason why the Hon. Company make this extreme disproportion in the pay—not one officer in one thousand in H.M.'s service ever profit by the system, as shown in my letters, and in the able statement in the United Service Journal for April 1836. A Lieut.-Colonel commanding a regiment can save 1,000*l.* per annum in India, and a second Lieut.-Colonel (who Sir John Malcolm shows are useless) 600*l.* per annum, and a Major 400*l.* per annum. The Captains cannot save a shilling, as on them devolves all that extra expense at messes which in India particularly is unavoidable, and closely connected with the respectability of the service*. It is useless to repeat the statements regarding the Subalterns. The staff situations held by the H.M.'s officers in India, on the 1st January, 1839, were precisely EIGHTEEN in number, exclusive of eight garrison or brigade commands, and every one of these, with three exceptions, are held by Field Officers in H.M.'s service. The General Staff appointments are, with three exceptions, held by officers who would never have been in India only for those situations, thus leaving the three situations to be divided amongst—deducting Field Officers and Medical Officers—about eleven hundred and fifty officers of H.M.'s service: and not one solitary situation for a Subaltern officer! Now the Hon. Company's (4,100) officers lately divided upwards of eleven hundred Staff appointments amongst them, and this number has been much increased lately by the officers attached to the Oude and Cabul contingents. One thousand of these situations are probably held by the Captains and Subalterns, who not only thus obtain offices of great emolument and trust, which lead to distinction, but escape all the disgusting drudgery of garrison and general duties, which are thus thrown on H.M.'s officers. In the garrison of Bombay three entire native corps could only furnish four Subalterns for garrison duties, whereas a wing of one of H.M.'s regiments furnished nine! The rounds in many garrisons in India include a distance of five and six miles, and I presume no sane person—even a sane Director, if such an animal exist—will suppose this distance can be done on foot twice in ten hours. Yet the Brevet Captains of H.M.'s Army, who are obliged to do this extra duty, receive eighty rupees monthly less in the garrison of Bombay than the H.E.I.C. Lieutenants of one year's service, who do not this duty!! I now proceed to give a statement of the Staff situations held by H.M.'s officers in India on the 1st of January, 1839—with the exception of the garrison and brigade commands, which, as corps are constantly changing their stations, I cannot do. But these commands are all held by Lieut.-Colonels in H.M.S. generally of forty years' service. In this list H.G.A. stands for "Horse Guards' Appointment," and I.A. for "Indian Appointment."

DIAMINE.—This name (derived from the Greek Diamino) is applied to the purest and most permanent Chymical Compounds yet discovered for BLACK and RED WRITING INKS. They are rapidly superseding all others, and are to be had of every respectable Stationer. The Trade supplied from the Diamine Works, 12, Wilson-street, Finsbury.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 6d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 7ls. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 23s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

DR. HANCOCK'S THERMAL, SULPHUREOUS, HOT MINERAL WATER, and MEDICATED VAPOUR BATHS, 49, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-sq. The Medical Faculty, the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, are respectfully informed, that these auxiliaries for the cure of Chronic, Inflammatory, and Cutaneous Disorders, are NOW OPEN, under the approbation of the most distinguished Physicians in the Metropolis. The Artificial Thermal Waters are composed of the same ingredients as the natural Springs of Bareges, Vichy, Aix la-Chapelle, the Sulphureous Springs of Virginia, and the Island of Nevis, being in all respects equal to these, and possessing, moreover, the advantage of increased strength, and any additions to suit particular cases. They are available for the cure of a great variety of disorders, as gout and rheumatism, dropsy, scrofula, foul scorbutic ulcers, eruptions of the skin, coughs, and diseases of the chest, lungs, and nervous system. For the convenience of Invalids, apartments (with every accommodation and attendance) are provided on the premises.—Usual hours of attendance from Nine A.M. till Eight P.M.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1826, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bonilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly, Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

* The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichson, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.
No. 158, New Bond Street (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

* J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove.—"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

Cape of Good Hope, by the LAURA, Crockley, arrived at Portsmouth. Java, by the CANTON, Mordaunt, arrived at Plymouth. Manilla, by the NILE, Anderson, arrived at Gravesend. It affords us much pleasure to notify that Capt. Thomas Hastings, of H.M. ship Excellent, was honoured with Knighthood at the Levee on 5th inst.

PORTSMOUTH, June 7.—(From our own Correspondent.) The Buffalo troop-ship arrived at Spithead on Friday and the Atholl troop-ship on Saturday morning: the former disembarked her soldiers in the River Thames, principally belonging to the Guards, and was only here a day or two to refit and get some mechanics to enter, for the purpose of proceeding to New Zealand to convert timber: some joined the Victory, and she then put to sea. The Buffalo proceeded to Quebec to land part of her troops, and there embarks a considerable number of convicts for passage to New South Wales; she has a convict-guard on board. After they are landed, the ship will proceed to New Zealand, and load home with timber. Atholl embarked a detachment of the 24th regiment from this garrison, and immediately after went to Cork to take in others, and then go to Quebec. Benbow was towed to Spithead on Monday: it is said she is to go to sea early next week for a short cruise, possibly to the Clyde to obtain some seamen that have volunteered for her. Avon steam transport has gone to Chatham for troops: she has work of that nature cut out for her during the rest of the summer months. Kite steamer is hourly expected from the river on her way to the West Indies, to join Vice-Admiral Sir Thomas Harvey: she takes out some Supernumeraries for the squadron, and Lieutenants Page and Sansum to join the flag-ship. Childers goes out of harbour to-morrow, and afterwards to Plymouth, previous to proceeding to the East Indies. Hastings is refitting at Spithead: Capt. Loch has resigned the command of her, and the Admiralty have appointed Capt. J. Lawrence, C.B., in his room. Hydra has made the requisite alterations round her boilers in harbour, and is now quite ready for sea. Britannia and Clio are fitting in the basin, and Revenge and Lily in the harbour. A strong party of shipwrights are at work on the Magicienne. The Queen will not be out of dock for two months. The Naval College, upon the new plan of giving scientific instruction to Mates who have gone through the ordinary course on board the Excellent, opened on the 1st June. The regulation for "calling" the workmen of the Dock-yard in their own time, and thus making them go in the Yard a quarter of an hour earlier, has been annulled, as the people remonstrated against it. Ships in Port—Hastings and Benbow at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Revenge, Royal George yt., Hydra, Childers, Clio, Lily, Messenger, Vulcan, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, June 7th.—(From a Correspondent.)—31st May—The Forth, 44, was taken out of dock, having had her copper scrubbed and repaired. Arrived the Amelia Thompson, on her way to Australia with emigrants. June 1—Pandora, 6, Lieut.-Com. Robert W. Innes, was taken into dock to be new coppered and to have her defects made good; although almost a new vessel, several parts of her are in a decayed state, owing to the dry rot. The Tortoise lighter arrived from Portsmouth, with stores for that dock-yard. 3d—Arrived Pylades, 18, Com. W. L. Castle, from the Island of Ascension, which place she left on the 28th April, she brought home despatches and invalids from the squadron. The Pylades has been three years and six months on the coast of Africa station, and has been very healthy the whole of that time, having only lost one man by sickness; she made the following captures while on that station, viz., Gazatta, with 233 slaves on board; Esperanza, with 471, and Prova, with 220. The Wolverine arrived at Princes Island with a vessel having on board 88 slaves. The Buzzard, Lieut.-Com. Charles Fitzgerald, arrived at the same island on the 3d of April, with 2 vessels which she detained, being fitted for slavers, but under American colours, with American Masters, and Spanish crews; one of these vessels was sent to New York in charge of the Buzzard, that the American Government might be made acquainted with the deception carried on under the protection of their flag. The Scout, 18, Com. Craigie, and Wolverine, Com. W. Tucker, sailed from Ascension, on a cruise, 27th of April; the former expected to be relieved daily, and would return to England. The Bonetta, 3, Lieut.-Com. J. L. R. Stoll, had proceeded to the Cape of Good Hope; Viper, 6, Lieut.-Com. W. Winniett, had sailed for St. Helena; and Dolphin, 3, Lt.-Com. E. Holland, to Sierra Leone. Saracen, 10, Lt.-Com. H. W. Hill; Brisk, Lt.-Com. A. Kellett, and Forester, 3, Lieut.-Com. F. G. Bond, were cruising on the Sierra Leone station. Nautilus, 10, Lieut.-Com. G. Beaufoy; Termagant, 10, Lieut.-Com. Henry F. Seagram; Fair Rosamond, 3, Lieut.-Com. W. B. Oliver, and Lynx, 3, Lieut.-Com. Henry Broadhead, were cruising in the Bights. The squadron had been very healthy with the exception of the Brisk, who had lost many of her crew, and all her officers but the Commander and Clerk-in-charge. The slave trade had considerably diminished, owing to the number of empty vessels (Spanish and Portuguese) having been condemned at Sierra Leone. Arrived the Menai yacht, Lord Francis Egerton, who is going to take a trip to the Mediterranean. 4th—Arrived the Goodwill lighter, with stores from Pembroke; also the Steady, tender to the Astrea, from Falmouth, with old stores, and sailed on her return to that port on the 6th, with stores for the packets. 7th—The Pylades, 18, Com. Castle, is ordered to be paid off at this port, and is expected to come into harbour this day for that purpose. Vengeance, 84, has been brought alongside the jetty, and will be taken into dock to have her copper examined. Druid, 44, Captain Lord H. J. S. Churchill, will move into the Sound in the early part of the ensuing week. We are happy to state that the workmen in this Dock-yard are to have the benefit of superannuation, as heretofore. This is as it should be. Last Thursday seven men belonging to the Belleisle, 72, Capt. J. T. Nicolas, were severely hurt; in getting up the maintopsail yard, the purchase gave way, and the men becoming entangled in the sight, received violent falls; two of them were obliged to be sent to the Royal Naval Hospital, but are doing well: the others are able to return to their duty. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Pandora, Carron, st.-v. In the Sound—Pylades, and Amelia Thompson emigrant ship.

DEPTFORD, 5th June.—Arrived and fitting the Layton convict-ship, and Valleyfield, for Quebec. Barrosa transport, Lieut. Scrymgeour, is preparing to be discharged; the Middlesex has embarked her convict-guard; the Mary Anne is fitting for a female convict-ship; her Chief Mate, a fine young man of 22, fell overboard 31st inst. and was drowned; body found 3d inst. Remain Layton, convict-ship, Florist, emigrant-ship, and Stakesby, for Quebec.

MALTA.—H.M.S. Asia, Princess Charlotte, Vanguard, and Zebra, sailed on 21st May for the westward. Pembroke arrived off Malta on 25th May.

Harrier, 18, Com. Carew, was at Sad Blas on 16th Jan., having been to the most northerly of the Mexican ports to collect treasures; she had then on board 700,000 dollars, the same ports having been swept very recently before her arrival there by an American sloop of war; large quantities of silver were, however, coming down to the coast from the mines, and it was anticipated the Imogene, 28, Capt. Brace, which was the next ship for Europe, would collect nearly 2,000,000 of dollars for England. Harrier may be expected at Spithead at the end of July or beginning of August.

An Admiralty Circular Order has been issued to H.M.'s ships, directing that soldiers, invalids, and others, passengers on board, and who are usually victualled at two-thirds of the allowance granted to seamen, shall, if admitted into the "ship's sick mess," be victualled at full allowance, so as not to infringe upon the comforts of the other people.

Lieut. Lord Henry Russell, invalided from the Tyne, took passage for England in the Hastings, and was unfortunately left behind at Lisbon.

The Echo, Lieut. James, and Firefly, Lieut. Pearce, steamers, were paid off at Woolwich on the 31st May.

The Lightning steamer has arrived at Woolwich with two beautiful gazelles, rare plants, and an orange-tree in ripe bearing, and the Queen Dowager's luggage from Portsmouth, having previously towed the Defence, Black Prince, and Tremendous, 74's, from Sheerness to the Chatham ordinary.

The Buffalo, store-ship, has sailed from Chatham to New Zealand for Naval timber.

A brigantine and large steamer are ordered to be completed at Sheerness for packet service, from whence the Atholl, troop-ship, Mr. Bellamy, Master, has sailed for Canada.

Rear-Admiral the Earl of Dundonald has left town for Portsmouth, where his Lordship, under the authority of the Board of Admiralty, is superintending the erection of a steam-engine for supplying water to different parts of the dock-yard. The Board are expected shortly to visit the port to inspect this and other public works.

The Pylades, from Africa, brings important intelligence from the coast respecting the slave trade, a new system having sprung up for the purpose of eluding the vigilance of our cruisers, under the protection of the American flag. It appears that American vessels are taken to the Havannah and sold, together with their papers, for employment in the nefarious slave traffic; they are there manned by regular slave crews, and sail under American colours. Two of these vessels have lately been captured by the English cruisers, and so complete were their American credentials, that in the absence of any representative from the United States at Sierra Leone, the Commodore has sent them under the charge of a man-of war to New York, in order that the circumstances may be investigated by the American Government, and their assistance obtained to put a stop to such practices. The Pylades has lost but one man on the coast; she brings, however, distressing accounts of some of the other ships, among whom the loss of life has been most serious, both of officers and men.

There is at present a scarcity of seamen in Liverpool. The scarcity is chiefly owing to the sailings having been numerous and the arrivals few, the easterly winds having now prevailed for several weeks. We have heard of outward-bound vessels having been prevented from sailing for several days from a want of hands.—Liverpool Albion.

The penny postage, which for years past has been added to letters and papers to all places without the fortifications of Portsmouth and Portsea, was on Saturday abolished; and ship-letters in future are not to be subjected to this tax. The letters for Copnor and Milton, which are not delivered, but are left at a house of call, will still be liable to this tax.

LAUNCH OF THE FANTOME.—(From a Correspondent.)—On Thursday week was launched from Chatham Dock-yard, in the presence of an immense number of spectators, the beautiful brig Fantome of 16 guns and 431 tons. This vessel may be considered the ne plus ultra of Sir W. Symonds new mode of ship-building. In her are combined all the essential qualities required in vessels of this class. It is often asked, "In what respect are the ships of the present Surveyor superior to those of Sir Wm. Rule and Sir R. Seppings, the former Surveyors?" To this may be answered, one great feature is, the additional breadth of the beam; for instance, the Fantome, of 10 guns, is about three feet wider than the old 18-gun brigs used to be; this makes ships of this class particularly excellent sea boats. They have also a fine entrance forward, and a clean run abaft, and carry their guns higher out of the water than the old brigs, all of which adds much to their sailing qualities. The Fantome is called, we suppose, after the old Fantome taken from the French in the last war, which was a great favourite with our nautical men. The day was very fine, and we have never seen such a launch "go off" with greater eclat. Mr. Fincham, the builder, and his assistant, Mr. Moore, conducted the affair with great ability.

JOHN MITCHELL, Esq., PURSER, R.N.—This officer died at Bridport on 28th May, aged 63, after a lingering illness, which he bore with a patience and resignation truly exemplary. He was the son of a Greek gentleman who took refuge in England in consequence of the failure of one of those patriotic movements that so often distracted that country before it became an independent state. At the age of [illegible] he was placed at a Greek school in Leghorn, from whence he was removed to one at Constantinople, where he acquired a perfect knowledge of the modern Greek language; this, with the knowledge he acquired of the French, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, eminently qualified him for the situation he so long held during the last war—that of an interpreter; in which capacity he was of the greatest service to our Naval Commanders in the Mediterranean in their diplomatic intercourse with the surrounding states. He had the honour of serving in the capacity for two years with the late Sir Samuel Hood, and was in the fleet blockading Toulon. He served afterwards as Purser in several line-of-battle ships—the Centaur and Warspite—and was lately paid off from the Caledonia, Sir J. Rowley's flagship, for whose kind consideration of his infirm state of health at the time he always entertained the deepest gratitude. Mr. Mitchell naturally took a warm interest in the fate and fortunes of Greece, and was anxious to extend a knowledge of it by facilitating a knowledge of its language. With this view he published, several years ago, a translation of a work by Mr. Jules David, of Scio, entitled "A Grammatical Parallel of the Ancient and Modern Greek;" a work which did great credit to his literary talent as to his patriotic zeal. To those who knew him, and were acquainted with his mild and amiable qualities, it will be unnecessary to say more than that as he lived an honest and honourable man, so he died a sincere and humble Christian.

Captain Harrison, lately arrived from Jamaica and promoted to 1st Captain, and to a company in Canada, in place of Bt.-Major Pringle retired on full-pay, has obtained six months leave.—On Thursday se'nnight, Capt. Dickens's field battery, at Charlemont, was minutely inspected in marching order, by M.-Gen. Sir T. Pearson, in the exercising field. The battery moved past the General, at a walk, in column of division; and at a trot in front of battery, at quarter intervals, and ranked past (left in front), at a walk, in column of route. After performing some 15 or 16 manœuvres, and expending between 15 and 20 rounds of ammunition per gun, the Major-General was satisfied with what he had seen in movements, and desired that the sword exercise might be gone through by the gun detachment, which having been performed, a general salute closed the review. The Major-General then repaired to the Fort, and examined the books, &c., while the company paraded in heavy marching order, under arms, for an inspection of accoutrements and necessaries. Upon the conclusion of his inspection, Sir Thomas expressed himself in terms of commendation at the excellent character given of this company by the Lieut.-Col. Commanding (there having been but one Court-Martial in the company during the last 12 months), and urged the men to a continuance in such good conduct. The Major-General also declared his satisfaction at all that had come under his observation at the inspection.

On the 31st ult., at guard-mounting on Woolwich Parade, another case, it is supposed, of intended assassination occurred. A Gunner and Driver, named Rattaway, of the 7th batt., was ordered to return to his quarters (to adjust his dress), by Col. Bastard. The man not returning in a reasonable time, a non-commissioned officer was despatched after him, who surprised him in the act of ramming down a ball cartridge into his musket. When questioned as to what he was doing, he replied he meant to shoot himself; but this was much doubted, and it was believed that some murderous intention was contemplated. The man was immediately secured and conveyed to the guard-room, where an inquiry took place in his conduct, when it was generally believed he was labouring under temporary derangement, and he was conducted to the Ordnance Hospital, where he is now confined.—Daily Paper.

Garrison Orders, by Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield, 1st June, 1839.—1. Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield having inspected the Woolwich Division of Rl. Marines on the 30th ultimo, has a most gratifying duty to perform, in promulgating in Garrison Orders his unqualified and marked approbation, not only of the appearance of the battalion under arms (although few in number, from their services being required in other quarters,) but every branch of their internal arrangements, the excellent condition and state of the men's barracks, and his admiration of the real comfort so visible, and the Medical and Purveyor's departments. His Lordship was also much gratified in the perfectness of the Gun exercise, and the attention paid to the schools of the regiment was highly creditable to those in charge. His Lordship requests Col. Wingrove, the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and Privates of the Division, to accept his very best thanks for their good exertions, and which he shall not fail of bringing under the notice of the authorities concerned.

2. His Lordship, the Commandant, cannot refrain from expressing the deep sense he entertains of the kind sympathy evinced by the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and the Garrison upon the melancholy solemnity of yesterday, manifesting thereby their abhorrence of the foul crime which has deprived Her Majesty's service, and more particularly the Rl. Regt. of Artillery, of a most exemplary and efficient soldier.

The West Somerset Regt. of Yeomanry Cavalry, amounting to upwards of 500 men, terminated their permanent duty for the year on the 1st inst. On Friday the regt. was inspected by Lieut.-Col. Chatterton, L.H.,

4th Dragoon Guards, who expressed his entire and unqualified approbation of the discipline and effective state of the corps. On Wednesday, 20th May, it being the birth-day of Col. Tynte, a splendid piece of plate (value 200*l.*) was presented to him by the non-commissioned officers and privates of the regt. as a "testimonial of their attachment, respect, and esteem for him as their commanding officer,"—a similar tribute of regard having been presented to the gallant Colonel on a previous occasion by the officers of the corps. The exemplary conduct of the men in quarters, and the soldier-like bearing of the regt. in the field, during the period of their service, were warmly appreciated by the inhabitants of this town and neighbourhood.

Lieut.-Colonel Reid, C.B.—The Barlow, with His Excellency, our newly-appointed Governor, on board, came to at Murray's Anchorage, on Thursday last, after a tedious passage of 51 days from Portsmouth. On Friday morning at 8 o'clock, His Excellency was conveyed from the Barlow by the government steamer, and landed at St. George's, under a salute from Fort Victoria, where he was received by a guard of honour of the 30th Regt., by the officers of the garrison in full uniform, by the Worshipful the Mayor and Magistrates of the town, and by many of the inhabitants—the well-organised band of the 30th being in attendance, and playing that beautiful national anthem, "God save the Queen,"—His Excel. then proceeded to Government House. At about 9 o'clock, His Excel., accompanied by Colonel Robinson, 30th Regt, Colonel Emmett, R.E., and Lieut. Papillon, R.A., left St. George's for Mount Langton, in His Excellency Sir S. R. Chapman's barouche, where, on arrival, he was met by the several members of the Hon. the Privy Council, the Speaker of the House of Assembly, by the Venerable Archdeacon Spencer, the Worshipful the Mayor of Hamilton, the Attorney and Solicitor Generals, the Collector of H.M. Customs, and other public functionaries. At 12 o'clock His Excellency took the customary oaths, and entered on his responsible office, as Governor of the Colony.—Bermuda Gazette, 16th April.

The Naval and Military Commissioners had a meeting This week at the Treasury. Among those present were the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Richmond, Earl of Minto, Viscount Melville, Viscount Howick, Sir Hussey Vivian, Sir Henry Hardinge, Sir Thomas Hardy, Sir Charles Adam, and Sir A. Dickson. The Commission sat three hours.

Mortality in the French Army.—A very interesting discussion took place in the Chamber of Deputies on Monday last, on the question that the annual levy of 80,000 conscripts for the year 1838 be authorised. Col. Paixhans, from documents to which he referred, refuted the statement in the report of the Committee to which the measure had in its usual course been submitted, that "the military profession was in time of peace favourable to the preservation of man" (those engaged in it). On the contrary, he showed that the annual mortality among young men of 20 years of age engaged in civil pursuits was only 12 in 1000; and among those of 27 years of age, similarly occupied, 14 in 1000. Now, the mortality in the ranks of the army was much more excessive. Among the non-commissioned officers it was 11 in 1000; among the senior soldiers (those of from 26 to 27 years of age) the deaths were 20 in 1000 per annum. Among those who were only five years in the service (they commence at 20 years) the mortality was 30 in 1000; among those who were four years in the Army it was 45 in 1000; among those of three years it was 52 in 1000; among those of two years it was 65 in 1000; and among the young soldiers, those in the first years of service, the mortality was 76 per 1000. He added, that the annual mortality among the veterans in the Hotel des Invalides was 50 in 1000; among the troops in the colonies 70, and among those in Algiers 80 in 1000.

The Marquis of Huntley freight-ship has arrived at Cove, and the drafts of corps, as under, were ordered to embark in that vessel on the 30th and 31st May, viz.—drafts of 65th and 66th, on 30th May; drafts of 34th, 71st, 73d, and 93d, on 31st.

Capt. Killikelly, of Youghal, has been appointed Barrack Master of the Cashel district, v. Capt. Hughes, who retires, receiving the usual pension.

The demoralised state of the Australian colonies has frequently been adverted to, and it appears by late accounts that the military stationed there have deeply partaken of the taint. The Sydney Herald of 14th Nov. says—"It is a melancholy fact that there are at this moment a Lieut. late of the 80th reg., and twenty-one private soldiers of different regiments in the colony (but principally the 80th and 28th) now in Sydney jail on criminal charges."

The Buffalo, after disembarking the detachments at Quebec, will receive on board there about 300 convicts for N.S. Wales. Lieut. Andrews, 28th reg., and Ens. Irby, 51st (with detachments of their respective regs., forming a convict guard), are on board.

United Service Institution for the Benefit of Officers' Widows and Orphans.—A very full meeting of the members took place on Monday at Carlton Chambers; Major-General Wright took the chair. It was resolved that, several of the members having given the calculations on which the subscriptions were based their deep consideration, "All officers becoming subscribers from this date must come in on that date of subscription" (and their widows receive such pensions) as shall be determined by a general meeting, after an actuary shall have been consulted." Amongst the officers present were Adm. Sir D. Milne, Sir R. Williams, Bt. Marines, Col. Campbell, Major White, Capt. R. Kerr, R.N., Sir J. Lemon, Col. D. Campbell, Sir J. Jones, Capts. The Staff appointment of Quartermaster-General at Montreal, held by Major Hall, h.-p., is vacant.

Mr. R. Titley is appointed Barrack-Master at Troubridge.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH'S PLAN.—(Concluded from p. 333.)

Having enumerated those privileges and benefits which it is to be presumed would irrevocably secure the voluntary services of the trading mariner to his country if called on, and which are founded alike on common law and simple justice, being, in effect, a civil agreement formed between two contracting parties, by which certain emoluments are given by the one for services promised by the other, it now remains to be added the nature of those documents which all trading mariners should be furnished with and obliged to retain in order to guard against fraud, and secure the interests of the national mariner inviolate. They are brief and simple: the latter should receive a document expressing a minute description of his age, name, station, complexion, marks, and place of birth, on the national contract being subscribed to, which should be renewed or backed every voyage he makes to sea. It would be his interest to preserve this, even if disinclined to comply with the contract if called on, as every mariner not in possession of such a testimonial should be deemed by law a defrauder of the State—as those who were "private mariners," and did not avail themselves of the beforementioned contract and advantages, should also be expected to produce their certificate of exoneration or protection, with which it would be necessary to furnish them—also containing a like description to that of the other. It would be to his advantage also to produce this testimonial, as, in the absence of which, he would be legally viewed in the same light as the former. These are the reciprocal and judicious terms that ought to subsist between the trading marine and the State; these are the measures and rights called for at the hands of the shipowners and underwriters of the country, the aid and support solicited from the Government, which, if once conceded, we would find the mariners but too willing to acquiesce, and desirous to avail themselves of the opportunity of giving to their country that valuable support and services, if required, which of old achieved her renown.

It may possibly be contended that giving the trading mariner such advantages, few seamen would be found to join the Royal Navy; but let it not be forgotten, that notwithstanding all these privileges, the seaman of the latter service is, and always must be, infinitely better off, and must be exposed to less hardships and toil; and also that the former, by the nature of his stipulations, is available under any circumstances: therefore this hypothesis could not hold ground.

In these plans there is nothnig abstruse, nothing more simple, and before the lapse of many years, nay, even many months, such fixed and uniform rules would work their beneficial end. The private mariner would soon perceive the advantages enjoyed by the "national" one; and the latter, in his turn, would readily be made intimate with the equitable regulations and merits of the Royal Navy, and every day would tend to undeceive him in the erroneous opinions imposed on his understanding relative to that service, and at last he would be found to covet admittance into it either in peace or war. England would then hold in reserve an increasing and efficient body of volunteer mariners ready at the mandate of their gracious Sovereign, to rise for the defence of that country in which they held so great a stake, and the Government in which they filled so prominent a position. We then, indeed, might with truth repeat the soul-inspiring theme—

'Tis to honour we call you, nor press you like slaves,
For who are so free as the sons of the waves?

Then would commerce and laws be defended and secured by the willing and bold hands by which it is created, while good conduct would have its due weight in all the arrangements of this important undertaking; and the character established in and received from the Royal Navy or the trading marine ought to be influential in either service, and be rigidly scrutinised on the mariner changing his pursuits; nor should the benefits or gratuities of the one interfere with those of the other, but allowed to act as an inducement to zeal and fidelity.

With a view to render the establishment or institution proposed economical in its expenses and perfect in all its bearings, it would be attended with many advantages of a various nature to divide it into four branches—one in London, Liverpool, Glasgow, and Dublin; the two latter, from local circumstances, would be found to lessen the expenditure, which, being combined with the employment of those pensioners who were able to work on the manufacturing of sails, mats, gaskets, ropes, &c., it would lessen the burden of expenses and employ the minds of the inmates.

One circumstance, of not less moment than some of the preceding, yet remains to be proposed, and experience must suggest the propriety of such a measure. The trading mariner has been too long a dupe to fallacious and base misstatements, thrust on his equally too credulous and honest mind, and has fallen a victim to that specious design which incessantly represents the Royal Navy as a service of slavery. In justice to him, and for the welfare of his country, no means ought to be wanted, no exertion omitted, to set him right on this point, to prove the falsehood of those reports and ignorant assertions, in order to inform him of the true nature of the service with which he would become identified with under the preceding stipulations. Whether those proposals ever be adopted or not, this last measure would be found to answer a good end, but more particularly as a collateral auxiliary to the motives of the beforementioned arrangements. In the above intent it is advanced that the privileges of furlough which are granted to the soldier be also extended to the seamen of the Royal Navy, to a limited number men for every year, to depend on recommendation and good conduct; and during the period of his leave of absence (for reasons hereafter stated) a portion of his pay to be allowed him, provided he, during that time, proves he was employed in the trading marine. For this purpose he should be granted a term of from two to nine months' leave; this indulgence, (extended in reward for good conduct, and not as an admitted right, would not be at all incompatible with the nature of the service, or an innovation on discipline or law,) would be answering a twofold advantageous end. It, in the first place, would be sending forth a living evidence before the eyes of the trading marine, attesting the justice and encouragement of the Royal Navy; they would be promulgating the truth of the benefits derived from it, and giving a refutation to the slanderers and calumniators of his legitimate service. In the second place, he would be receiving a double reward for his labour and merit.

Under such circumstances, a line of distinction between the indulgence the soldier receives, and that which he equally merits, cannot be drawn; the former is allowed every year one month's furlough in England and six weeks in Scotland and Ireland, and also is admitted to frequent short leave, during which periods he may work at his trade, and receiving at the same time 8*d.* per day pay, although only gratifying his own private feelings; while, on the contrary, the seaman would be rendering an important benefit to his country in the manner before stated; he would be always ready, improving in his vocation, and serving the State, which would amply repay the expenses such a measure would be to Government. This end would be more readily attained by only allowing one of those liberty men to one trading ship, and imposing a fine on every master who transgressed this regulation, and every man who did not produce his certificate of leave from the Royal Navy; in short, this plan may be expected (with reason) to operate on the trading marine as the occupation of Lieutenants in that service does at present, but, in like manner, receive a vehement opposition at first, although now solicited by the shipowner, and the trading vessels which those officers command sought after by the mariner. But notwithstanding this anxiety on the part of the men to join such ships, from the report or recollection of the invariable considerate and just treatment which they receive of the officers of the Royal Navy serving in the trading marine, yet, nevertheless, there still lingers a feeling of distrust, a want of confidence, respecting the former service (originating in prejudice or inexperience) which deters the mariner from entering it, and too frequently the kindness and solicitude with which he is treated by the Naval Officer is attributed to the want of power, and that, once again officiating under the pendant*, he resumes that undue severity of discipline which he falsely has the credit of putting in practice when supported by the "Articles of War." Hence these unfounded impressions ought, as before said, be removed, and is at least one authentic fact, productive of more evil than possibly contemplated.

* In one trading vessel which the author commanded, his Chief Mate was an officer of 20 years' standing in the Royal Navy, and the second had been five years a Midshipman; when the ship was paid off, the men would remain for months out of employ in order to sail with these officers again, so impressed were they with their justice and kindness. Yet when the chief officer joined H.M.S. Britannia at Portsmouth, he could not get one to follow him.

Again we must fully bear in mind, while perusing these facts relative to the position and state of our trading mariners, that they are not thus openly disclosed in order to render them discontented, or diffuse restlessness; if, indeed, they slumbered over their oppressions and were ignorant of their wrongs, it might then, uncharitably, be considered so. But they are as sensitive and as keen in observation, as they are bold and enduring in their habits, and they know, feel, and suffer, more, age, even tenfold, greater injustice than (from due motives of anxious zeal) are not at present herein enumerated.

Yet, notwithstanding, should no exertion be made, no rights conceded, to the trading mariner, a portion of these pages will, at least, remunerate the ardent desire of doing good by which they are dictated, and tend to accomplish (whatever opposition may be offered to their tenour) the great and important end of undeceiving the mariner in his unfounded opinions of the Royal Navy, and promulgate a few of the benefits attendant on that exalted service.

But should, happily, the legislature of the country give attention to the truths herein expressed, and entertain the expediencies humbly offered, we will then find the mariner, like the noble emblem of the British nautical empire, crouched at the side of his sovereign, prepared and willing to achieve, vanquish, "and conquer again and again."

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

H.M.'S SERVICE IN INDIA. No. 15.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Here then, Sir, out of twenty-six situations (reckoning the general commands), twenty-three are held by Field Officers of H.M.S., who, in addition to all their other great advantages, have all these offices conferred upon them; and, although many of the officers of H.M.'s service now in India are distinguished for their knowledge of the languages, Persian, Hindoostanee, and Mahratta, &c., will it be credited that not one single situation above mentioned is held by such officers? Your Correspondent, who subscribes himself of "the last century," seems to have outlived his wits. He strings together a long list of flippant nonsense about "dead camels," "Lieut. Fitzgerald," and other animals, which is all pure fiction as far as I am concerned, as no such topics can be found in my letters. When he has settled the grounds on which he objects to her Majesty's officers being employed in staff offices, I am prepared to answer him. First D. and others declared H.M.'s officers had their "full share," and induced you, Sir, to publish this most unfounded statement. Then it was that they had all that belonged to their own service, which is sheer nonsense; and now, if I mistake not, this worthy asserts they (H.M.'s officers) are incapable, because they have always served with European troops, and therefore cannot know the natives. This assertion, I affirm, is unfounded, and that there are officers in H.M.'s service in India as capable of holding any staff appointment in the country as any Company's officer in it. But I shall leave this unfounded assertion to be answered by the officers of the Hon. Company's Artillery, Engineers, and European regiments, who are more particularly concerned in it, as they have on all occasions fully equalled, if not excelled, the officers of native corps, although they have no more opportunity of knowing the natives than H.M.'s officers. A Company's officer, in addition to the high rewards he has to look to for remaining in the service, and which Sir Thomas Munro so highly approves of, has the chance of one out of every four being on the staff at present, while H.M.'s officers (Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns) have a chance of one out of every three hundred and fifty being on the staff at present, and no hope of reward hereafter for their Indian service of twenty years, as that generally ends in being incapable of serving in any other climate; and they are then forced to sell out, or go on half-pay, worn down with disease and poverty. Am I then wrong in stating that H.M.'s service in India is the most degraded in the world, and that none but fools, or madmen, will any longer accept employment in it? As to your correspondent's paltry threat about the Judge Advocate, I value it not more than I do his flimsy statements; but it may as well not be repeated, or he may become acquainted with even more disagreeable persons than a Judge Advocate. The officers of the British Army, for whose information these letters have been written, shall no longer be kidnapped (as they literally were ten years ago) into a service replete with everything that is unjust, slavish, and self-debasing, and calculated to destroy both mind and body.

Why have the Hon. Company the power of employing all "adventurers" who go to India in lucrative offices of trust, and yet excluding H.M.'s officers? From the battle of Plassey to the present hour, in every war in which the supremacy or stability of the British power has been endangered, H.M.'s forces have secured the victory. And is it thus, then, they are repaid, by withholding from them all the advantages their matchless valour has gained? The pay of the Second Lieutenant-Colonels in India amounts to (30,000*l.*) thirty thousand pounds annually, which sum would enable the Indian Government to do much that honour and justice calls on them to do. But no! this would interfere with the home patronage, and hence honour and justice are forgotten. If the senior officers of H.M.'s service, who were examined before the Committee of Parliament had spoken out truly and independently, could this vile system have still existed? And is it possible that gentlemen of their rank had any future prospects—as commands at Madras and other places—hold out to them, which could tempt them to forget what was due to their own character, and the interests of those by whom their fortunes have been made? Your correspondent, he "of the last century," talks of a Committee, composed of Subalterns, inquiring into the expenses of Subalterns, by orders of the Supreme Government! I never did accuse that Government of any such foolery, and therefore leave them to answer this foolish supposition. I have also given my authority (Captain Simmons, R. A. on Courts-Martial) for my observation on the relative rank of Queen's and Company's officers, and therefore beg your sagacious correspondent will address his next objections to that talented officer. Who can read the details I have given, and doubt for a moment the reason this iniquitous system has been permitted to remain so long a foul blot on the justice of this country? All remonstrances must go through seniors in the British Army, and they having all they can possibly wish for, is it human nature to expect they would exert themselves for a change? I should rather ask if they might not be suspected of wishing to cloak the present atrocious and galling regulations connected with this much-degraded service? If H.M.'s officers are permitted to serve in Persia, by what right do the Indian Governments exclude them from offices in other countries of the East—Afghanistan, Cabul, Candahar, &c.—which are as independent of them as China or Japan are? When a Commander-in-Chief, and also one of the highest salaried officers of the Hon. Company, both made lately the strongest applications for the services of one of H.M.'s officers out of the territories of the Hon. Company, the application was refused by the Government under which both these high authorities and the Queen's officer served!! Is there then anything wanting to complete the measure of degradation?

London, Mar., 1839. ONE OF 1200 H.M.'s OFFICERS.

P.S. By "Horse Guards Appointments" I mean such as are given to favourites sent from home, and who would never have been in India only for the sake of these situations; thus excluding from all hope of "staff employ" the 1336 officers of H.M.'s regiments who must go and serve in that vile country. So that the degradation and injustice of the present system comes equally from the Home and Indian Governments, and affects all, even the Field Officers, as far as staff situations are concerned.

THE BAYONET, AND ARMING OF INFANTRY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Some weeks since, your correspondent Miles accused me of proposing to substitute pikes and pitchforks, and I know not what beside, for Infantry muskets. Had I suggested any such nonsense, you would very properly have considered me a maniac, and have put my communication in the fire. Wherever the musket and bayonet can be combined with the Cavalry sabre, they are undoubtedly the best of weapons. Unhappily this is not always possible; and so long as Cavalry cannot ride up ladders, gallop over breaches, nor leap into second-floor windows, I cannot but think that Infantry ought to be qualified to close instantly, where the slightest hesitation to close must occasion inevitable defeat.

My axioms are simply those which follow. If Miles, by disproving them, will undeceive me and many others who now hold them undoubtingly, he may confer on the service no small benefit. If, on the contrary, he admits their accuracy, I rely on his aid to obtain the improvements which seem necessary to prevent disastrous results.

Firstly, no Infantry regiment can be certain that it may not be called out, like the 45th last year, without the aid of either Cavalry or Artillery, to quell revolt.

No Infantry regiment unacquainted with the bayonet exercise can, if so called out, force a church, or any other fire-proof building, or court-yard, held by men who, possessing prudence enough to screen themselves from fire by stooping down, are provided, in addition to fire-arms, with pikes long enough to reach over the Infantry bayonet.

Repulse under such circumstances might prove most mischievous. The repulse at Bunker's Hill gave rise to the American revolt. Had the Infantry employed there been trained to fence with the bayonet, they could at the utmost have sustained only one volley before dashing over the breastwork, which, although ball-proof, was but four feet high; and therefore, when the charge was actually made, after sixty rounds of cartridge had been wasted, opposed no effective obstacle to the onslaught.

Secondly, no Infantry regiment called out suddenly can be sure that it may not be closed upon. Col. Thompson was a most experienced officer; yet we all know that, out of the 650 soldiers, with whom he confronted 800 Arab swordsmen at Beni Boo Ali, barely the odd fifty returned alive. To enlarge on Lord Lake's defeat at Castlebar, the destruction of Col. Foote at Oulard, of Lord Mountjoy at New Ross, of Lord O'Neil at Antrim, or of Col. Walpole at Gorey, or of Col. Puleston at Bally Ellis," were absurd. The blunder of a Subaltern, the stupidity of a Serjeant, the perjury of a Private, may expose a corps to this danger. All of us have seen well-commanded corps mismanœuvred by accident, even on parade. The slightest inaccuracy may encourage insurgents to charge home before order can be restored; yet, once closed upon, it is not denied that Infantry yet possess no power of defence at all. Why should they thus remain incompetent, when by a dozen drills, they might, even unloaded, or wholly destitute of ammunition, defy pikes? For let it be recollected that the acquisition of the bayonet exercise in no degree diminishes the weight, the accuracy, or the amount of fire.

Thirdly. Infantry are liable, in disturbed districts, to be distributed by sections for defence of manufactories. Now, I believe it is admitted that, if the rioters can get possession of a dust-cart, with a mattress nailed to its bottom, they may always, under its cover, force the door, or sap the angle of the building, without sustaining a shot. But if the defenders are trained to fence with the bayonet, the task of the assailants is now only about to begin. If taught only to fire, they will be overwhelmed by numbers before they can reload; but a bayoneteer may lunge out ten or twelve times a minute with force irresistible, parrying at the same time his opponent's answering strokes. One stern soldier, darting his weapon like a lance, and prepared to dash the butt in the teeth of any man who, although mortally wounded, may yet in the death agony attempt to close, might hold a door-way or a passage, or a window, against one or one thousand assailants, whose mere weight would weigh down any depth of Infantry standing like statues, with muskets and bayonets at the charge.

Fourthly. Infantry are liable to be called on in small parties to preserve peace, against men evidently mischievous, but not attempting actual attack. How are they to behave? Suppose them deployed across the street. They must not fire without strong cause; but they cannot prevent the mob approaching their line, and if the mob approaching that line as friends suddenly dash on it, the men are liable to be borne down, broken and destroyed, before they can offer the slightest resistance. We have seen this at Merthyr and other places; and it cannot be helped so long as the bayonet projects only three feet eight from the fore-arm, and presents no guard, whilst the sword or bludgeon reaches five feet six, and protects the wielder. The bayonet exercise reverses these circumstances, and enables the soldier to strike well at five feet six.

For escalades, I certainly do think the storming party should exchange their fusils for swords. So thought the great Frederick, and the greater Suwarrow. This exigency might be provided against, by causing the Serjeants, and Drummers, and Pioneers, to exchange their hangers and bill-hooks for Sappers' falchions, which might easily be unbuckled and given to the Grenadiers told off for the onslaught. The bayonet might perhaps be retained to fix in the turf-work as a step to scramble up by, like a sailor's tomahawk in boarding. Suwarrow sometimes did this. The present swords of the Serjeants and Drummers are a positive nuisance, serving only to rap against the calf, or get between the legs at double quick. I think, though, that the falchion should be mounted à la Turque, not à la Française. The French spoil everything, and their infamous brass handles spoil the cleaving powers of this slashing tool.

I confess, also, that I consider a national regiment 700 strong, composed of any one of the races resident in Great Britain, armed with Serjeants' fusils, patent bayonets, and canana belts containing forty rounds of ball cartridge made to fit, a match for a thousand mixed recruits, encumbered with Line Infantry muskets, entangled by pipe-clayed cross-belts, and restrained by stiff stocks and stupid bear-skin caps from developing their power. If these opinions are deemed heretical, I must bear the brunt, yet remain, &c.

ARTHUR.

THE STORM AND CAPTURE OF ADEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It is natural for those who think themselves aggrieved to make their complaint where they expect to meet with sympathy, and to apply for relief where they hope to find the inclination, as well as the power, to do them justice.

A reference to your Paper, a few numbers back, giving an account of the taking of Aden, on the coast of Arabia, by a detachment of the Hon. Company's troops from Bombay, and a squadron under command of Capt. Smith, R.N., will show you that those troops behaved in such a way as to call for the commendation of every well-wisher of British superiority. They are now undergoing considerable privation, being pent up in a garrison (any wanderer from the garrison being immediately mercilessly murdered by the Arabs), and decimated from want of water, salt provisions, and burning heat.

Her most gracious Majesty has marked her approbation of the officers of her Navy employed, by granting them an additional step in rank, and I feel convinced that the situation of the officers of the E.I.S. above employed only requires to be be fully known to our most gracious Sovereign, to find her as ready to cherish as to sympathise with and confer some mark of her royal regard on them also for their services, which could only be equalled by those of her Navy, who have so justly merited her approbation; and it is the hope of finding in you (from the spirit of justice that marks your Journal) a protector and guardian of the rights of our service, that leads me to trouble you with the dispassionate state of the case set forth, and this statement I beg leave to lay before you with unlimited confidence in your candour and love of justice.

Major Bailie, who commanded this expedition, is an old officer who has never been home since he joined the service, and was actively engaged, and with credit to himself, during the Mahratta war, and in the present instance has proved himself well deserving the praise acquired on former occasions. Major Osborne (Commanding Officer of the gallant Bombay European regiment, who have so frequently distinguished themselves at Seringapatam, Kirkee, Beni Boo Ali, as their colours attest) is well known as a distinguished officer, and one who has seen much service. Captain Morris (commanding 24th regiment Bombay N.I.) is also, although a younger officer, a highly deserving officer, and I believe I am correct in stating was present at the taking of Kittore in 1825; and to the orders of Major Bailie I confidently refer for his conduct in the present expedition.

As I am merely desirous of bringing to your notice those who were prominent from command in this expedition, I shall not enumerate further. Major Bailie, in his congratulatory orders, has not only proved that all employed behaved well and obtained his approval, but that not one instance of irregularity or complaint had come to his notice. I should, however, feel wanting in duty did I not comment on the conduct [of Lieut. Daniel, Indian Navy. Let the words of your correspondent speak:—"On this was the lower battery, mounting five guns, and inside of this the little schooner Mahe, commanded by Lieut. Daniels, took up her second position, and drove the remainder of the Arabs out of the lower battery. Her conduct was the admiration of both Navy and Army." Both Army and Navy have ever had two incentives to do duty—honour and reward; and whilst it has been the happiness of the Company's troops employed to merit the first, I can have little fear that you will not assist them in obtaining the last.

A Company's Officer.

[The details we have already published of the taking of Aden, sufficiently prove the claim of the Company's officers; and we will hope that Sir John Hobhouse, who is justly considered a warm friend of the Army, will not allow good service to pass without due reward.—Ed.]

AVA PRIZE MONEY.

Sir,—Although the subject of the Ava prize money is now almost as threadbare as the elbows of the unfortunate claimants, may I once more crave a brief space in your valuable columns, which have so often been open to the statement of real grievances wherever they exist? It is now several months since a question was asked in the House of Commons by Mr. Hume as to the cause of the non-payment of the Ava prize money, and to which the President of the Board of Control is reported to have replied,—"He was sorry to say, that although that order [for its immediate distribution] was sent out in 1831, yet no answer had arrived when he first became President of the Board of Control in 1835; the consequence of which was, that in 1835 a despatch was sent out by himself, asking what was the cause of the delay. A fresh order was sent out in 1836, but all that the Board of Control had heard was, that the Bengal Government had ordered the distribution of the prize money to the parties interested, and who resided in India, and they promised to send a statement of the names of the parties interested who resided in England. In 1837 the Board of Control sent out another despatch, requesting to know the cause of the delay which had occurred ever since that order; but he regretted to say, that to that despatch the Board had not received any reply whatever."—Although Sir John Hobhouse has clearly shown by the above statement that the unreasonable period of delay, from 1831 (when the first instructions were sent out) to the middle of 1839, is in no way imputable to the Government at home, is it not "too bad" that the authorities in India should be allowed to perpetrate so gross an act of injustice to the claimants at home, as well as in various other parts of the world?

RANK AND PAY OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Sir,—My attention has been called to a crude plan for classifying and improving the rank and pay of Naval officers published in your excellent paper of 25th May, pages 329 and 330, and at which I was at once surprised and disgusted. I hope our friend Tristram will take up this subject, who is much more able than I am to do justice to it. The Navy wants nothing but what it is fairly entitled to, viz., the officers thereof to have equal privileges and equal immunities with their equals in rank in the Army. Any officer of the Navy who will so far forget himself as to figure off in the public press, and demand less, evinces a disposition to compromise the undoubted claims of the Navy, and deserves never again to tread the quarter-deck of a ship of war.

Where was the presumption of your correspondent leading him to when he took upon himself to classify and pay his superior officers in the way he has done? Where his knowledge—sense of justice—and esprit de corps, to proclaim the comparative worthlessness of his corps by placing a Commander on the half-pay of 9*s.* per day, when the junior Major in the Army has never less than 10*s.* 6*d.*? Where was his mind when his pen inscribed the figure 5 in 5*s.* per day for the Naval Lieutenant, when every Captain of the Army has 7*s.*? And where his memory when he forgot to claim the Brevet rank for his brother Lieutenant after a specific period of service, which is given to the Captain of the Army after 20 years' service in that grade?

The Naval Lieutenant, be it recollected, is forced upon half-pay when his ship is paid off: this frequently occurs for necessary repairs, &c.; nor has he the option of continuing to serve. He goes on shore with no Military distinction of rank; known merely as Mr. ———, the title he set out with, and is held prepared for another appointment at a day's notice, which he probably never gets; and however good his expectations might have been, from anxious zeal and indefatigable efforts; however distinguished he might have been as an officer; and however willing and desirous of again serving, hundreds of men of this description have failed in their applications for employment, and been consigned to the Half-pay List with no well-understood Military distinction to mark their career; left to pine on 2*s.* per day half-pay less than a Captain of the Army, and with little or no prospect of dying anything but a plain Mr. ———, with R.N. appended thereunto, and may be, forsooth, for what hundreds of persons know to the contrary, Mr. ——, the cook or boatswain.

A Naval Commander.

NAVAL SERVICES—VICE-ADMIRAL HONYMAN

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Being a very constant reader of your valuable paper, which has deservedly a more extensive circulation than any other publication connected with the united service, and as I have latterly seen so many names of gallant officers flourishing at the head of their respective eminent services, showing their friends how they distinguished themselves during our longest, most glorious, and arduously contested war; it has very often astonished me, (while musing at my quiet fire-side, in which the sad inactivity of half-pay in these piping times of peace leaves us but too much time to indulge in) that the services of a much respected and meritorious officer (whom I had the honour of being under, although for a brief space, yet long enough to feel that regard for him which seems indeed general in all who had the pleasure of either knowing or sailing under him), have not made their appearance in any one of the numerous publications of the day. I allude to the distinguished services of the now Vice-Admiral Robert Honyman, whose name, connected with devoted and faithful service to his country, will not yield in lustre when compared with any, even of his; long professional standing, in those days when England had to contend single-handed against the whole of Europe, and when the greatest man of the age put forth his whole strength to crush his last and only opponent to universal dominion.

The services of Admiral Honyman, so far as my very limited opportunities enable me to ascertain, are as follows: I think he entered the Navy in 1782; he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant in 1790, and served in this rank on board the St. George, in Admiral Hotham's action, 1795, when he was severely wounded. He was made a Commander in 1796, and appointed to the Tisiphone sloop,—her force of guns or men I do not know—but in her he captured two privateers of 14 guns each, as appears by the Gazettes of that day, viz. 25th July and 19th Sept., 1797; he received his post rank the following year, and the command of the Doudrecht; in her he served in the expedition to Holland: he was removed to the Garland corvette in 1800, and placed in command of a small squadron off the Isle of Bas, which he retained until 1801, when he was appointed to the Topaz frigate, under orders for or then in the West Indies. While in command of this ship, and cruising close in shore off Vera Cruz, he found himself one morning at daylight surrounded by a Spanish squadron, consisting of five sail of the line and three frigates, through which he was obliged to pass within half musket-shot, and, after having been briskly chased for twelve hours, succeeded in saving his ship; during this long and anxious chase Captain Honyman repeatedly endeavoured to bring the headmost frigate to action, but on perceiving his intention, she always waited for her consorts to come up: this escape was effected with so much judgment and tact, that Admiral Montagu, then in command of the station, expressed his admiration of the very judicious management and good conduct of the Captain, officers and ship's company, making a strong report expressive of such to the Admiralty. He was appointed to the Leda frigate in 1802, and served two years on the arduous and harassing duties off Boulogne, when he, alternately with that very distinguished and deservedly noticed officer, Sir Edward Owen, commanded the Blockading Squadron. While on this service, he had twenty-five actions with the enemy's flotillas, under the protection of their batteries, during which his ship frequently suffered much, and on one occasion was struck with a 13-inch shell which exploded in her hold. In these affairs a vast number of the enemy's gun-boats, &c., were destroyed, and among the prisoners captured was a Dutch Commodore, with a great part of his flotilla. It is believed that many of these engagements took place under the immediate view of the French Emperor. After this service, the Leda was employed at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope, Monte Video, and Copenhagen, and he received public thanks from Sir Home Popham for his active exertions when attached to his squadron. Captain Honyman afterwards commanded the Ardent three successive seasons in the Baltic, where his services were again flatteringly noticed by the late Lord de Saumarez, the Commander-in-Chief. After this he commanded the Sceptre and Marlborough on the coast of North America, and was put on half-pay at the conclusion of the war, having served almost uninterruptedly afloat a period of 32 years. He then held, for a short time, the situation of Pay-Captain at Portsmouth, until the reduction of the Navy rendered that appointment no longer necessary.

Admiral Honyman, in addition to his wound received in a general action, seems to have been noticed in the Gazette for his distinguished services at least six times; viz., 25th July and 19th Sept., 1797; the 29th Sept., 1803; 29th April, 1805; 10th July, 1806; and 4th Dec., 1807. These are proud and faithful witnesses, which deserve to be recorded, and which I think few of his compeers have more justly earned. Should you conceive the above short sketch of the services of an excellent and much respected officer worthy of a place in your pages, pray insert them, and believe me, with sincere esteem for your manly, candid, and impartial paper,

An Old Officer of the War.

GUNNERY PRACTICE.

Sir,—As your Gazette of 25th of May directs attention to the subject of gunnery, may I may be permitted to make a remark upon the comparative ranges of small and large projectiles?

Shot of various dimensions, but of like specific gravity, would range to distances proportional to their diameters, if their initial velocities be equal: their flights impeded only by the air's resistance, and not disturbed by the action of gravity. By such hypothesis, a shot of four inches diameter, projected with a given velocity, would range four times the distance of a shot of one inch diameter, projected with a like velocity.

It appears from an application of Hutton's theorems, Tracts, vol iii., pp. 251, 252, that a ball weighing 9lbs., diameter 4 inches, and a ball weighing 9·64ths of a pound =2½oz., diameter 1 inch, pass through respectively the spaces of 3334·4 feet and 833·6 feet before the velocity of each is reduced from 1780 feet to 600 feet per second, and that the time required for such abatement of velocity is, in the 4-inch ball, 3·49 seconds, and in the 1-inch ball ·873 seconds. The inference is, that the larger ball passes through a space 4 times greater than the smaller before its velocity is reduced to that of the smaller, but in the interval of 3·49 seconds it will have descended about 195 feet, and the 1-inch ball in the interval of ·873 seconds will have descended 12·2 feet. If, therefore, the 4-inch gun be at a station 195 feet, and the 1-inch gun at a station 12·2 feet, above the plane upon which the ranges are measured, it may be presumed that their respective balls, discharged horizontally, would graze the plain below with like velocities, but at ranges 3334·4 and 833·6 feet, being as their times of flight, and as their diameters, 4:1. And generally, if they are mounted so high above the plane that their respective balls should lose all horizontal celerity before they graze the plane below, their ranges would be as their diameters, 4:1.

Balls propelled with equal velocities into timber, earth, or any non-elastic substance of uniform texture, penetrate to depths proportional to their diameters; consequently, if the 1-inch ball penetrate 5 inches, the 4-inch ball will penetrate 20 inches. The reason that large balls do not maintain a like superiority over small balls in projections through air, should be ascribed to accelerated descent, which throughout a ball's flight is always equal to 16 feet, multiplied into the square of the time that may elapse from the moment the ball quitted the piece, deducting the retardation of descent due to the air's resistance. A one-pound ball, projected with a velocity of 1,200 feet per second, will penetrate 15 inches deep into sound elm, and the time of penetration is computed to be ·00208 seconds; as the corresponding descent of a ball to so small a portion of time need not be appreciated, the action of gravity in such a case may be considered suspended. A reduction of windage will lessen the expenditure of powder, and contribute much to accuracy of practice; but I am inclined to think that we must not expect to attain ranges sensibly greater than those already produced by large charges of powder.

An Advocati for Peace.

[The above theorem is all very good, but we cannot see in what manner it applies to our remarks of 25th May. The larger calibre should, of course, produce the greatest range, but in practice there is little difference between the eighteens and thirty-two pounders; and the cause of this deviation from the axiom has been published for the first time, as we believe, by Captain Simmons.—Ed.]

Some of our correspondents are, we conceive, rather querulous respecting a note in our last having reference to the United Service Institution, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Officers. We stated that our suggestions in a former number agreed with an opinion of our excellent monthly contemporary, and we quoted a paragraph in support thereof. This paragraph had reference only to the miscalculations on which the rules of the Institution were based, and the absolute necessity of having the calculations approved by an Actuary. The Directors have adopted our suggestion: an entirely new code of rules will be formed, and an Actuary consulted. Such being the case, we can but augur well for the Institution, and the Directors may be assured of any assistance in our power. But the correspondents to whom we have referred, fancy our note to be an approval of the article in the United Service Journal. This is not the fact. We wrote on the eve of our publication, almost before the United Service Journal was in the hands of the public, when we had only skimmed generally over its contents, and referred to its concluding passage on the Widows' and Orphans' Institution. We are warm admirers of the United Service Journal, but with the arguments in the article in question we differ toto cœlo. We have not time this week to complete the calculations which are necessary in support of our opinions: they shall be given in our next.

We cannot this week attend to the Staff Assistant-Surgeon, who, though an apt disciple of "Grose," has but little acquaintance with "Lindley Murray."—" A Civilian" shall have attention.

In reply to " An East Indian," we beg to inform him that the subject was referred to a committee who were to determine on ulterior proceedings, but that the Government and the East India Company are averse to an association with any commercial body in the management of the steam communications. The Joint Stock Company formed for this object was not successful in raising the necessary funds, and is, consequently, inactive. The East India Directors are silently, but effectively carrying forward the object, by providing the best description of steam vessels for the service, one of which floats now on the Thames; two others are in a state of forwardness; and four more are ordered to be laid down. The public withhold from the ruling bodies the just meed which belongs to their conduct in this affair; they have been the working party, whilst the other has contented itself with declarations

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1839.

It is again most gratifying to us that we are the channel of presenting another hundred pounds from our gallant and esteemed friend, Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin, to the Royal Naval School. The letter which we subjoin from this noble veteran and excellent sample of the old British sailor will warm the heart of many a British tar; and we earnestly pray that the Peers and rich Commoners of the land may not be unmindful of the appeal. This is the third hundred pounds we have received from Sir Isaac Coffin for the same patriotic purpose.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Cheltenham, 6th June, 1839.

I have been some time fitting for foreign service, or, as a landsman would say, terra incognita, and remain ready to trip my anchor at a moment's notice.

The late festival meeting has revived my hopes that our Naval School will also meet with encouragement, from noblemen and gentlemen who cannot fail to remember what the Navy have done to protect them from invasion, plunder, and devastation.

With such names as the Earl of Devon and Lord Yarborough our advocates, we may expect the host of Naval Officers who have not subscribed will come forward to a man, and make up for lost time by a very handsome subscription. It would be invidious in me, or I could mention names high up in the service and well able to contribute, who have never subscribed one shilling, sheltering themselves under the futile pretext, that such an establishment was uncalled for: to those men I would say, nemo mortalium omnibus horis sapit.

In return for the general refusal of the Dukes of the empire to support the school, I wish, the next time the country is in danger, they may all pass a winter off Brest, with a batch of them at watch and watch: then they would see and feel what we poor sailors undergo. A thousand pounds from each of the potent nobles would affect their pockets much less than my humble donation. I live in hopes they will yet follow the Duke of Bedford's example, and ponc dustum. Fearful I may suddenly slip my wind, and in the hurry of departure forget to order (my bankers, Messrs. Coutts and Co.,) 100*l.*, to be set aside as my last effort to maintain the credit of the Naval School, that always has had my fervent prayers for its success, you have herewith the necessary document. Please, when cashed, to hand the amount to my friend, Sir Edward Codrington, for and on account of the institution. I am, &c., Isaac Coffin, Admiral.

P.S.—I may now exclaim with the Greenwich pensioner—"Then put on my tarpaulin jacket, sing, fiddle, and dance to my grave."

The designs of Russia seem every day to receive fresh confirmation from the various publications issuing from the press, not merely on the current events of the times, but on events gone by. In the "Histoire de France sous Napoleon," lately put forth by M. Bignon at Paris, and cleverly reviewed in the "Foreign Monthly Review" of the present month, No. 2—some extraordinary designs of Russia are disclosed, particularly those against the power of England and the Turkish Empire. Fully thirty years ago Romanzof proposed the attack on India by a Russian army from the Caucasus, aided by 40,000 French; and we have lately had ample proof that her designs are unchanged, and that all her open and covert efforts are directed to the possession of Constantinople and the invasion of India. The only change, if any, in Russian design seems to be this: that the invasion of India has become the end—whereas formerly it seemed only the means—of seizing on Turkey. We invite our readers to peruse the whole article in the "Foreign Monthly Review" on "the Designs and Prospects of Russia in the East," although we by no means concur in the conclusion of the writer, that "a direct invasion of British India by Russia is in the highest degree improbable." The writer has himself added to our own conviction of its probability.

Our esteemed friend and superlative correspondent, Tristram, has recently enumerated the most prominent of the beneficial measures produced by the Board of Admiralty of late, and they produce a total which every unprejudiced person will admit to be highly worthy of praise. These things are continually in progress, although effected without ostentation; for there is scarce a month—or indeed a week—but that some improvement is made known, either by general memorandum or otherwise, tending to the benefit of the service. Even since the receipt of Tristram's last letter, and pending its publication, a measure of great advantage to the Marines, and one which we suggested a year or two ago, has been promulgated. We allude to the issue of duck frocks and trowsers, which are henceforth to be supplied, instead of cloth half-gaiters. The principal attention of their Lordships appears to be directed to the comfort of the men, so as to make the Naval service popular, and to apply the means at their command in the way to produce the greatest efficiency.

There are many persons who believe that our Naval effective force, greatly increased as it has been within these three years, is still on too limited a scale. As regards steamers particularly, they point to the French, whom it behoves to be prepared in this respect, seeing that they do not possess the same facilities as ourselves for the manufacture of engines—a tedious work, which requires nearly a couple of years to accomplish even in this country. We have lately made inquiries, and are now collecting some data, by which it appears that we are more forward on this point than our readers, or indeed ourselves, had imagined; and we shall shortly place before them a correct statement of the present condition of the large steamers ready, and in progress.

The means at command are very properly applied to the production of first and second class steam-vessels, which require engines of two or three hundred horses power. Smaller can always be hired in sufficient numbers to meet any sudden occasion; but the machinery requisite for such vessels as Hecate and Hecla, now in the Clyde taking their engines, cannot be procured at will; and if it were not that the continual improvements effected in the marine steam engine forbid the idea of keeping many in store, it would be a wise and provident plan to have in reserve the machinery for a number of large steamers; for the vessels, themselves, could be converted, or indeed built, in less than a quarter of the time necessarily expended on the engines.

Many correspondents are anxious to know what may be anticipated from the Report of the Committee, every class expecting some peculiar advantage to themselves. On this point we can give them no satisfaction; but we concur with those who observe, that there seems on the part of officers a greater disposition to "growl," than to afford the distinguished members of that Committee any information that might assist their labours. Whatever changes may have been produced in the character of the present officers over the old, by superior facilities of study, and of cultivating their talents, they yield not a jot to their predecessors in the quality of "growling;" and if they have not greater cause, they must be admitted to do their best to maintain their reputation in this respect. Growling has been considered the "safety-valve" of the discontented, and such, no doubt, it will continue to the end of the chapter; and the First Lord of the Admiralty who attempts the task of pleasing everybody, will speedily find himself—we speak it with reverence—in the condition of the old man and his ass in the fable.

We are always happy to have it in our power to meet the wishes of our correspondents, by answering questions connected with United Service, though occasionally they subject us to a great deal of trouble. The inquiry put forth in the following letter is one of general interest to our excellent friends the Non-commissioned Officers of the Army; and, therefore, we have additional gratification in meeting it satisfactorily:—

R—— Barracks, Dublin, June 1, 1839.

Sir,—The Serjeants of the regiment to which I have the honour to belong have always taken into their mess your paper (the N. & M. G.), in consequence of which they wish the point in question to be referred and decided by you. About ten days since, at a meeting of the whole of the Serjeants, it so happened that the Serjeant-Major was absent on duty, and the Quartermaster-Serjeant was sick; we, as a matter of course, had to invite some Serjeants of another corps to our mess, who had been very kind to us on a former occasion. A dispute arose about who should preside;—the senior Colour-Serjeant, of very long standing, claimed the Presidency; one of the Staff Serjeants, not more than five years in the service, claimed it also, which created a great deal of murmuring. The affair was submitted to our Adjutant, from him to the Commanding Officer, who dismissed the case without giving either party any satisfaction; if you will be kind enough to decide who in this case should have presided, you will confer a great favour on the Serjeants of the regiment generally. The Colour-Serjeant has more pay, and wears a distinguishing badge. The Staff-Serjeant is allowed a room in barracks, and fuel. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant, J. M., A Constant Subscriber.

P.S.—By giving this early publicity in your paper, you will give general satisfaction, as your decision will be considered final.

In the absence of the Serjeant-Major and the Quartermaster-Serjeant, the senior Colour-Serjeant takes precedence of every other Non-commissioned Officer in the regiment; also of all Garrison or District Staff-Serjeants, or any other Staff-Serjeant whatever.

It was a very unwarrantable and unbecoming assumption of superiority on the part of the Staff-Serjeant, and especially considering he had been only five years in the service, to desire to take precedence of the old Colour-Serjeant, whom he ought to have regarded with some degree of deference at least. His conduct on the occasion showed a great want of proper feeling; and in this light we have no doubt the Commanding Officer views it.—A Colour-Serjeant in the Infantry takes exactly the same regimental rank and precedence as a troop Serjeant-Major in the Cavalry, of whom it is laid down in the King's Regulations and Orders for the Army, dated 1st June, 1837, page 170, as follows:—

"The Troop Serjeant-Majors are, in all respects, on the same footing as the other Serjeants of the regiment, of whom, however, they take precedence."

"Colour-Serjeants of Infantry.

"With a view of extending encouragement and advantage to the Non-commissioned Officers of the Infantry, corresponding to the benefit which the appointments of Troop Serjeant-Majors offer in the Cavalry, His Majesty has been most graciously pleased to direct, that, in regiments of Infantry, the pay of one Serjeant in each company shall be two shillings and four-pence per day, and that the said Serjeants shall be distinguished by an honourable badge."

At page 172, it is stated of the Serjeant-Armourer that "his pay, clothing, and all other appointments, are to be the same as those of other Serjeants." If it had ever been intended that a Staff-Serjeant should take precedence of a Colour Serjeant, it would have been distinctly stated so. A Staff-Serjeant takes rank with the other ordinary Serjeants, according to the date of his appointment.

We have observed with great satisfaction, that the grievances of the soldiers of Her Majesty's and the Company's Army have been discussed in India as well as in this country. In the Madras Advertiser, lately received, there is a very clear statement of the unjust deductions made from a soldier's pay in India, by issue of it, not in English currency, but in rupees. For instance, the soldier of Her Majesty is entitled by Royal Warrant to 5*s.* per diem, but the rupee is issued at 2*s.* 6*d.*, while in the market it will seldom fetch even 2*s.*, thereby causing to the soldier the loss of 6*d.* in every half-crown. In the Company's Artillery and Infantry the case is nearly similar. In this country the Company's Artillery, for instance, receive 1*s.* 4½*d.* per diem—but by being paid in rupees, often worth only 1*s.* 10½*d.* each, the Company's soldier receives half a rupee daily—thus causing him a loss of 11*d.* each, i. e. in every two days of his pay 11*d.*, and ½*d.* daily! This is monstrous! The officers are housed in a similar manner.

In the John Bull of Sunday last we noticed some sensible remarks on the increasing number of military murders. Three cases within a very short time have occurred—and another, at Woolwich, has just taken place. The conviction must be removed from the minds of the soldiers that capital punishment will not be inflicted, else the whole of our system of discipline must fall to the ground. Indeed, we shall soon find that non-commissioned officers will not enforce orders unless their authority be properly supported, and their persons protected by the laws of their country from the murderer. The blood of many is now crying aloud to Heaven.

In reference to this subject, we have received a copy of the Resolutions which have been entered into by the Non-commissioned Officers and Men of the Royal Artillery at Woolwich, on occasion of the murder of Serjeant-Major Shepherd, and which Resolutions are to be forwarded to each company of the regiment. There is also a subscription for the benefit of his Widow and Family started among the Officers, and the Master-General's name is at the head of the list. The document we annex cannot be too widely circulated: soldiers of every grade will respond to the Resolutionists.

Woolwich, 31st May, 1839.

In order to mark as strongly as possible the detestation in which the soldiers of the Royal regiment of Artillery hold the unprecedented and horrible crime committed by Gunner and Driver George Willis, the murderer of Serjeant-Major William Shepherd, of the Second Battalion Royal Artillery,—It is proposed that a general subscription be entered into for the erection of a suitable Tombstone to the memory of the deceased, and for the behoof of the Widow and Children who have been so lamentably deprived of their protector; and as this is intended to shew to the world that the soldiers of the regiment discountenance violence of every description, a contribution to the Subscription List, however small, will mark the horror that each individual feels on account of the awful circumstance which took place on Sunday morning, the 26th instant, and testify their sense of the necessity of supporting discipline.

One Staff Serjeant, one Serjeant, one Corporal, and one Bombardier of the regiment at head-quarters, with a Gunner and Driver from each battalion and corps, have been appointed a Committee to conduct the subscription.

It is hoped that every subscriber who can write his name will do so, in order that it may be preserved as an honourable record.

The following non-commissioned officers and men were appointed by the General Meeting, held at the Non-commissioned Officers' Reading Room, in the Royal Artillery Barracks, at Woolwich, on the 31st May, 1839, viz.—

Quartermaster-Serjeant Alexander Steele, 2d Batt. Rl. Art.
Serjeant Robert Hay, Royal Horse Artillery.
Corporal James Brunton, 4th Batt. Royal Artillery.
Bombardier James Walker, 7th do. do.
Gunner Peter Danford, Royal Horse Artillery.

Gunners and Drivers	Charles Alexander,	1st Batt. Rl. Art.
	John Robinson,	2d do.
	Wm. Fairbrother,	3d do.
	James Morrison,	4th do.
	Thomas Cullen,	5th do.
	Francis M'Gill,	6th do.
	Henry Kirby,	7th do.
	Robert Templeton,	8th do.
	James Broomfield,	9th do.

The above non-commissioned officers and men having met at the Second Battalion Store on the 1st of June, 1839, for the purpose of carrying out the wishes of their comrades, Quartermaster Serjeant Steele explained the object of their meeting, and acquainted them that they had the permission of the Master-General of the Ordnance, which they now respectfully submit to his Lordship the Commandant, to act upon the foregoing propositions. They unanimously appointed Serj. Robert Hay, D Troop, Rl. Horse Art., to act as Treasurer.

Gunner and Driver Charles Alexander, No. 3 Co. 1st Batt. R.A., to act as Clerk.
Corp. Jas. Brunton, No. 8 Co. 4th Batt. Rl. Art. } to act as Auditors.
Gunner P. Dunford, D. Troop, Royal Horse Art. }
Gunner & Driver W. Fairbrother, Det. 3d Bat. R.A. }

And that all correspondence connected with the duties of this subscription be addressed to

A. Steele, Quartermaster-Serjeant,
2d Batt. Royal Artillery.

Of the services of Shepherd we will give a brief note. He enlisted in the Royal Artillery in 1807, and was speedily promoted to non-commissioned officer. He held the appointment of Drill-Master of the 2d Batt. from 1813 to 1824. In the latter year he was promoted to Company's Serjeant in Major, now Lt.-Col. Gordon's company. In 1825 he went out to Halifax, N.S., and for 7 years acted as Serjeant-Major to the Royal Artillery at that station. He returned to Woolwich in 1831 with his company, and afterwards served with it in Ireland till promoted to be Serjeant-Major in 1836.

The list of books intended to be supplied to regimental libraries, which has appeared exclusively in our Gazette, is a somewhat curious one; indeed, we very much question the taste and judgment of the selection. Whilst there are twenty copies of Napier's History (two of which at least ought to be in every military library) why should there be forty of Lindley Murray's Grammar and the Life of Franklin! It really appears as if a Yankee had chosen the books. Franklin was all very well in his way, but what his life or writings, or those of any of his countrymen, contain to claim for them (and in a collection for the use of soldiers and authors, we are at a loss to imagine. Throughout the list is a strange mixture—a regular hotch-potch; many books are mere trash, some much worse, and others seem quite unfit for the class of readers for whose use they are intended. There is no want of variety certainly. Colman's Broad Grins march well with Doddridge's Works and Death-Bed Scenes, &c. Head's Pampas is hardly worth a place anywhere. Milman's Fall of Jerusalem, Moore's Lalla Rookh, &c., and other elegant poems of their class, are perfectly unobjectionable, certainly, for such of our British grenadiers as can understand their merits, but we suspect will be caviare to the majority. As a contrast to this description of literature, we have, of course, all the dry, hard, mechanical rubbish of the Useful Knowledge people; and (which shows clearly enough the clique who have had the selection) Mother Marcet's Conversations—on political economy doubtless—a most inspiring topic for warriors. We wonder we have not the lives of Joseph Hume and Poulett Thomson, written expressly for the purpose. Byron's Life and Works, by Moore, will afford rather an edifying example of moderation and discipline to the youthful and wild recruit. All these objections, however, are nothing. But in the name of all that is wonderful, wherefore are twenty copies of the Life of Henry Martyn (the regicide), famous otherwise, as far as we are aware, only for his profligacy, to be furnished to the reading classes of the British—of Her Majesty's—Army? We could pretty well guess from this circumstance at one of the individuals who has had a hand in the selection. Many well-experienced military men have doubts of the expediency of having any regimental libraries, and probably think that a regimental cricket-ground, &c. &c. would be infinitely preferable; but if such libraries are to be established, they should be well selected, and would be better chosen by military men than by the sort of persons who have evidently got together the present list.

We confess, however, that we are of those who believe the whole "National Education" scheme a humbug. Everything advanced in its favour as fact is unsubstantial, and will not bear rough handling. A late traveller in Sweden (Mr. Laing) represents that people as at present the most vicious in Europe, although all who have visited the country before him (some very recently) give them a directly opposite character. It is certain, however, that what is called "Education" has been very much diffused there of late, and if Mr. Laing's statement be correct, it is evident that the natives have not improved, but the contrary, which tells "rayther" against the schooling theory. Again, one of our bishops lately adduced the superior morality of the people of Cumberland, as an instance of the advantages of education. It is possible that the people there may be better scholars than the generality of those in other parts of the kingdom, but we are much mistaken if the circumstance of their being better fed has not a considerable share in keeping the prisons empty; and we suspect that the simple habits, the general absence of manufactories and great towns, and the manly exercises in the open air, which they still retain, have much more influence on the admitted good conduct of the hardy mountaineers of that county, than the mere A B C work of hornbooks and primers *.

* Add to this, that their clergy are less rich, pampered, and idle than in most other parts of the kingdom. If the clergy in

But it is now discovered that mere reading and writing, which was formerly to work wonders, is not enough for any class of the community. Nay, it is admitted by the educationists, that their schemes so far have done harm, but only because they have not gone far enough. All ranks and sexes are now to be equally learned; and if there is to be a difference made, the poorest and weakest are to be most crammed with knowledge, and all poor children are to be kept at school till fourteen years, when the knowledge they will have acquired will teach them it is their duty and interest to work "like niggers" all the rest of their lives. We are to have not only infant but cradle education, &c. &c. All this is gravely laid down by Mr. Simpson, the lecturer, &c., and applauded with hand and pen. But if morality is really intended to be promoted by the furtherance of such schemes (as far as their actual practice is possible) their supporters must be mad, too mad for Bedlam.

Let us ask, then, have the most highly-instructed classes in any age or country been the freest from vice? What is the character of the teachers and apostles of the present "Educational" creed? Is Simpson—is the great schoolmaster, Brougham himself, a model of moral, physical, or even intellectual perfection? How mad to talk of men, women, or children of all ranks mastering even the rudiments of all sciences! How many minds are capable even of this? The least harmful effect of such plan, if acted upon, would be to people the world with shallow and conceited Jacks of all trades. Good effects it can have none.

It is said, that Lord Brougham, whom the present Ministry dare not trust with any office in which his vagaries might (as formerly) have the effect of shaking them from their seats, is to have the superintendence of public instruction, as if that were a thing of no importance, or a fit subject for the mad experiments or the Babel schemes of Atheists, or dreamers of human perfectibility!

Whilst on this subject, we may just remark that the Examiner, a newspaper, not many years ago, notorious for its insulting and even treasonable language respecting the late King, now finds it convenient to admit that "William the Fourth had all manly feelings." This is doing justice at last certainly. In the same article from which we have taken these words, is an able exposure of the hypocrisy, meanness, adulation, and other little foibles of the once Whig-idolised Brougham. It is true enough,—but should the blow come from such hands? It is well when rogues fall out, honest men have then a chance; but we fear even the sincerest men in this party-ridden country are generally too far blinded by political cant to profit much by the dissensions amongst the knaves.

WATERLOO.

[Twenty-four years ago the battle of Waterloo was fought. The "victor of a hundred fights" still lives, rising higher—higher—higher on the highest pinnacle of fame than ever.]

A REQUIEM FOR THE LOST HEROES OF WATERLOO!

They sleep in the bosom of earth—
All their high breathing raptures are o'er;
Their proud glory, their valour, their worth,
In life's pilgrimage now [illegible] more!

They sleep—and the strife of the field,
And the clangour of arms in its rage,
With the sword, and the helmet, and shield,
Their free spirits no longer engage.

They sleep—from their father-land far—
Where they fought in stern vengeance their foes;
Where they mocked the fierce havoc of war,
There they find their last earthly repose.

They sleep the sweet sleep of the [illegible]
O'er their sod the fresh laurel [illegible]
And the cypress shall mournfully [illegible]
As the night wind sweeps over the [illegible]

They sleep—but their memory lives;
They are dead—but the voice of their fame
Through the world immortality gives,
And for ever shall hallow their name!

On Dit.—It is well known that Queen Victoria is extremely punctual. On the day preceding the ball at Buckingham Palace, Her Majesty sent to ask the young heir of the Russians, who has just left us, to ride. His Highness came a few minutes late, and the Queen was gone. He therefore started after the cortège, and found his proper position occupied by Lord Alfred Paget; the future Emperor therefore rode in the suite. At the ball the following evening, the Queen sent her Chamberlain, the Earl of Uxbridge, to the Prince, to command his attendance in the dance. His Highness answered he was engaged.—Morning Post.

The address proposed to have been presented to the Queen Dowager from the Court of Aldermen has been relinquished, Her Majesty being anxious to decline these marks of attention, which would be numerous if once the example were set by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London.

Wednesday was the birth-day of His Majesty Ernest the First, King of Hanover, heir presumptive to the throne of these realms, who completed his 68th year, having been born in 1771.

The Duchess of Kent patronises Mr. Charles Mungold's first evening concert on Monday next, at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square; and from the talents and popularity of Mr. Mangold, particularly with our friends of the Royal Artillery, we anticipate that his debut will be well attended.

The Grand Duke of Russia expended no less than 10,000*l.* in the purchase of jewellery, at Storr and Mortimer's, for presents during his short stay. Previously to his departure he presented valuable snuff-boxes to all the great officers of state, such as the Earl of Albemarle, the Lord Chamberlain, Mr. Murray, Master of the Household, &c.

A notice was given last night of a motion on the subject of vote by ballot on Tuesday week, the 18th. Mr. Grote will make the motion, and Lord Worsley will second it. The list of votes will for the first time show the extent to which the members of the Government are converts to the question of the ballot. Hitherto there may have been occasionally one or two Ministerial votes in favour of Mr. Grote's motion; but the vote this session will show how the whole of the Cabinet in the House are individually affected.

Lord Hill has issued cards for a grand entertainment to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge on the 22d inst.

The Marquess and Marchioness of Douro are expected at Apsley House on Tuesday or Wednesday next, from Strathfieldsaye; the contemplated continental tour is, we are informed, given up.

The Grand Fancy Dress Ball for the United Service Benevolent Institution (see Advertisement) should interest all Naval and Military men and their families. It will, moreover, be the most splendid ball of the season: all the officers will be in full costume, and Willis's Rooms fitted up in military style, the Master-General of the Ordnance having permitted every description of military ornament to be borrowed from the Tower for the occasion.

On Tuesday, Mr. Macaulay was elected for the city of Edinburgh. He will be a great acquisition to the House of Commons, where the memory of his brilliant speeches during the Reform Bill is still fresh.

Ludlow Election.—Final State of the Poll.—Alcock, 186; Clive, 182; Majority for Mr. Alcock, 4. This was the severest contest ever known in Ludlow. Mr. Alcock is understood to have polled not fewer than 20 bad votes, and a petition will be immediately presented against the validity of his election. All went off peaceably.

A deputation, consisting of Major-Gen. Sir J. M. Doyle, Baron Merle, and Mr. A. Byrne, had an interview with Lord Palmerston on Monday at the Foreign Office, on the subject of the civil and military claims of British subjects upon the Portuguese Government.

The Earl of Ilchester, the Lord-Lieutenant of Somersetshire, who is brother to the Marchioness of Downshire, has resigned his office. His Lordship's reason for taking this step was, it is said, the refusal of the Government to arm him with powers sufficient to repress the rebellious demonstrations of the chartists in his district. Lord Ilchester is a Whig.—Salopian Journal.

The Earl of Clarendon has resigned the embassy to Madrid.

Lady Dyer, relict of the late Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Swinnerton Dyer, Bart., was married at her seat, Ovington House, Hants, on Saturday last, to Count de Zandt, a Bavarian nobleman. The newly-married Countess is far advanced in life, and so infirm as to be lifted in and out of her carriage.

Obituary.—Lady Sudeley, wife of the Baron Sudeley, died on Wednesday, after a short illness. Lady Eleanor Lindsey, sister of the Earl of Lucan, died at Portsea recently, in her 71st year. Lord Langford died on the 3d inst., in his 43d year.

Colonel Prince, whose summary execution of four of the American "sympathisers" with the Canadian malcontents has been brought under the notice of the House of Peers by Lord Brougham, was, some few years since, a resident of Cheltenham, where he practised as an attorney under the firm of Stratford and Prince.—Worcester Herald.

On Saturday the Croydon railroad was opened to the public. The Lord Mayor, and a large party, accompanied the Directors in two trains to Croydon, where an elegant dejeune was served to the company, after which they returned to town.

On Monday morning a determined act of self-destruction was committed by Mr. James John Fraser, aged 44, late a Writer to the Signet at Edinburgh, residing at 23, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, by precipitating himself from his bed-room window on the second floor into the area below. A Coroner's Inquest sat on the body, and brought in a verdict of temporary insanity.

Cock Fighting.—On Monday the inquiry into the cock-fighting affair at Hillingdon, which had been adjourned from 20th ult., was resumed before a full bench of magistrates. The investigation occupied several hours, and the result was, that the Honble. G. C. Grantley Berkeley, M.P. for West Glocestershire, was convicted for aiding and assisting, and fined in the full penalty of 5*l.* and costs, while the informations against the Right Hon. Thos. Morton Fitzhardinge Berkeley (commonly called Earl of Berkeley), Thomas Winter (otherwise "Tom Spring"), and John Harper, were dismissed for failure of sufficient evidence; and against Mr. G. Dashwood, M.P. for Chipping Wycombe, another summons was directed to issue. A letter from Count de Salis, on whose estate the cock-fight took place, explanatory of the part he had taken in the affair, was read to the bench; and Mr. Thomas, the Secretary to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, complained strongly of the Count having first given information to the Society, and then neglected to support him in proving the charges. Mr. Berkeley also remarked strongly on the conduct of the Count, which he described had been towards (Mr. B.) "disgraceful to him as a magistrate and a gentleman;" and it being anticipated a hostile meeting would be the result, the Count was on Monday night bound down to keep the peace—himself in 1000*l.*, and two sureties of 500*l.* each. Mr. Grantley Berkeley was also taken into custody, as he was coming out of Cox's hotel, Jermyn-street, and entered into similar recognizances.

Italian Opera.—The announcement of Taglioni's first appearance, on Saturday, drew a crowd to the doors long before they were opened, and as soon as entrance was possible the pit was crammed to suffocation. Anna Bolena was the opera. Grisi, Rubini, and Lablache, played the respective characters of Anna, Percy, and Enrico. All three were excellent, and the opera went off with loud applause. Taglioni appeared in a divertissement, "the favourite ballet of La Bayadere." Her entrance was marked by enthusiastic applause, and her dancing was splendid; she has not departed an iota from her well-known excellence. Her Majesty entered her box when the first act of Anna Bolena was about half concluded, and remained till the termination of the ballet. The curtain of the box was not drawn, and she was plainly visible to the greater part of the audience.—On Thursday, Grisi's benefit night, Donizetti's new opera of Lucrece Borgia was performed for the first time, as well as Taglioni's new ballet of La Gitana, and both passed off most triumphantly.

Haymarket.—Mr. Charles Kean on Monday night made his appearance at this theatre in the character of Hamlet, being the first of a series of twelve performances which he has undertaken to fulfil previous to his intended departure for America in August next. The audience testified its delight at his return by the most enthusiastic cheering, and his general performance elicited frequent and ardent bursts of applause.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, June 3.—The Duke of Richmond, on presenting petitions for the uniform rate of postage, expressed a hope that, as the Government was about to adopt the plan, they would put in practice Mr. Rowland Hill's plan, and not that of the Committee of the House of Commons.—Lord Brougham moved the second reading of his bill for the repeal in part of the Sale of Beer Act, which called forth considerable conversation, and the support of the Duke of Wellington, as far as regarded its principle. It was eventually read a second time.

FRIDAY, June 7.—The Marquess of Londonderry inquired what steps had been taken to liquidate the claims of those officers who had been instigated to enter into the service of the Queen of Spain by Her British Majesty's Ministers.—Lord Melbourne said he had given the Noble Marquess, on a former occasion, all the information in his power, and he regretted that it was not satisfactory. The Commission to which the Noble Marquess alluded was appointed, one by the Spanish Government and the other by the committee of officers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 3.—Sir R. Inglis spoke of the alarming increase of the foreign slave trade, and inquired whether Government proposed to adopt any steps to check that traffic, which appeared to be carried on as extensively as ever.—Lord Palmerston answered, that it was the intention of the Government to propose a strong bill on the subject.—Lord J. Russell brought forward the Government plan for the future conduct of Canadian affairs, and moved resolutions declaratory of the expediency of "uniting" Upper and Lower Canada. His Lordship dwelt at considerable length on the evils that had resulted from forming them into two provinces.—After some remarks from Mr. Hume, &c., the further consideration of the subject was deferred till Monday.—The Metropolitan Police Bill and the Metropolitan Courts' Bill were severally read the second time, after much salutory discussion, and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House, instead of a select committee, as some members wished.

WEDNESDAY, June 5.—Sir Stratford Canning instituted inquiries respecting the blockade of Buenos Ayres by the French, which had now lasted 18 months; and asked whether there was any prospect of its termination?—Lord Palmerston answered that the blockade still continued; but that Her Majesty's Government had used every effort, both in Paris and at Buenos Ayres, to bring about an adjustment.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer obtained a vote of 70,000*l.*, in committee, for the erection of new stables at Windsor Castle.

THURSDAY, June 6.—Mr. O'Connell gave notice, that on Tuesday next he would move for leave to bring in a Bill to enable Roman Catholics to hold certain offices in the Ecclesiastical Courts in Ireland, and also to hold the office of Lord Chancellor.—Lord Duncannon moved (but afterwards withdrew his motion) for "A Return of any communications received by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department from the various local authorities in England and Wales, relative to the assembling together and arming of certain persons denominating themselves Chartists."—Mr. Rice obtained leave to bring in a Bill to make perpetual the Act of 1 Victoria, cap. 80, to exempt certain bills of exchange and promissory notes from the operation of the usury laws.

FRIDAY, June 7.—Mr. Grote gave notice, that on the 18th inst. he should move for leave to bring in a Bill for the purpose of taking the votes of Parliamentary electors by ballot.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—A division took place in the Chamber of Peers on Wednesday, on motion for limiting the power of the Government to appoint indefinitely Chevaliers of the Legion of Honour. The division was 54 for thus restricting the Crown, and 66 against it. This strong minority of 54 voted in opposition, notwithstanding the declaration of Soult that abuses of the kind complained of should cease.

Turkey.—The heir-apparent to the throne was to leave the harem of his mother on the 15th ult., and to assume a regular establishment of his own. This was considered at Constantinople the greatest innovation on ancient customs which the Sultan had yet attempted. The young Prince in question is called Abdul Medjid, and completed his sixteenth year on the 20th of April. The Sultan has another son living, Abdul Aziz, now in his tenth year, and four daughters.

United States.—Letters and papers have been received from New York up to 16th ult. The only political circumstance worthy of note is the publication of a correspondence between Lord Palmerston and Mr. Stevenson, in which the former proposes that no conference on the subject of the boundary line shall be held until a regular survey of the territory be made. The idea of a mission to London on the subject has, therefore, been given up.

Joseph Hume.—Few wits have ever contrived to keep the House of Commons in better humour than the member for Kilkenny's propensity to blunder enables him, from time to time, to do. On Monday, while expatiating on the virtues of the French Canadians, he exclaimed,—"I say, Sir, that they are the best and gentlest race in Europe (laughter)—ay, or in Africa" (roars).—On Tuesday Mr. Hume, while dilating on the great power of the "Liberals" throughout England, spoke of the importance of the Reformers "in this house, and out of—the country."

The German Repository in Wigmore-street may boast of having the purest eau de Cologne in England. It has been just imported from the manufactory of Jean Marie Farina at Cologne, and for strength and odour it is superior to anything of the kind we ever met with.

Literary Notices.

The Diary of the Times of George the Fourth. Vols. 3 and 4. Colburn.

Now that we have the whole of this work before us, and can look at it in a complete shape, we are allowed to express an opinion that a singular work before harshly dealt by—at least as regards its life, we may be for the general public have received and treated most much as it deserves. The latter have thankfully accepted and eagerly perused the "Diary of the Times of George the Fourth," not as a profound literary production—to which it makes no pretensions; not as a series of homilies or moral essays, aiming to make their readers wiser and better—an idea which the nature of the composition precludes: not as a solemn and sedate history, professing to record unquestioned facts, and draw permanent and important inferences therefrom. They have regarded and received it only for what it pretends to be, and what it is—a simple and unscrupulous noting down (evidently without the smallest view to after-publication) of the writer's personal feelings and opinions on the various topics, of every class and kind, which have from day to day claimed his or her attention, during a series of years passed under circumstances and in a grade of society which afforded a singularly wide scope for observation, and an equally fertile soil for the subject of it. This is what the staple of the Diary consists of; and by the quality and nature of this it ought to be judged. The adventitious features that have found their way into it; the on dits, the tittle-tattle, the personal sketches and memoranda, the scandal (if so it must be called) of the times—now by-gone ones—to which it refers;—these are but like the gay yet worthless weeds that start up amid the goodly crop of corn, flaming and flaunting for a brief space in the vulgar eye, and withering almost as soon as they bloom; of little or no value in themselves perhaps, though certainly not wholly unworthy of preservation, as a sort of hortus siccus indicating the nature of the soil whence they sprang. The "Diary of the Times of George the Fourth" may perhaps be better qualified to take a permanent place upon our book-shelves when it has been weeded of these ephemera—as doubtless it will be some day or other; but certainly it would not have been so acceptable in the first instance without them. Such is the "Diary" portion of this work. The letters—which form so interesting and attractive a feature of it—serving virtually as extracts from the Diaries of their respective writers, many of them persons of distinguished reputation in various departments of knowledge and art; these, to the best of our recollection, have never been excepted against. That the publication of such a work as this—much of it relating to historical personages, most of it to public ones, and speaking of them, in nine cases out of ten, from actual personal observation—that such a work should, in these days of mordicate craving after "useful knowledge," be treated on the one hand as worthless, and on the other as little less than criminal, is what we cannot very well understand, and what we shall certainly not participate in.

Before proceeding to notice the contents of the two new volumes, we shall fortify our opinion as to the injustice with which this work has hitherto been treated, by that of a man of distinguished literary reputation, of unimpeached personal integrity, and who assuredly had nothing to gain and much to lose by compromising the truth, and running counter to public opinion, in a case of this nature. The following are portions of the preface which the late Mr. John Gait has prefixed to the new volumes of the "Diary," &c., in his character of Editor of those volumes *:—

"'The present work ought not to have appeared for the next fifty years,' is the general remark made on this publication. Granted: but it has been so harshly and so unjustly dealt with by critics and reviewers, and they have conveyed so totally false an impression of it to all who pin their faith on the dictum of those literary autocrats, that if the book could have been consigned to the 'contempt' and 'oblivion' which they affirm to be its desert, it must have met that fate long ago; whereas the reverse is the case. * * * *

"It is a curious circumstance, that not one of the clever pamphlets and reviews which this work, so 'insignificant' and 'contemptible,' has elicited from some of the most distinguished writers of the day, has given the lie to one single fact stated in its pages. A few errors in dates, a few discrepancies of time and place (which do not impugn the authenticity of the matter), are the only [illegible] have substantiated.

* * * *

"All the vituperation [illegible] lavished on the 'Diary' has, however, served to give [illegible] a marked consequence, which leads us to consider it [illegible] both in a literary and moral point of view. * * * *

"It has been asserted [illegible] work betrays and traduces Queen Caroline. This [illegible] is decidedly false. The character of that unfortunate Princess has for the first time been drawn in these pages with [illegible] rather eulogised beyond its deserts, as some have [illegible] condemned with the injustice shown by [illegible]

"A future gen[illegible]rever, give to the 'Diary' an impartial award [illegible] undoubtedly remain a standard work for historia[illegible] to, as 'notes' to future memoirs of the time of which [illegible]

* This lamented writer died, it appears, as the very sheets of these new volumes were passing through the press.

Having said thus much from a sense of [illegible], we proceed to give an account of the new [illegible] first place we portion of the "Diary," &c. And [illegible] what have been must state most distinctly that [illegible]es of the preceding deemed the exceptionable [illegible] the present; while all volumes are wholly [illegible] occur in more profusion, and the really valuable [illegible]elected and arranged in much better the second place, the new portion of the seem to [illegible]des features which the first portion did [illegible]ss, and which greatly add to its interest and importance, no less in a historical than a literary and social point of view. To show the nature and proportion of these latter, we will describe the new volumes. The first of them (forming Vol. 3 of the work) consists entirely of a continuation of the Diary, under regular dates, but interspersed with a large variety of letters from friends of the diarist, bearing dates corresponding with those under which they appear in the Diary. Many of these letters are openly assigned to their respective writers, and others are easily traceable by their initials or other circumstances. The most amusing of the Diarist's correspondents is (as in the former volumes) Sir William Gell. Mere gossip and badinage [illegible] his letters wholly consist of, there are few better specimens extant of the true epistolary style than those which appear in these pages, from the facile pen of the above-named accomplished and amiable person. We have also letters from Sir Walter Scott, Sismondi, &c., among distinguished literati; and from the Princess of Wales, Lady Caroline Lamb, Mr. Keppel Craven, &c. &c., among the denizens of that society to which these pages chiefly refer. The diary portion of the work also contains many curious and interesting copies of those vers de société which were so fashionable at the period referred to,—some of them by individuals who have since attained the highest grades of political and literary distinction; among others, Lord Melbourne and Mr. Thomas Moore. Thus much of the "Diary," which occupies the whole 400 pages of Vol. 3, and about 50 pages of Vol. 4. The remainder of the latter consists, first, of a series of additional letters from the Princess of Wales; secondly, of several from the Princess Charlotte, which are full of interest and curiosity; thirdly, of a considerable number of additional letters from Sismondi, Monk Lewis, Sir William Gell, &c. &c.; fourthly, we have a series of "Portraits of Public Characters of the Regency and Reign of George the Fourth," many of them drawn with considerable power and skill, evidently not by the hand of the Diarist, but, as we conjecture, by that of the accomplished editor himself; and lastly, the volume and the work closes by a very useful and carefully drawn-up digest of the political events of the regency and reign of George the Fourth. This latter feature of the work, like the "Portraits" just referred to, is apparently from a more practised hand than that of the Diarist; and being arranged under separate dates, each year having its distinct summary of political events, will be found a convenient historical compendium for those who have not time or inclination for more elaborate researches.

Upon the whole, then, we have no hesitation in pronouncing these two new volumes of the "Diary," &c. to be considerably superior in value and entertainment to those which preceded them, and there can be little doubt that they will be read with at least an equal degree of interest and avidity.

Stories of Torres Vedras. By the author of "Adventures of an Irish Gentleman." 3 vols. R. Bentley.

This is a capital companion to the famous "Stories of Waterloo." Like that stirring work of fiction, the present volumes abound in incidents of British heroism, and in other details connected with the most remarkable conflicts which the world ever saw. These warlike themes are diversified by narratives of the richest humour—comic events and situations which compel laughter from the most obstinately serious reader. Dr. Millingen, author of the present work, was a medical officer on the staff of Lord Hill, and was, therefore, present during most of the struggles between the English and French in the Peninsular war. His talent as a writer is perhaps more versatile than that of any of [illegible] literary contemporaries. In the production before us, [illegible] exhibited [illegible]ches of exquisite romance—curious and dramatic, [illegible] profound developments of character, descriptions [illegible] military enterprise, which even Napier might be [illegible]own, and passages of broad farce equal either to [illegible] or Smollett. [illegible] latter, we may give a [illegible] in our next.

British Naval Biography. [illegible] Webster, and Geary.

A VERY useful manual of Naval [illegible]graphy, and so compact in form, and moderate in price, that we could scarcely select a book better adapted for the sailor's library. It comprises the lives from Howard to Codrington, and has an appendix of particulars explanatory of the rank and duties of Naval Officers and the rating of ships, with a tabular view of the progress of the British Navy, since the accession of James II. to the present period.

Desultory Thoughts and Reflections. By Lady Blessington. Longman and Co.

FROM the Countess's very charming pocket-book we shall offer a few selections. This bijou volume will be an excellent carriage companion for our fair friends.

Men and Women.—A woman's head is always influenced by her heart; but a man's heart is generally influenced by his head.

Amusing Men.—We never respect those who amuse us, however we may smile at their comic powers. A considerable distinction exists between the amusing and entertaining man;—we laugh with one, but reflect with the other.

On seeing Prince Talleyrand suffering under a severe cold.

Why looks Prince Talleyrand so cold?
Why trembles he in every part?
It is as doctors long foretold,
His body's caught cold from his heart.

Politeness.—A substitute for goodness of heart.

Courage and Virtue.—A man should never boast of his courage, nor a woman of her virtue, lest their doing so should be the cause of calling their possession of them into question.

Courage defends the honour of man; modesty guards that of a woman.

Beauty without religion is the most dangerous gift that nature can bestow on woman.

Hatred.—We injure ourselves more than our enemies, by indulging hatred towards them.

Love and Friendship.—Love is a flower with which we adorn our youth; but friendship is a fruit with which we solace maturity.

Friends.—It requires sunshine to see our friends, for they become invisible when our horizon is clouded.

Genius is the gold of the mine—education the miner who elicits it.

Love.—Love in France is a comedy; in England a tragedy; in Italy an opera seria; and in Germany a melodrame.

Storms in the heart generally make a wreck of peace.

The Romancist and Novelist's Library. Clements.

A QUARTO volume, containing no less than fifty-two works of fiction. In this extraordinary cheap collection we have reprints of some of the most popular English and American novels, besides translations from several of the best that have been produced on the continent;—and all these at an outlay less than the original price of a single volume of any of the fifty-two works. Moreover, the typography and paper are very superior to what we usually meet with in cheap publications.

Paul and Virginia. Illustrated. W. S. Orr and Co.

WE consider this edition as one of the curiosities of literature, and in pictorial embellishment as unequalled, with the exception of Dr. Wordsworth's Greece, now in course of publication. The volume is completed, and far exceeds the expectations we entertained at its commencement; in truth, it is in every respect a most charming work, suitable for all libraries. No person of taste who can afford this cheap and elegant edition would deny himself the gratification of possessing it.

Pictures of the French. Drawn by Themselves. Part I. W. S. Orr and Co.—This is a translation of a very clever periodical now in course of publishing in Paris, and the idea of which seems to have originated from the no less clever periodical, "Heads of the People." The illustrations in this part are the Parisian Lady, the Grocer, the Grisette, and the Law Student. They are admirably characteristic, and give promise of a very beautifully executed work. The sketches are evidently taken from the life, and the writers are De Balzac, Jules Janin, and E. de la Bédolliere.

Thomas's Life of Napoleon. Part I.—A cheap publication, with 500 designs by Horace Vernet, must be popular. The celebrity of the artist as a Military painter will sustain no injury by the wood-cut embellishments herein introduced;—they are extremely spirited and forcible, and, as said in the introductory address, form in themselves a history of the great events which they illustrate, and leave scarcely a passage of the stirring life of Napoleon, "from the cradle to the grave," undepicted. Of the "Life" itself, we shall be better able to form an opinion when the work is more advanced.

Sporting Review. No. VI. R. Ackermann.—This magazine has entirely superseded the Old Sporting, now a very vapid affair. Nimrod and Craven against the Field;—such racy and clever writers must ensure popularity and success to a sporting publication; and then the illustrations are of themselves fully worth the price of the number; the one before us gives a spirited picture of a Spanish Bull-fight, and a print of Pike Fishing, from a painting by N. Fielding, both in the richest style of excellence.

The Illustrated Shakspere. R. Tyas.—The second part contains "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," with notes and introductory remarks. We scarcely know which most to admire, the typography or the engravings; both are first-rate.

H.B.—More sketches from the fertile and felicitous pencil of H.B. No. 592, "The Balance of Power," exhibits the Queen holding the scales of Justice, with Lady Normanby and Lady Tavistock in one, and the Duke, Sir Robert Peel, &c., in the other. The motto for the ladies' scale is, "Private friendship;" for the Duke's, "Public service." Private friendship turns the beam, and the Duke and Sir Robert are deficient in weight. No. 593, "The Thimble Rig." Lord Melbourne holds the table and the thimbles, the Duke and Sir Robert are the disappointed gamblers, who thought they had the pea, but have lost a sovereign. Lord Morpeth, an accomplice, dressed as a country bumpkin, offering to bet a pound, and a fair lady in disguise, whose name may be guessed at by her vicinity to Lord Normanby, is giving the word to the Premier that the flats are done up. Lord John Russell and Spring Rice are also prominent among the confederates. Lord Melbourne exclaims—"Try again—one, two, or three—now the pea is not found for a sovereign." The Duke says—"Too bad, Bob, that two old soldiers like us should be done out of a sovereign in this way." To which Sir Robert replies—"I was sure I had the pea (Query P.)—I strongly suspect there is a trick in it, and that they are all accomplices." The Queen's half-face is just behind the Premier's; Baroness Lehzen is significantly whispering Lord Normanby, whilst the lady of the latter and Miss Rice, dandily dressed, are looking archly after Wellington and Peel, who are leaving the table evidently and wofully cleaned out. No. 594 is a scene from "Don Juan." Brougham the Ghost, and Melbourne the Don. "My noble friend" was never more forcibly illustrated, even by the ex-Chancellor himself. The likenesses are among H.B.'s best.

East India Intelligence.

Army of the Indus, (further details.)—Sir W. Cotton and the cavalry brigade marched from Shikarpore on 23d Feb., and the other brigades follow. The first moved on the 24th, the fourth were to move on 25th, and the second brigade to remain at Shikarpore till the Shah moves, which it is expected he will do about the 2d March. The weather is most delightful, and the troops healthy and happy. The country, up to the second march, flat; the first part near Shikarpore, pretty well cultivated, but the rest jungle, with here and there a patch of kirbee stubble. The Bolaun Pass chain of mountains looks very pretty from this stage (Janeedeera) two marches from Shikarpore. Later letters from Sir W. Cotton's camp state that a scarcity of water had been experienced at Roghan, a place three marches in advance of Shikarpore, and our cavalry had been sent on by regiments in consequence. This occurred on 26th Feb., up to which date only one well had been found there, but subsequently two more wells of good water had been discovered, and the troops which had been halted were to move on again without delay. At Janeedeera and Roghan the grass was both scarce and indifferent. The leading brigade of the Bengal column expected to reach Dadur on the 7th March. The 16th Lancers had already passed through the forest, 26 miles in extent, between Roghan and Barshoree; they started at midnight, and accomplished this unusually long march with great ease. The Shah's troops were to move on through the Gugdava Pass, instead of following the Bengal column. Rumour had it that the 31st Regt. B.N.I., would, to a certainty, be cantoned for a time at Shikarpore, and that both the 35th and 42d Regts. (Bengal) would probably be left in Upper Scinde, until the return of our troops (through the Punjaub) from Cabul in September next.—Delhi Gazette, March 13.

Shah Soojah's Force, Camp, Shikarpore, 17th Feb., 1839.—My last despatch left that part of Shah Soojah's force on its way back from Larkhana; two days ago it rejoined the head-quarters. During the halt all parties have been equally busy in drilling and exercising. The chief provisions of the treaty at Hyderabad appear to be, first, a payment of 28 lacs of rupees, 10 whereof have been delivered; and secondly, the establishment of four cantonments of British troops in Scinde, namely at Kurachee, Tatta, Hyderabad, and Sehwan. The negotiations, it is said, were considerably forwarded by the aid of the Wellesley, 74, which ship having been fired at by the battery at Kurachee, when bringing troops from Bombay, astonished the weak minds of the Scindees, and still weaker walls of the fort, by a broadside that settled both at the same time. The first week in March is confidently spoken of as the time for an advance from this place.

Army of the Scinde.—Our letters from this army are dated Luckee, 20th Feb., all well, but complaining terribly of the supplies. Sir John Keane will not, it is said, pass through Shikarpore, as was at first intended. He will push on by Larkhana to overtake the Bengal force, thus leaving Shikarpore to the right.

We regret to announce the death of Lieut. Campbell, 1st L.C. He died of fever on the evening of 19th Feb., after an illness of four days. He was much liked and respected by both men and officers.

A kind of rond has been made here over the Luckee Hills, close to the river, and [illegible] cavalry and infantry move again to-morrow to Sehwan, where we shall remain a few days to make preparations for crossing to the other side of the river, en route to Kandahar.—Bombay Times, 13th March.

The Army.—It is generally reported that but one brigade will be taken on to Cabool, and that the rest, with the exception of such details as may be necessary to garrison Bukkur and Shikarpore, will disperse to their respective presidencies: other reports say the whole will proceed as far as Ghiznee to summer, and return next season to the Indus.—Agra Ukhbar, March 9.

Lieut. Ralfe, 3d Bengal N.I., who had been placed in arrest, has been released by orders of the Provincial Commander-in-Chief.

Kurnaul.—The C. troop Horse Artillery, and two squadrons of the 13th Light Dragoons, marched from Bangalore on the 7th March: their actual destination was unknown at that station. The force at Bellary is understood to have received orders to hold itself in readiness to march at a moment's warning. Kurnaul is the point upon which these military movements are directed, the turbulent population of that petty state threatening to take the opportunity the times are supposed to afford for acts of marauding and violence.

Capt. D. L. Richardson, Inv. Est., and Professor of Literature at the Hindoo College, has been appointed A.D.C. to the Deputy-Governor, Col. Morrison. The gallant officer formerly held the appointment of A.D.C. to Lord W. Bentinck.

Accounts were received in Bombay of an interesting and important discovery, both in a geographical and commercial point of view, having been made in Scinde, viz. the existence of another branch of the Indus, affording a safe and easy navigation for large boats from where it branches on the parent stream near Tatta, to its mouth at a short distance from Kurachee.

The Comm.-in-Chief will proceed from Bombay to the hills in eight or ten days; and from the fact of having engaged a bungalow till the middle of June, will, it may be presumed, continue his abode there for some time. There exists, it seems, much difference of opinion amongst non-official persons as to the nature and extent of the functions at present exercised by his Excellency. His resignation not having been accepted, he continues as hitherto Commander-in-Chief in India, with this difference, that he no longer commands the details in the Bengal Presidency. The army of the Indus by this time is wholly removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Comm.-in-Chief in India.—Bombay Times, 13th March.

Attention having been called during the last week to the destructive famines which are at present ravaging the northern provinces of Bombay and Madras, the following gentlemen have resolved themselves into a provisional committee for forming a society, to be designated the "British India Society," for bettering the condition of the natives, and drawing forth the natural products and commercial resources of British India. W. Adam, Esq., late of Calcutta; W. Oldam, Esq., of Leeds; Jonathan Backhouse, Esq., of Darlington; T. Clarkson, Esq.; Lord Brougham; Major-Gen. Briggs; Sir Charles Forbes, Bart.; Sir Culling Eardley Smith; J. Bowring, Esq., LL.D.; and several others. A list of subscriptions had been entered into, at the head of which we see the names, Sir Charles Forbes, Bart., for 100*l.*; Major-Gen. Briggs, and the Messrs. Pease, Backhouse, and Brown, for 50*l.* each; and a number of others for 20*l.* and 25*l.* each. The society will be speedily organised, and its operations commenced.

A FRENCH DUEL.

A True Story, on which to found a Novel.

Hilaire and Ernest were schoolfellows and friends; both entered the French Military service—the former became an officer of Infantry, the latter a Lancer. On one occasion, having obtained two months' leave of absence from their respective corps, Hilaire invited Ernest to his mother's country house, at the foot of the Pyrenees, for the purpose of shooting and otherwise agreeably spending their short respite from garrison duty.—Hilaire had a sister, young and beautiful, and the brother was not long in perceiving that an attachment was forming between her and the gay Lancer; fearing that this attachment, if allowed to have its own free course, would not prove advantageous for his sister, Hilaire proposed to Ernest, some time before the expiration of their leave, to spend the remainder of it in Paris. Ernest replied—"I know why you make this proposal; you have discovered that Louise and myself are attached to each other, and you want to separate us. My views are honourable; I hope one day to make her my wife. Your family is Republican, mine is of the old Noblesse; but I hope to be able to induce my friends to agree to the union."

Hilaire felt assured that Ernest's intentions were correct, and after a time the friends returned to their regiments. Hardly had Hilaire rejoined his corps than his mother wrote to inform him that Louise was enceinte by Ernest. Hilaire flew to him, and upbraided him, at the same time urging him to save the honour of his family by immediately marrying Louise. Ernest protested that it was his intention to do so; that he had been urging his friends to consent to his marriage into a Republican family; as yet he was unable to obtain their consent. That an aged relative, whose heir he was, had apparently not long to live, he could not survive three years; but, whether he did so or not, at the end of that time he solemnly promised to fulfil his pledge to Louise. Hilaire could get no better terms, and, for ancient friendship's sake, he agreed to wait for three years without pressing the matter.

Ernest wrote occasionally to Louise, and, at the end of the three years, the mother and daughter left their peaceful retreat and journeyed to the north of France, to the town where Ernest was stationed. Louise, wishing to give him a surprise, wrote anonymously from the hotel that a lady wished to see him. He went immediately. Louise rose to throw herself into his arms; he shrunk back. Louise fell senseless on the floor, and the heartless libertine retreated to his quarters. The hapless Louise recovering herself, and finding that she was deserted, rushed in despair from the house, and, after wandering about, strayed into the churchyard and flung herself exhausted on a grave; she lay there till morning. At daylight, the Sacristan arrived at the field of his melancholy labours, and perceiving Louise, he raised her and humanely sent her home in a conveyance—for she was half dead with cold.

Hilaire, steady and attentive to his duties, now held an office in a Military Bureau in Paris. His mother wrote to inform him what had just happened. He posted instantly to where she was; then hastened to Ernest to ask an explanation of his conduct. Ernest said that he could not marry Louise—that his views were changed—that it was true he had promised to marry Louise; but now he could not. "If it is for want of means," said Hilaire, "I offer to give up the salary of the office I now hold to support you in comfort and respectability. Louise, too, has some money." "No," answered Ernest; "with all that I cannot marry your sister."

Hilaire went to the Commandant to ask his advice. He informed Hilaire that Ernest had, under promise of marriage to his wife's daughter (by a former marriage), seduced her also, and that he was utterly at a loss what to advise in this disgraceful case; but recommended Hilaire to speak to the second in command, an Ancien. The old soldier said, "I know Ernest to be such a libertine, that nothing can be done with one so unprincipled, in the way of persuading him to fulfil his promise of marriage; the only good thing I know of him is, that he is not deficient in courage."

Hilaire returned to Ernest, again implored him to do justice to his sister, and seeing he could make no impression on him, said, "One or other of us must now die." "Well!" replied Ernest, "since it must be so, I have no objection to fight you, and I would sooner die than marry your sister." The preliminaries of a duel were then arranged. Hilaire and Ernest proceeded to the ground, attended each by three or four seconds—as is the custom in France. Hilaire was a master of the sword, and Ernest equally dexterous with pistols. Lots were cast for the choice of weapons, and Fortune favoured Ernest, and also as to the first fire. The combatants were placed at the distance of 22 paces; a crowd of spectators had assembled; Ernest raised his pistol;—the spectators, knowing his skill, held their breath, thinking the fate of Hilaire was sealed; the ball, though fired with deadly aim, whistled harmless past the head of Hilaire. The latter then threw down his pistol, and approaching Ernest, besought him for the last time to save the honour of his family.

Hilaire's mother was on the ground in a carriage, and, seeing the proceedings of her son, she ran towards him and cried, "If your heart fails you, here is your brother, 14 years of age, who will take your place, and if he falls, I will."—Ernest said, "Hilaire's heart does fail him; I am fighting with a coward." Hilaire, stung to the quick, exclaimed, "I have given you every chance—now the die is cast, take your merited fate!" Then resuming his place, he fired; the ball passed through the right eye and brain of Ernest; a party of his men in fatigue dresses ran towards him, bore him off the field streaming with blood, amidst the cries of the spectators—"L'Honneur est vengé!"

J. E. A.

N[illegible] truth of this tragedy may be relied on—it was enact[illegible] ago—the names of individuals and places are supp[illegible] obvious reasons.

Whatever may be the value of the English coasting marine, we can scarcely say as much for the French, in reading the following:—"A fishing-boat," according to the Echo du Nord, "left Dunkirk a few days since, and owing to the ill-luck which it met with, the Captain threw himself into the sea. As there was nobody on board who could be relied upon to take care of the boat, the greatest apprehensions are entertained for its safety." When it is remembered that these boats are manned in the proportion of six to one as regards our own fishing-boats, the opinion of French navigation cannot be very exalted.

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S MILITARY [illegible]ARY.

PREVIOUS [illegible] the [illegible] of Addiscombe Place, near Croydon, [illegible] military seminary, the education of the Company's cadets [illegible] conducted partly at the Royal Military College, Marlow, [illegible] at Military Academy, Woolwich, or in part pr[illegible] number of Cadets at Woolwich was limited to 46; [illegible] average expense was 240*l.* each. The Company allo[illegible] guineas to each Cadet educated privately, and 45 gu[illegible] half the yearly expense, [illegible] Cadet educated at M[illegible]

[illegible] expense for [illegible] of each Cadet educated in the [illegible] seminary was [illegible]. The seminary was originally co[illegible] to the ed[illegible] for the Artillery or Engineer Corps, and th[illegible] for its establishment were framed in conformity [illegible] clause of the Act 53d George III., cap. 155. The [illegible] and object of the institution were sanctioned by a [illegible] of the General Court of the 7th April, 1809. It was placed under the superintendence of Dr. Andrew, who was paid at the rate of 80*l.* each per annum for 60 pupils. When the seminary was first established, the Cadets' subscriptions were at the rate of 30*l.* a-year, and they also paid for certain articles of military clothing, at an expense of 19*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* The successive augmentations which have taken place are,—

The annual total expense of the seminary, upon an average of the six years ending Midsummer, 1835, may be taken at about 20,000*l.*, of which the Company's proportion was between 11,000*l* and 12,000*l*. The number of Cadets qualified during this period was, Engineers, 58: Artillery, 80, Infantry, 242.

The age for admission to the institution is from 14 to 18, subject also to a preliminary examination in arithmetic and Latin of the candidates, who are nominated by the members of the Court of Directors and by the President of the Board of Control.

The plan for the seminary, according to a report of the 11th of April, 1809, "was first submitted to the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman by Mr. Abington, of the India House, under whose direction the system has been digested and arranged, with a zeal, attention, and vigilance deserving the Court's liberal encouragement," &c. &c.

On the 2nd Nov. 1837, the Court of Directors resolved, that all the time during which Cadets actually continue at the seminary, after attaining the age of 16, and before they pass their public examination (provided they pass within the fixed period of four terms), shall count as a portion of the period which may eventually entitle them to retire upon full-pay, under the regulations as now established.

The establishment of the seminary consists of a public examiner, an oriental examiner, a lieutenant-governor, a staff-captain, two orderly officers, a broadsword master, 15 professors and masters (one of whom, being in orders, officiates as chaplain), six non-commissioned officers, a bugler, and a proportionate number of public domestic servants.

The course of studies consists of mathematics, fortification, military drawing, military surveying, Hindustani, civil and lithographic drawing, French, and Latin. Lectures, moreover, on experimental philosophy, chemistry, and geology, are delivered at stated periods.

Since June, 1836, an occasional detachment of Sappers and Miners has been employed in throwing up field and other works, which, in their gradual progress, afford most useful lessons of instruction.

Those Cadets for whom there is no room in the Engineers, but who are reported to have attained to a high degree of qualification, receive honorary certificates, and their names are announced to the Governments in India, and published in general orders to the army, as meriting particular notice. They have the privilege of choosing the presidency in India at which they shall be stationed.

The infantry Cadets, educated at this institution, take rank in the Company's army above all other Cadets who receive direct appointments, from the commencement of three months previously to the date of the seminary Cadets passing their public examinations.

There are two public examinations held at the East India Company's Military Seminary in the course of the year, in the presence of the members of the Court of Directors, when a selection is made of those duly qualified for the Engineers, Artillery, and Infantry. Those who may be chosen for the Engineers proceed to Col. Pasley's establishment at Chatham, for the purpose of studying a course of the field duties of Engineer officers, and of practical architecture. This course occupies 10 or 12 months, the expense of which is borne by the East India Company. The Cadets have temporary commissions, and local rank as Ensigns in Her Majesty's army, whilst doing duty at the establishment for field instruction.

The Cadets selected for the corps of Engineers were, previously to the year 1839-21, sent on the trigonometrical survey prosecuted in Wales, under the authority of the Board of Ordnance. At this date, arrangements were made, at the suggestion of Major-General Sir Howard Douglas (the public examiner), for instructing the Cadets at the Company's Military Seminary in practical surveying. On the 8th Feb 1837, another arrangement took place for giving increased efficiency to the separate branches of military drawing and military surveying taught at the Addiscombe institution.

Since April, 1838, the course of surveying and military reconnoissance, previously practised at Addiscombe, has been continued at Chatham, upon an extended scale; and the Engineer Cadets are made fully conversant in the knowledge and application of all geodesical and astronomical problems of general and practical utility.—Asiatic Journal.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—"Whether it is better to bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of," or, in other words, to die a lingering death under Whig imbecility, or receive the coup de grace from Tory despotism, is a problem I shall leave to the solution of more expert casuists than myself, whilst I am fully persuaded that both Whig and Tory, so far as regards our ill-fated profession, are perfectly agreed upon the Chinese principle of ruling barbarians, which is to be done by miscule. One of our sapient rulers, who I never think of without being reminded of our unhappy progenitor, who entailed on the human race "all the woes which mortal flesh is heir to," recently threw down a challenge in the House of Commons to the opposers of Government, "to prove that Lord Minto's patronage was not bestowed on deserving officers." A more egregious piece of effrontery I never heard. I suppose he concludes, that if it cannot be proved a man has run away from an enemy, or been disgraced by the sentence of a Court-Martial, it naturally ensues he must be a deserving character,—a very negative kind of merit, to say the least of it. Now supposing it could be clearly demonstrated that of all the officers who have been selected for lucrative appointments under the patronage of Lord Minto, very few have been signalised for any important service, and that many who have been excluded, have been most pre-eminently and repeatedly distinguished, I consider that it would prove relative demerit, which is all the reply such pitiful sophistry is entitled to; and to do this, I need only refer to the names of his lordship's favourites, and compare their services with many others who have been exhibiting claims sufficient to melt the heart of a stone; which claims remain unnoticed to this day, because they have neither family nor electioneering interest, though their claims have been stamped and sealed with their blood, in defence of our country. An exiled friend of mine, an officer of great merit, very justly observed to me that the Admiralty have a certain optical instrument, which has wonderful magnifying powers when applied to the services of their friends; but, when inverted, proportionate diminishing ones in scanning the merits of all others. In the month of December, 1836, the attention of the Admiralty was called to a very important subject, which they heeded not: I allude to the absolute necessity of selecting officers for commands out of those who can produce unequivocal evidence of personal, rather than imputed merit, and whose well-established reputation for fighting, with a readiness to resent any insult offered to our flag, would act as a restraint upon insolent Frenchmen, who calculate upon the possibility of their fanfaronades passing off with impunity. In illustration of this argument, I need only refer to what recently transpired in that untoward Express affair, whilst I declare my conviction that Admiral Baudin would rather have cut off his ears than have offered so gratuitous an affront to a British subject, had an officer of Cochrane's stamp been in the vicinity; and still more am I convinced that he would have received such a lesson had he so far forgotten himself, as to have insured future respect to that flag which he never viewed in time of war without quaking; a lesson more permanent in its effect than the obligation of telling a wilful lie. Before I terminate my lucubration, I would ask a question which some of your friends behind the scenes may possibly be able to reply to, namely, is it true that the directions under which the Military Commission are proceeding in their inquiries, confine their projects of amelioration to a recommendation of measures which are *to entail no expense whatever on the country. I know positively that one of the Commission has declared it to be so, which offers but a sorry prospect to the Navy, when every other branch of the Military service have received from the nation some boon since the peace, and this at considerable expense. Alas, poor Navy! the day is fast approaching when that country thy services have saved, will weep upon her ruins over her ingratitude to thee! I should likewise be glad to know why Capts. Wise and Dundas were chosen to be the representatives of that class of officers to which I have the honour of belonging? That they are excellent samples of what Captains in the Navy should be, none will deny, but they are both of that number who obtained every step of their promotion by interest. Young men for their rank, in comparison with the mass, and have had all the fat things the service yields to the service, whilst others have fought their way up the ladder, and after half a century of increasing toil and hardship, are reduced to the miserable ultimatum of vegetating upon 200*l.* a-year, with many dependents on this wretched pittance. Amongst the Captains there are very many who would have advocated our cause before the Commission, not by talent or eloquence, but by a recital of experimental hardships, which, in all probability, would have ensured a favourable hearing and speedy redress†;—if it only consisted in a recommendation to Government to grant to us what has already been granted to the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, namely, the option of retiring with similar advantages to those which officers of these services have been permitted to retire on. As we know not what questions have been put to the above-named officers, it would be wrong to prejudge the probable effects of the inquiry; but should their examination have proceeded upon the same principle which manifests itself in the published examination of Lieut. Somerville, it is to be feared that the scrutiny is undertaken with reluctance, carried on with remissness, and that all defects will be touched with a gentle hand, from an apprehension of probing too deep or discovering too much, thus warts will be trifled with, and confirmed ulcers overlooked. In this case, happy shall I be when found a false prophet. Remember your motto—"impartiality‡."

May 26, 1839. MINOS.

* If our correspondent refers to the words of the Commission (see N. & M. Gazette of 23d March last), he will find that the Commissioners are to have "due regard to economy," and "the efficiency of the service." These words, we are sure, will receive from the Members the most liberal interpretation. In again publishing their names, we will repeat our conviction that the United Service generally admit that a better selection could scarcely have been made. The Dukes of Wellington and Richmond; Lords Minto, Melville, Howick, Hill; Sirs C. Adam, J. Kempt, T. M. Hardy, G. Cockburn, R. H. Vivian, A. J. Dickson, H. Hardinge, R. THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The United Services are becoming very anxious to ascertain, through your valuable Journal, when the Report, touching the labours of the Naval and Military Commission, is likely to be brought before the Commons House of Parliament, Lord Howick (one of the Commissioners) having stated in his place in the House some time since that the Report was ready, and would be brought forward after the Easter recess, since which we find meetings have taken place, and the services conclude that the Commission has closed. Any information that you can give on this very important subject, to which many hundreds of old and deserving officers are looking, will oblige your numerous readers, and none more so than WILL WATCH.

[We are not aware that Lord Howick made the communication as stated by our correspondent. However, the whole of the evidence has been received by the Commission, and each member will draw up a report relating to his own department. These reports will be submitted, and then a general report framed, but which, we regret to add, is not expected to be ready this Session of Parliament.—ED. N. & M. G.]

MILITARY BRIDGES AND BAYONET FENCING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having read in the United Service Journal an article seeking to confirm Col. Macintosh's claim as the original inventor of inflated substitutes for pontoons, I beg to maintain, that what has been advanced falls short of supporting that claim;—the writer fairly asserts, what I have already declared as my belief, i. e., that Col. M. "was not aware of the suggestions of other ingenious officers on the same subject;" but is that not rather a lame way of establishing his claim to priority of invention? But more feebly still is it upheld by its being called his "modification of a very ancient expedient." Can he show that such, his modification, was antecedent to similar inventions—say modifications which others have contrived and published? Mine is as old as 1813, and was printed and published in 1816, as the accompanying book will convince you*. If the Colonel can produce as strong a proof that he took the field before that period, I will strike my colours and surrender at discretion—but not till then; and I say the same, and with perfect good will, to the other claimants, for cheerfully will I yield the palm to the ORIGINAL imitator, whoever he may be,—for such we are all likely to prove, and since Col. M. refers to an "ancient expedient," it certainly reminds me of what, however, was not a leader to my contrivance, namely, that the Asiatics cross rivers by means of pumpkins or gourds and a stick: also, by inflating the skins of animals, purposely carried. The Esquimaux also, although differently, use them; and the Chinese may have furnished Col. M. with much to mislead him, as well as fit for modification. I have refrained from troubling your columns of late, seeing that you have abundance of more valuable matter than I could hope to offer, and also because my whole time has been occupied in organising the exercises of my establishment, and its objects generally, previous to its being thrown open to (what I stand in great need of) generous and patriotic supporters of my humble endeavours, by the perfection of Stadium tuition, &c., to be useful to the United Service. Let me hope that, although "crippled in front," having borne ALL the brunt hitherto, I have a feeling as well as valiant reserve in THEM; and they may also, by witnessing our bayonet fencing (now in practice here, and tolerably settled by much pinning), become proselytes to Arthur's argument, in favour of the adoption of that important exercise†. I owe a final explanation in defence of the utility of riflemen, to that gallant and brilliant correspondent of yours, but really to write even this hasty paper I have been obliged to steal from my post; and, in despite of the Articles of War, and their pains and penalties, I will not return to it till after having offered you my grateful thanks for your many indulgencies.

Stadium, Cremorne House, Chelsea, June 3, 1839. DE BERENGER.

* A book we have seen, and containing the quotation published in Baron De B.'s last.—ED.

† Having ourselves attended at the Stadium, to witness the bayonet exercise, we are satisfied that its introduction into the service, as there practised, would be of the highest importance.—ED.

"The Paymaster of a regiment," says the Gazette de France, "quartered in the south of France, having deposited a sum of 10,000 francs in the hands of a banker, suddenly learned, a few days since, that he had declared himself a bankrupt. The Paymaster immediately went to his debtor's house, and demanded his money. The unfortunate banker replied that he had delivered in his balance-sheet, and consequently it was too late. The officer, upon this, drew out a pair of pistols, and said, 'The 10,000 francs you owe me belong to the regiment; if they are not forthcoming, I am disgraced and ruined; therefore, you must either give me the money, or I will blow out your brains, and then shoot myself.' This mode of settling accounts defeated all the calculations of the banker, who took out his pocket-book and gave him the sum demanded."

WE beg to direct the attention of our readers to the following communication, addressed to Messrs. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden, London :—

"Gentlemen,—I consider it almost an imperative duty to state the valuable efficacy of your excellent MACASSAR OIL. For the last 15 years I have been bald, occasioned by a most dreadful fever whilst in India. I have used almost every means to procure a head of hair again, but all my efforts seemed fruitless, until, accidentally, a friend advised the use of your valuable 'HAIR RESTORER.' I can give it no better name), and after using a 3s. 6d. bottle, every symptom of a new head of hair began to show itself, to the joy, not only of myself, but my children. I resolved on having another, and obtained a 7s. bottle; and before the whole of which was used, I had, and have now, as handsome a head of hair as ever man enjoyed, and I earnestly recommend that all who have not tried this excellent Oil will not fail to do so. I am, Sirs, your most grateful and obedient servant,

WALTER CARSON, Importer and Dealer, 15, Tokenhouse-yard, near the Bank.

CARSON'S ORIGINAL ANTI-CORROSION PAINT, 15, Tokenhouse-yard, near the Bank.—WALTER CARSON (successor to the inventors), manufacturer by appointment to Her Majesty's Hon. Board of Ordnance, and the principal London Dock Companies, begs particularly to recommend the ANTI-CORROSION to the public, as it has been proved by the above and other public bodies, and by numbers of gentlemen of the first distinction, to be more durable and far superior to any other paint for the preservation of every description of out-door iron, wood, brick, or stone-work, and old compo, &c., fronts. Colours—Light stone, drab of Portland ditto, yellow ditto, light and dark lead, chocolate, and red, 34s.; invisible green, 50s.; deep green, 60s. per cwt.; oil and brushes. Copy the address.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair, and combs, of all descriptions, at METCALFE'S, 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 6d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 7ls. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s., furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s., feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 1l. 10s; mahogany ditto, 70s.. fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers, that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

DR. HANCOCK'S THERMAL, SULPHUREOUS, HOT MINERAL WATER, and MEDICATED VAPOUR BATHS, 49, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-sq. The Medical Faculty, the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, are respectfully informed, that these auxiliaries for the cure of Chronic, Inflammatory, and Cutaneous Disorders, are NOW OPEN, under the approbation of the most distinguished Physicians in the Metropolis. The Artificial Thermal Waters are composed of the same ingredients as the natural Springs of Barèges, Vichy, Aix-la-Chapelle, the Sulphurous Springs of Virginia, and the Island of Nevis, being in all respects equal to these, and possessing, moreover, the advantage of increased strength, and any additions to suit particular cases. They are available for the cure of a great variety of disorders, as gout and rheumatism, dropsy, scrofula, foul scorbutic ulcers, eruptions of the skin, coughs, and diseases of the chest, lungs, and nervous system. For the convenience of invalids, apartments (with every accommodation and attendance) are provided on the premises.—Usual hours of attendance from Nine A.M. till Eight P.M.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.

No. 158, NEW BOND STREET (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATK of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

TO LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they can, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Atomatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

 J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Rouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"Sheffield, Oct. 13th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent, I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 84, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

THE AWFUL EFFECTS OF FIRE,

from accidents, carelessness, or, what is still worse, from the vile principle of incendiarism. I READ having repeatedly been an eye-witness to this dreadful calamity, was induced to invent a Double action Pump on an entire new principle, for which he has obtained Patents for the United Kingdom. These Pumps are adapted for all purposes of Hydraulics, particularly FIRE ENGINES. They will discharge as much water in any given time as two Pumps of the same dimensions on the common principle, and with two-thirds of the labour. Some are so portable that they may be drawn by one man, and will pass through a door or passage three feet wide. The valves being spherical, can never get out of repair; if standing by for Months, would be ready to act in an instant. These Engines are well adapted for Villages, Factories, Agricultural Buildings, &c., and are worthy of a place in every Mansion in the Kingdom. Also for large Steam-vessels, as it can be placed in the space of the Truck which carries the Cable-chain, and removed to any part of the deck at pleasure. For Sailing Yachts, &c., it can be fixed in about half the compass of the common Pump. Made to order, if required, to discharge from 20 to 120 Gallons a Minute; and if fitted with a Suction Tube to reach the side of the vessel, would protect the largest Ships in the Navy, and might be usefully employed for wetting the Sails, &c.

Manufactured ONLY by the Patentee, 35, Regent-circus, Piccadilly, London.

Ship Letters from St Vincent, Bermuda, St. Jago, Demerara, Tobago, Maranham, and Savannah.

PORTSMOUTH, June 21.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Benbow sailed on Sunday; she is not to go to the Clyde, but only to Leith, and will therefore go by the north coast of England; she is to return here in a week or two. Avon steamer came from the eastward with the depot of the 62d regiment; and on Tuesday went to Cork with part of the depot of the 2d batt. of the 60th Rifles. Lightning steamer arrived on Sunday from Woolwich, in the afternoon Prince Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg and suite came down from London, and immediately proceeded to the Port-Admiral's house to dinner; the following morning early his Highness and suite embarked in the Lightning under a royal salute, and attended by a guard of honour, and immediately put to sea; the Lightning is to land them at Lisbon, and then return to Portsmouth. The division of Marines was inspected on Tuesday, and the Marine Artillery on Wednesday. A sad accident happened at Fort Cumberland by the explosion of a shell, which nearly killed one man and very much hurt two others, besides exciting great alarm; the unfortunate cause of the accident is the greatest sufferer, having lost a leg, and sustained a fracture of the other. It appears some sparks dropped from a match or port-fire into a shell, which ought not to have been there, and an explosion instantly took place: the accident put a stop to all further proceedings. The man is in Haslar Hospital. Seaflower is here from Guernsey to refit. Hastings and Hydra are at Spithead, ready for sea. Britannia, Revenge, Lily, and Clio are in the basin fitting; but, being miserably off for seamen, get on slowly: a working party is sent in from the Hastings. The Edinburgh, Madagascar, and Harrier, are daily expected: their orders are in the Commander-in-Chief's office. The Dasher, Post-office packet, has brought a few volunteers to join the flag ship. Ships in Port—Hastings and Hydra at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Lily, Clio, Seaflower, Saracen's Prize, Messenger, and Dasher in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, June 20.—(From our own Correspondent.)—14th—Sailed Buffalo, store-ship for Cork, where she will embark some detachments and convey them to Quebec; and after landing them, she is to take on board convicts, and proceed with them to New South Wales, from whence she goes to New Zealand for a cargo of timber. Sailed the Meteor st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, for the Clyde, to escort the Hecla st.-v. to Woolwich. Mr. Brodie, Master of the San Josef, and a party of men, have taken a passage in the Meteor for the purpose of navigating the Hecla to her destination. Sailed the Wm. Money, Indiaman, for the river Thames. 15th—Pylades, 18, Com. W. L. Castle, was paid off, and laid up in ordinary. Hercules, 74, Capt. E. Barnard, is ordered to take on board her lower deck guns, and will be supplied with 35 seamen from the Impregnable to complete her complement. Arrived Cornwallis, 72, Capt. Sir R. Grant, from Portsmouth, and came into harbour to be paid off; she will be taken into dock to ascertain if she has received any damage by getting on shore. Sailed the Hamoaze lighter, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard. 16th—Arrived Shamrock, 10, revenue cruiser, Lieut.-Com. John J. Keeling, from Cork. 17th—Arrived Camel lighter, with stores for the dock-yard, from Pembroke. 18th—Capt Palliser, and a party of Rl. Marines embarked on board Hercules, 72, Capt. E. Barnard, to complete her complement, a Subaltern's party only being on board while she was employed conveying troops. 19th—Arrived Swale, tender to Astrea, from Falmouth, with old stores belong to the packets; also arrived the Falmouth lighter, with stores from Woolwich and the eastern yards. 20th—This being the anniversary of Her Majesty's accession to throne, a royal salute was fired from the batteries and shipping at 12 o'clock. Childers, 16, Com. Halsted, is still in the Sound, waiting to complete her complement of men. In the Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Belleisle, Cornwallis, Druid, Rolla, Pandora, Carron st.-v. In Barnpool—Shamrock. In the Sound—Hercules, Childers.

MILFORD HAVEN, 19th June.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It is determined to launch the Cyclops steamer at Pembroke Yard, on the 11th proximo. The Marine detachment there has received orders to hold itself in readiness for embarkation on the shortest notice: it is to be relieved from the Chatham division. The Advice mail steam-packet on this station, on her last passage from Waterford, fell in with the barque Alpha, of Liverpool, from Monte Video, out 74 days, all well. The Advice took a large number of letters from her, which the Second Master, who has charge of the mail on board those packets, delivered to the Post-office at Hobbs' Point. In going up Waterford River the day before, a seaman named Wm. Murphy fell from the main gaff of the Advice on his head on the deck, by which his brains were literally dashed out. He lingered under medical aid until the next day, when he died, leaving a widow and family to mourn his untimely end. The Monkey steamer, although ordered off the station, has not yet left the Port.

We observe with pleasure that Capt. Denham of the Rl. Navy, and F.R.S., the zealous and enterprising officer so well known to, and so justly appreciated by the public, for his valuable surveys and new channel operations at Liverpool, is at present engaged in carrying out similar operations at Wyre Harbour, in Morecombe Bay, Lancashire. By this desirable undertaking, a new and easily accessible port, with adequate docks, available for ships of large burthen, will be shortly added to the maritime security of our western coast.

The splendid steam-frigate Cyclops will be launched from Pembroke Dock-yard about the 10th July, and will be fitted with engines of 300 horse power by Messrs Seaward, on precisely the same principle as the Gorgon's, which have given so much satisfaction.

The Vesuvius steam-frigate will be launched on the 11th of July from Sheerness yard. She will have engines of 250 horse power.

The Stromboli, a sister steam-ship to Vesuvius, is in a forward state at Portsmouth, and expected to be ready for launching in about two months.

JAMAICA, 26 May.—Edinburgh, 72, sailed this day for Bermuda. On 30th ult., Vestal, 28, arrived from Vera Cruz, with 300,000 dollars, and Serpent, 16, from Barbadoes, the Pilot, 18, sailed on the same day for Carthagena, and Sappho, 18, on a cruise. Tartarus st. arrived on 17th April from St. Thomas's; and Skipjack on 23d, from St. Jago de Cuba. Dee st. sailed on 8th for St. Thomas's; Rover, 16, on 9th on a cruise; Pickle, for Bermuda; and on 20th, Hornet st. for Chagres.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.—The second general meeting, for the present year, of the friends and supporters of this Institution, was held at the Royal Naval School, Camberwell, on Tuesday last. After the minutes of the general meeting on 28th ult. had been read and confirmed, the meeting adjourned to the large school-room, which was tastefully decorated with flags and union jacks, interspersed with laurels and evergreens, altogether giving a professional and imposing air to the proceedings. Sir E. Codrington presided on the platform, and there were present Admirals White and Oliver, General Watson, Sir R. Dobson, M.D., Col. Robinson, Capts. Shirreff, Dickinson, Fead, Forbes, Rideout, Lewis Carnac, Matthew Smith, Thomson; Lieuts. Cumberland, Garland, Stratford; besides the members of the council, and about 300 visitors, including a considerable number of ladies. The gallant Chairman opened the business of the day by stating, that the object of the present meeting was to distribute the prizes which had been awarded to the pupils, in accordance with the examiners' reports. After a few remarks on the advantages of the Institution, and the support it had recently received from the Earl of Yarborough and Sir Isaac Coffin, each of whom had sent a fourth donation of 100*l.*, the announcement of which was received with much applause, Sir Edward cited a very gratifying instance of the advantages resulting from the establishment of the school. A pupil on the full charge (whose name was withheld from motives of delicacy) having recently lost his mother, and hourly expecting the death of his father, would have been left perfectly destitute unless continued on the gratuitous list. The officer in question had had two sons in the school from its opening, and had always been punctual in his payments, until now, overtaken by misfortune, he was compelled to solicit the aid of this Institution. Under these circumstances, the last general meeting had unanimously concurred in the recommendation of the Council, and the youth is now a free pupil, unknown by name to any individual in the establishment (general applause). It was to meet this and many similar cases of hardship that the Service and the public generally were called upon to subscribe; and bearing in mind the ill-paid and arduous services of the officers of the Navy—services often rendered at the sacrifice of life and health—he (the President) could not help thinking that the objects of the School only required to be fully understood to induce the Naval service to come forward with the small amount of a day's half-pay; which, trifling as is the amount to individuals, would collectively be of the utmost possible benefit to the Institution (hear). Several of the late scholars were present at the recent festival, and one of them, Lieut. Ramsay, R.M., who was appointed to the same ship with a parent of two of the pupils, had become a subscriber, deeply sensible of the benefits conferred on him by this School (hear, hear). The gallant Admiral concluded his address amidst great applause, by exhorting the parents and friends to stimulate their children to exertion, and strongly urging upon them the necessity of observing punctuality in the return of the boys at the termination of the vacation.—The Secretary then read the reports of the examiners; viz.—Dr. Russell, in Classics; Rev. T. G. Hall, in Mathematics; and Professor Brasseur, in French. The reports relating to Mathematics, and the junior school in Classics, were highly satisfactory, as was also the Drawing department. The prizes were then distributed to the scholars, accompanied by appropriate remarks from the President, and the applause of their schoolfellows. The following is a list of the prize boys:—Morgan, gold medal; Birch, sen., silver medal (these two medallists were wholly educated in the Royal Naval School); Wilkinson, sen.; Morrison, sen.; Barnard; Thelwall, sen.; W. Soady; Halbon; Martyr; Lloyd; Incledon; Morrison, jun.; Croker; Sheppard; Ward, sen.; Forrest; Newenham; White, sen., Lory, sen.; Wilkinson, jun.; Bowden; Scott; Tindale; Cumberland, jun.; Ramshay; Carrington; Molesworth; Walker; Garland; W. Brydone; Keys; J. Domville; Stanley; Passingham; Tyte; Bullock, sen.; Wylde; Brydone, jun.; Parkin; Henderson.

Sir E. Codrington then briefly addressed the assembly, calling attention to the bearing and personal appearance of the young gentlemen, which fully warranted the encomiums passed by him on the Masters and Matron. The company, after partaking of luncheon, separated, well pleased with the day's proceedings. The following is a classification of the rank of the parents of the pupils now in the school, viz. Admirals, 2; Captains, 22; Commanders, 24; Lieutenants, 64; Masters, 7; Surgeons, 16; Pursers, 14; Chaplain, 1; Royal Marines, 15. Total, 165.

On the night of the 16th, the Coast Guard at Shoreham seized two rafts, each having 24 tubs lashed to an iron bar, floating up the middle of Shoreham Harbour. The Lance, of Chichester, with her Master, have been placed under detention, upon suspicion of having brought over this cargo.

Sailed the Mary Anne convict-ship, to embark convicts from Woolwich.

The Barrosa is discharged from being a transport, and hired for a convict ship.

The Layton remains fitting for a convict ship.

Mr. J. Shirley, late Gunner, Rl. Naval College, to be Warden, Melville Hospital, Chatham.

RIO JANEIRO, April 4, 1839.—We arrived at this beautiful place on 26th March, after a tolerably good passage of 56 days from Spithead, having touched at Lisbon, Madeira, and Porto Praya. On 25th and 26th March we captured two slavers from the coast, with 480 slaves on board; the brigantine Carolina gave us a 12 hours' chace, and did not heave to till the shot went over her. This inhuman traffic is carried on to such an extent that 60,000 are said to have been landed on the coast of Brazil during the last six months! and unless the British Government send out a number of fast-sailing vessels, the trade will increase. The Lords of the Admiralty have sent the Camelion and Wizard; they might as well send a cow after a hare—indeed the Brazilians do not suppose the British are in earnest, or that they wish to suppress the slave trade, or they would take more efficient means to stop it. To give you an idea what a set of rascals these Brazilians are, an English merchant was engaged to act proctor to the captors, on which he received a letter, saying, if he interfered he would be murdered. You may, therefore, imagine what a set of rascals they are. We ought to have an 80-gun ship, with a flag, at this port; the interests of the British merchants require an imposing force to protect them and their valuables. You will hardly wonder when I tell you that six and eight millions of British manufactured goods are imported annually to this country. On our arrival here we found the Gossamer, and she only got in two days before the Electra. April 2.—Arrived the Stag, from Falkland Islands in 17 days. Lieut. Sullivan came passenger, having invalided from the Arrow. Lieut. Robinson, the former Lieut of the Stag, had been appointed to Arrow. Commanders Mainwaring, of Stag, and Preston, of Electra, have exchanged ships. Electra will sail in the course of a few days, to join Adm. Ross in the Pacific; Commander Smith takes a passage in her to join the President. The Dolphin, U S. schooner, arrived from the river Plata, on her way to New York. She left there many French ships-of-war, assisting the Monte Videans against the Buenos Ayreans, and H.M.S. Orestes and Actæon. The ships here are Stag, Electra, Camelion, and Grecian, the latter sails to-morrow, to cruise off Cape Frio. From her superior sailing I have no doubt she will capture several vessels in a short time. Three schooners came in to-day, all in ballast. They certainly landed their black crop on the coast, as light vessels never come to Rio. When I boarded the pirate vessel Electra, took on 25th, they were stowed like pigs in an Irish steamer, and wallowing in their own filth; 58 of the poor devils were chained together, and had been so for 30 days. As soon as she arrived at Rio, the armourer of Electra was sent to knock their irons off; he coaxed them, which delighted the poor devils, and nothing could exceed their gratitude. The small-pox is very prevalent amongst them; since they left the coast they have buried about 50 children monthly. We are obliged to keep boats rowing guard at night to prevent the slaves from being stolen. The other night John Curtis (son of Sir Lucius), Prize Master, fired into a large boat that was coming nearer than she ought, and from the noise on board it was evident some of the scoundrels had been hit. Since that time they had given our prizes a wide berth. Some difficulty is thrown in the way of condemnation. The mixed commission is quite a farce. The next ship for England is the Fly, then Imogene, Samarang, Sparrowhawk, and Electra. Lieuts. Heseltine, of Electra, and Robinson, of Grecian, have exchanged ships. The Calliope sailed on 19th March for the River Plata, to strengthen the force in that river; as, in consequence of the unsettled state of affairs there, the French are carrying everything before them.

PERSIAN GULF, 10th April.—On the 24th ult. Admiral Sir F. Maitland arrived at Bushire on a visit to the Governor of that place, the motive for which has not transpired. Previous to his landing, the Admiral ascertained that there was a disposition to treat him with disrespect, as the boats were directed to land him at the Custom house instead of the usual place of honour set apart for state occasions. To this indignity he would not submit, but came ashore at the usual place, and proceeded to his interview with the Governor without molestation, but on his return the boats were fired upon by some soldiery from the beach, luckily without serious mischief, and the forbearance of the Admiral prevented the fire being returned by the boat's crew, otherwise a serious conflict must have followed, and loss of life have taken place. The Admiral himself was personally insulted, and placed in considerable danger in his way to the beach. In consequence of these outrages, which were communicated to Capt. Hennell, the British Resident at Bushire, he has withdrawn from the place, but was induced to re land yesterday, in order to meet an officer, Jehanghir Khan, who it was understood had been despatched by the Prince Viceroy of Fars for the purpose of offering explanations of the outrage which had been committed on the person of the British Admiral. The result of the interview has not transpired, and the affair altogether is involved in great mystery.—[See also Lord Palmerston's explanation in the House of Commons last evening]

Nothing can more strongly evince the necessity of some alteration in the present system of paying wages to our men-of-war seamen, and of the still further necessity of instituting such a system of pensions as will make it the interest of the seamen to enter and steadfastly continue in the Queen's service, than the fact, that while the Cornwallis was at Halifax, she lost 60 men in a fortnight from desertion; nor can we wonder at it, for few or none of these men had 40*s.* due to them, their wages having been nearly all engrossed by slops, monthly pocket money, and allotments; and the tempting inducement was held out to them in all the ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, by the timber laden ships, of 15*l.* each for the mere run home. The bait was too strong to be resisted by men who must serve 20 years before they could obtain a pension; and at all times the love of change is stronger in a seaman's mind than in that of any other class of men.—While this high rate of wages was offered by our merchant ships, the Americans were willing to give seven pounds a-month to good hands, so that a prudent as well as a good seaman may, in a few years, be enabled to lay by as much as would make him comfortable in his declining age. It appears also that, during the last summer, not less than 500 merchant seamen died at Demerara; and the consequence was that 25*l.*, to assist in working the ships home to England was freely offered, and not only sailors jumped at such a present prize from the men of war, but soldiers also deserted to obtain the boon. Would it not be better to dismantle a man of war or two on foreign stations, lend the crews to assist in navigating the ships home, and return them immediately by steamers; of course charging the owners with all the expenses of the accommodation, including a reward to such men as were so lent, for the extra work they thereby performed? It is not our business to fashion out plans to remedy these inducements to desertion, but we shall be happy to promulgate any scheme in the shape of a remedy. Our wish is to support the entirety of the commerce of the country, and yet to maintain a warlike marine for the protection, in time of need, of that commerce, which is so essential to the welfare of the country.—Hants Telegraph.

A seizure of 70 pounds of cigars and cheroots has been made at Sheerness, and one man committed to Maidstone for ten months with hard labour.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards—The inspection of this regiment by Maj.-Gen. Sleigh closed on Thursday.

2d Life Guards—Were inspected on foot in barracks on Friday, and will be reviewed on Wormwood Scrubbs this morning.

1st Drags.—The corps are thus distributed:—hd.-qrs. one troop, at Sheffield; two, Burnley; one, Halifax; one, Todmorden; one, Nottingham.

2d Drags.—At the fair of Ballybrood last week, Capt. Macquarie's troop attended, with a mounted policeman as their guide, to preserve the peace. A battle soon commenced, and two powerful factions were engaged in deadly conflict with the usual ferocious war-whoop, when the Greys rode into the melée to separate the combatants, which these brave fellows succeeded in doing, with some difficulty, before lives were sacrificed. They received, in return for such kindly office, well meant, but unwelcome, a shower of stones, of no mean calibre, which rattled on the horses' flanks, and struck several of the riders. Capt. Macquarie sustained a sharp stroke of a stone in the sword-arm. Several of the rioters were made prisoners, and given up to the police.

11th Light Drags.—From the Canterbury Journal.—Monday was a gay day in Canterbury, in consequence of the troops in our barracks, under the command of Lieut. Col. the Earl of Cardigan, undergoing the review of the Military Inspector-General of the district, (Maj.-Gen. J. W. Sleigh, C.B.) This took place in the barrack-field, and the day being as lovely as e'er broke from the heavens, a vast concourse of persons was enticed to the ground, and a great number of carriages was also present, with most of the élite of the city and neighbourhood. The field presented a most animated appearance—the soldiers in full uniform—the equipages in all directions, adorned with elegantly dressed ladies, and other spectators dispersed in every part. Added to this the brass band of the regiment played some excellent tunes. There could not have been fewer than 3,000 persons present. The day happened to be the anniversary of the regiment's arrival at Canterbury, as well as that on which the Inspector-General arrived from India. The Inspector-General was attended by his aide-de camp, the Lieut.-Colonel, the Earl of Cardigan, and Col. Brotherton (the Commandant of the depot at Maidstone). The men, forming six troops, looked extremely fine, and were very orderly. Before entering upon the field movements, they went through the following on parade, with admirable precision—March past by squadrons—rank past by single file—form close column—the squadrons countermarched—rank past by threes from the left—form close column—the squadrons countermarched—advance in a column of troops from the right, and trot past—reverse the front by wheel about of divisions on the move, and canter past—file from the right of threes—sword exercise.

The undermentioned were the evolutions which were performed in the field:—1. Take ground to the left—troops left wheel—2. Close column of squadrons.—3. The column countermarched by the wheel-about of troops.—4. Take ground to the right and deploy on the second squadron.—5 Advance in open column of troops from the left.—6. Form line to the front on the second squadron, and advance.—7. Retire in open of troops from the right.—8 Form line to the rear on the second squadron.—9. Retire by threes from the right of squadron.—10. Form line to the rear, entering left points.—11. Advance in echelon of squadrons from the left.—12. Reverse the echelon, and advance.—13. The echelon changed front to the left.—14. Form line on the first squadron, and advance.—15. By echelon of troops change position, right back.—16. Close column of squadrons in rear of the first.—17.—Advance in column of squadrons, from line to the left on the third squadron.—18. Attack to the front in echelon of squadrons from the left.—19. By threes change position right back.—20. Advance across the ground in line.—21. Retire by alternate troops, covered by skirmishers.—22. Left flank thrown back on the move, a quarter circle.—23. Advance in double column of troops from the centre.—24. From line to the right—attack in line.—25. Change front, left back.—26. Advance in parade order—general salute.

In these evolutions, some of which were very intricate and interesting, the troops acquitted themselves most creditably, and gained the approbation of the spectators as well as of the gallant General who inspected them, and all the officers that were on the ground. Well may the Commandant feel a pride and satisfaction in having so fine and active a body of men under him, and the approbation of the Inspector-General was no more than due to them. The General expressed himself in the warmest terms of commendation—though he had heard much of their efficiency, he said, he could not have believed the progress they had made, and he was sure he should fail in representing it to Lord Hill, but he would request his Lordship to come down and see the regiment himself.

We are happy in being able to record this just appreciation of the high worth of the troops, and we doubt not they felt as much flattered and pleased as the gallant Colonel under whose command they are. The review was finished by one o'clock, when the several spectators returned to their homes, without a single accident occurring to spoil the gaiety of the day.

We have elsewhere given a faithful record of the services of the late Gen. Lord W. Bentinck, Colonel of this corps.

15th Hussars—Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter Scott, commanding the second division, awaits embarkation at Chatham, for India. Majors Phillips and Wathen are also at Chatham. The Field-Officers and Subalterns take their regular share of duty with the other officers in the garrison.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 1st Batt.—On Saturday, about 12 o'clock, the battalion in the Wellington Barracks, St. James's-park, were called out upon parade to hear the sentence of a General Court-Martial read to private C. Donellan, charged with attempting to murder private Henry Turner, on the night of the 14th ult. (See N. & M. G., 18th May and 1st inst.) The men having formed themselves into a square, Capt. the Hon. F. W. C. Villiers read the minutes of the Court-Martial, and the sentence, which condemned the prisoner to transportation beyond the seas for the term of his natural life. The ceremony had great effect upon all but the prisoner, who looked on with the most perfect indifference, and when he heard the sentence he betrayed no anxiety. The prisoner was removed to the Penitentiary, preparatory to his embarking for N. S. Wales.

The Sergeants of this battalion held their anniversary dinner in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo. A large apartment in the Wellington Barracks was tastefully ornamented with laurel and banners, and upwards of fifty "good men and true" (not a few of whom wore the honorary medals given to them for their services on that memorable occasion) sat down to dinner; after which the usual loyal toasts having been given, the chairman, Serj.-Major Lunoie, proposed the health of the Duke of Wellington, which was drunk with the most enthusiastic applause. The hilarity of the evening was kept up until a late hour.

Fusilier Guards, 2d Batt.—A grand ball was given at the St. George's Barracks, Charing-cross, yesterday week, by Capt. and Adjut. F. H. G. Seymour, to nearly 200 non-com. officers of this and other battalions of the Guards, in celebration of the gallant Captain's marriage with the youngest daughter of the Earl of Mansfield, to whom he was united about five weeks since. Two of the largest rooms in the barracks were fitted up with flags and appropriate devices, and in one of them the colours of the regiment shone prominently, and a third room was appropriated for refreshments, which were supplied most abundantly. Every non-commissioned officer was requested to bring either his wife or some respectable female acquaintance with him. The regimental band was in attendance, and at six o'clock the festivities commenced, and were continued until the same hour the following morning. Col. Scott, Captains Davies, Rushbrooke, Liddell; Lieut. Dalrymple, &c., were present, and several of the officers and their ladies occasionally mingled in the dance.

In the evening, Mr. Moore sat down with his brother officers to a splendid dinner, prepared for the occasion, when his health was drunk, and testimony was borne, by those whose esteem was a marked distinction of his worth, to his honourable career.—Sydney Monitor.

Major-General Sir C. Napier, after his recent inspection, thus addressed the depot:—

"Major Creagh, Officers, non-commissioned Officers, and private soldiers, I assure you that it gives me the greatest satisfaction to tell you how pleased I have been this day by your general appearance, the celerity of your movements, and your steadiness under arms; more particularly, as I have taken you unawares. I have nothing to find fault with, but many things to praise."

86th—The two flank comps., with the staff of this distinguished reg., under the command of Lieut.-Col. Sir M. Creagh, which have occupied our barracks for the last fifteen months, marched out at seven this morning with their splendid band, en route to Manchester. The gentlemanly conduct of the officers, and the soldier-like behaviour of the men, had gained for them universal esteem, and they have quitted the town with the sincere regret of all classes of its inhabitants. They are succeeded by the staff and flank comps. of the 20th, from Manchester, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Thomas. The gallant Commander of this reg. is M P. for Kinsale, and lately returned from India. Previous to going out, he served under the Duke of Wellington through all the Spanish campaigns, had two horses shot under him while commanding his old reg. (the gallant 27th) at Toulouse, and has subsequently served in Canada, the W. Indies, and for seven years previous to his return in the E. Indies. Col. Thomas first joined the Army in 1799. The detachment stationed at Sligo, under command of Lieut. C. T. Graves, will march for Boyle June 25th, and arrive there next day, to join its headquarters. Royal Artillery—A Board of Officers assembled at the Rl. Ordnance Hospital on Monday, for the purpose of inspecting the men of the Ordnance corps unfit for further service.—The party at the Tower was relieved yesterday by a detachment under the command of Capt. Anderson. Capt. Trevor met with a severe fall from his horse at the review in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, on Tuesday.

The late Serjt.-Major Shepherd.—It is gratifying to record the following letter from the Rl. Artillery corps to the Royal Marines:—

"The non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Artillery, appointed to conduct the subscription entered into as a token of sympathy with the widow and children of the late Serjeant Major W. Shepherd, gratefully acknowledge the kind participation of the Woolwich Division of Rl. Marines with the Rl. Artillery of their feelings of regret, with respect to the late melancholy event, and which that gallant corps' liberal contribution evinced that they so cordially entertain.

"The Rl. Artillery are under the most grateful obligation to the Rl. Marines, for this public avowal of detestation in which they hold the recent unrestrained violation of discipline, and they are sure so gallant a body as the Rl. Marines will justly appreciate the advantages that will accrue to the service, and country at large, by each soldier recording his individual protest against an act so derogatory to his sense of duty, and thus establish an honourable memorial of the noble part he took in the vindication of his corps from any community of feeling with the perpetrators of so disgraceful a crime.

"And we hope that the awful bereavement which we now unite in deploring, may produce a good effect, so that the same cordial sympathy that now exists between the several members of our respective corps, may ever continue among our successors. A. Steele, Quartermaster-Serjeant, President.

"Woolwich, June 6."

Messrs. Cox and Co. have opened a Subscription List at their office for the benefit of the widow of the late Serjeant-Major Shepherd. The Marquis of Westminster's name is on the list for 5*l.*, Messrs. Cox and Co., 5*l.*, Gen. Hopkinson, 5*l.*, Major Wolfe, 2*l.* We are confident that when this is known there will be many who will be happy to add their contributions. The Foot Guards and other corps have made a subscription. The Rifles, Marines, Sappers and Miners, and inhabitants of Woolwich, have all come forward.

Yesterday, at the Central Criminal Court, George Willis was indicted for the wilful murder of Wm. Shepherd. Messrs. Adolphus and Bodkin conducted the prosecution, and Mr. Doane defended the prisoner. Mr. Adolphus stated the facts of the case, and informed the jury that the officers of the regiment to which the prisoner belonged had furnished him with the means of defence. He then proceeded to detail the facts of the case, and called witnesses, after which Mr. Doane addressed the jury. Lord Chief Justice Tyndal then proceeded to sum up the evidence; and the jury, after a brief deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty. The prisoner stood with the greatest firmness during the trial, and was perfectly unmoved when the verdict was returned. Lord Chief Justice Tyndal addressed the prisoner, and said he had been convicted of a crime equally hateful in the eyes of God and man, and in his case there were circumstances of peculiar enormity. His victim was his own officer, whom he had treacherously destroyed. The circumstances of provocation, if any really did exist, were so slight as hardly to be of a nature to be brought forward. It was scarcely necessary for him to inform him that, under these circumstances, not the slightest hope could be held out to him, and he must prepare to meet his Maker. The sentence was then passed upon the prisoner in the usual form The prisoner listened attentively during the address of the learned Judge, and at its conclusion walked away from the bar with a firm step.

Rl. Engineers—Lieut.-Col. Slade, commanding Rl. Engineers in the Munster district, is on a tour of inspection.

Yeomanry—Brev. Lieut.-Colonel Campbell, K.H. (9th Lancers), has been appointed to inspect the corps of Yeomanry Cavalry in Cambridge, Suffolk, and Norfolk. Lieut.-Colonel Campbell is an Officer of 33 years' full-pay service.—The North Devon, Col. Lord Rolle, met at Great Torrington on 6th inst., for eight days' training, under the command of Major Sir Trevor Wheler. On Sunday the regiment attended divine service at the parish church of St. Giles, where a sermon was preached by the Chaplain of the regiment, the Rev. Peter Glubb, and for which he received the thanks of the regiment. This fine body of men was reviewed on Wednesday, 12th inst., by Col. Sisted, who spoke in the highest terms of the correctness of their evolutions and of their steady and soldier-like appearance. After the review, when the regiment was in close column, the Colonel called the Adjutant, Captain Lea, and Serjeant-Major Stoker to the front, and expressed his approbation of the manner in which the regiment had been drilled by them.

On Monday last the Prince of Saxe Leinigen, in company with several distinguished persons, visited Woolwich garrison, and, after viewing the extensive Government establishment, the dock-yards, Royal arsenals, and mortar-practice on Plumstead Marsher, returned to the garrison, where his Royal Highness was entertained by Lord Bloomfield and the officers of the regiment. On the same day the Prince of Oude paid a visit to Woolwich and examined the various establishments very minutely, and was highly gratified.

Assist.-Commissary General Geo. Maclean is appointed to proceed to Van Diemen's Land in charge of the Commissariat Department, and will embark the end of next month.

Anniversary of Waterloo.—On Tuesday evening the Duke of Wellington gave his annual banquet. On all previous occasions the nobility, friends of his Grace have been permitted to go over the apartments, and view the tables in the afternoon, as the dinner took place in the evening, but this time, to the many applications, the following circular was returned as an answer:—

"London, June —, 1839.—The Duke of Wellington presents his compliments to Justice to his servants and respect for his guests have always prevented the Duke from making a public show of his house on the day that he is to entertain company in it. He begs leave to decline to give any order of admission on the 18th instant."

Covers were laid for 74, but 60 only sat down to dinner. The following were among the guests:—Generals the Marquis of Anglesey, Lord Hill, Viscount Beresford, Hon. Sir Charles Colville; Lieut.-Generals Sir J. Kempt, Sir P. Maitland, Sir R. H. Vivian, Sir T. Reynell, Sir C. Halket, Sir E. Kerrison, Sir A. F. Barnard, Lord Harris, Sir H. Askew; Sir G. Quentin, Lord F. Somerset, &c.; Major-Generals Sir A. B. Clifton, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir C. B. Vere, Sir G. Scovell, Lord Saltoun, A. Macdonald, C. Hill, Sir W. Gomm, Sir E. Bowater, Sleigh, D'Oyly, H. Wyndham; Colonels the Hon. H. P. Townshend, Sir R. Gardiner, Sir De Lacy Evans, W. Drummond, Ellis, Lord M. Hill, Reeve, Sir J. Lambert, Sir J. May, Lord Sandys, Sir J. Clarke, &c. The party broke up at 11.

On Tuesday last, the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, a dinner was given at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, by Lieut. Siborn, the projector of the Model of the Battle of Waterloo, to all non-commissioned officers and privates who were engaged upon the field, and are yet serving in the different regiments in London. Trophies and flags were kindly supplied from the Tower, by the direction of the Master-General of the Ordnance, and the effect was characteristic and imposing. The veterans were in high glee, expressed themselves much pleased, and broke up shortly after 10 o'clock, warmed and elated, but in good order and perfect regularity. The band of the 2d regiment of Life Guards was in attendance, by permission, and played several beautiful and appropriate airs. Mr. Thomas presided, as the representative of Lieut. Siborn, whose official duties detained him in Ireland, and prevented the possibility of his meeting his guests upon the occasion. The following healths were proposed and responded to with rapturous acclamations. "Health and long life to Her most Gracious Majesty the Queen May she be blessed with a peaceful and prosperous reign, and may she ever be surrounded by Ministers, good and able men, desirous and capable of maintaining the privileges of the throne, and securing the constitutional rights of the people." —"Health and prosperity to his Grace the Duke of Wellington. Long may his life be spared to serve his country by wisdom and discretion in her councils, as his arm and valour have already defended her in the field." "Lord Hill, the Commander-in-Chief of the British forces." "Sir Hussey Vivian, the Master-General of the Ordnance." "The Marquess of Anglesey." "The Veteran Survivors of the glorious Field of Waterloo." Each of these toasts was preceded by an appropriate speech from the chair. The remarks respecting Her Majesty were replete with loyalty and attachment; but nothing could exceed the rapturous applause that followed a lucid exposition of the circumstances of the glorious field of Waterloo, and a refutation of those scandalous attempts which have been made to detract from the merits of the Duke, both in his military and political capacities. A request was made that the remarks respecting the Duke and the victory of Waterloo should be printed for the gratification of the soldiers. We hope that it will be complied with.

Military Commission.—The Duke of Wellington, Earl of Minto, Viscount Melville, Viscount Howick, Lord Hill, Sir Hussey Vivian, and other members, attended a meeting on Tuesday, at the office of Viscount Melbourne in Downing-street. The commission sat upwards of two hours.

On Tuesday there was a review in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, in commemoration of the 24th anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo. The following troops assembled on the Fifteen-acres, at twelve o'clock:—The Rl. Artillery, 6th Dragoons, 17th Lancers, 19th regt., 22d regt., 88th regt., 97th regt., and 60th depot. His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant arrived about one o'clock, and was received with a salute of twenty-one guns. The troops went through a variety of evolutions with admirable precision. Towards the close of the Review the Enniskillen Dragoons and the 17th Lancers make some brilliant charges across the line of Infantry. The poised lance and the heavy sabre coming in collision, excited considerable interest—though in bloodless fray. But we regret to state that two privates of the former fell from their horses in "the gallop up," and were somewhat hurt. The weather was favourable, and the spectators numerous, among whom were several fair equestrians. The review terminated at 4 o'clock.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Blakeney left Dublin on Thursday, on his tour of inspection of the troops in the eastern district. Major Foster and Capt. Bruce accompanied him.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith has been appointed to the Governorship of the Mauritius; and Sir Charles Metcalfe, whose high character and experience are well known from his important services in India, has been appointed Governor of Jamaica, in the place of Sir Lionel Smith.

Col. Reid, the new Governor of Bermuda, who arrived there early in April, has gone out as Civil Governor only, and not exercising Military authority. The command of the troops in the Bermudas consequently devolves upon Lieut.-Col. Robinson, 30th Regt., as senior Military officer. Lieut.-Col. Robinson is of 33 years' standing, and during that long period has seen much active service, and never been on half-pay.

The new cap for the Infantry is considerably lighter than the one now in wear. It is lower also. The peak projects horizontally, and in place of the brass scales are black leather straps passing under the chin. The cap-plate is reduced in size. At the back is an oil-case flap, to be let down in wet weather to protect the neck, and at the sides are vents to keep the head cool. The cap is ugly, but serviceable. It is to come into general wear next year.

The General Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to approve of Lieutenant the Honourable Howe Browne, of the 8th or King's Royal Irish Hussars, being appointed First Aide-de-Camp to his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in succession to Captain Williams, 24th regt., who has been appointed Master of the Horse.

A series of Courts-Martial has arisen at Madras out of the brutal misconduct of a sailor on board the ship Plantagenet on her voyage to Madras with troops in 1838. It appears that the sailor nearly knocked out the eye of a soldier of the 62d Regt., and shamefully beat him, and on Capt. Price, of H.M. 62d, interposing to stop the quarrel, the sailor d——d him, and threatened to serve him the same. The Captain of the ship, a mild and gentlemanlike man, stated his inability to give redress, the consequence of which was a division in opinion and a party spirit amongst the passengers and officers, which led eventually to three Courts-Martial. The first on Capt. Wood, of H.M. 39th Regt., who was tried on a charge preferred by Major Wright for being drunk on duty three days subsequent to the above mentioned dispute, on which charge he was fully acquitted. The second Court-Martial, on Lieut. Heriot, H.M. 55th Regt., on charges preferred against him by Maj. Wright, H.M. 39th Regt., 1st, for having sent to demand satisfaction in a duel from Major Wright, for his conduct when interfering as commanding officer of the troops on board the ship Plantagenet, to suppress a quarrel likely to arise from language made use of by Lieut. Heriot to Assist.-Surgeon Smith, H.C.S.; and 2d charge, for having, in reply to a communication from the Deputy Adjt.-Gen., requiring an explanation of his conduct as detailed in the first charge, asserted, that the said Major Wright had shaken his clenched fist at him on that occasion; he, the said Lieut. Heriot, never having, either directly or indirectly, on board the ship Plantagenet, brought the same to Major Wright's notice; and well knowing and believing at the time he made the aforesaid statement, that it was false and unfounded. Of the first charge Lieut. Heriot was found guilty, and of the second also, with the exception of the latter part "and well knowing and believing, &c." The Court remarked that the assertion of the prisoner in his letter to the Deputy Adjt.-Gen. was fully disproved. The third Court-Martial on Capt. Wood, H.M. 39th Regt., on a charge preferred against him by the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Peregrine Maitland, on his perusal of the minutes of the Court-Martial on Lieut. Heriot, for the evidence given on that occasion by Capt. Wood, on which charge Capt. Wood has been acquitted, but the Court-Martial and opinions of the Commander-in-Chief have not yet been promulgated. Nothing can be more explicit than Her Majesty's regulations with regard to the conduct expected from the crews and officers of ships in which troops are embarked, and the indentures of contract with the Hon. Company are also equally explicit, but the Captains of merchantmen generally complain of their legal inability to punish offences; so that if any of their officers or crew become insolent, and insubordination and drunkenness exist on board, confusion and disorder must be the inevitable result. It is not intended by this paragraph to convey the least reproach against the Captain of that splendid ship, the Plantagenet.

We (Montreal Gazette, 27th April) have much pleasure in publishing the following Address from the Ministers, Justices of the Peace, Officers of Militia, and other inhabitants of the county of Shefford, to Lieutenant-Colonel C. F. Head, commanding in that district, on the eve of that excellent officer's departure for England, with Col. Head's reply, which contains the best advice that a commanding officer can give to those over whom he is placed in authority:—

To Lieut.-Col. C. F. Head, Commanding Shefford District.

SIR,—We, the undersigned Ministers of Religion, Justices of the Peace, Officers of Militia, and Citizens of the county of Shefford, having heard of your sudden departure for England, beg leave to approach you with some expression of our unqualified esteem and regard. We offer you not, Sir, the trite phraseology of ceremonious formality, nor merely the respectful and sincere acknowledgments of the present assembly, hastily convened for the purpose of thus bearing public testimony to your moral worth and well-earned fame; but we reverberate the spontaneous sentiments and unsophisticated feeling of thousands of every origin, religion, and grade. We cannot review the past, and reflect on the secret machinations within, and the wicked combinations around, and turn our attention to the present state of things amongst us, without feeling grateful to an overruling Providence, and acknowledging your timely presence, under God, as mainly necessary in restoring public confidence, and maintaining public tranquillity. This happy effect, Sir, you accomplished, not vi et armis, but by the more mild, and perhaps not less effectual power of moral suasion. By urbanity of manners and condescension of department, with seasonable advice, you most effectually suppressed, if you did not entirely eradicate, every seed of personal animosity, and the puny growth of civil discord; whilst by zeal, assiduity, discretion, and the military assumption of the most commanding positions, you so opposed every incursion from without, as to leave our loyal volunteers little else to do than to learn the art of war, while they reaped the laurels of peace. You have, Sir, justly merited, and will carry with you wherever you go, the lasting gratitude of this loyal portion of Her Majesty's subjects, and the approbation of that Government you so faithfully serve; and although we deeply regret your departure and the loss of your society, experience and counsel, as well as the blessed effect which your consistent piety and uniform observance of religious duties must have, in general, wherever felt, we cannot but congratulate you on the near prospect of being again received into the affectionate embrace of your beloved family, and the quiet enjoyment of your English home;—long may it be regarded as our "Father Land;" its liberties and protection as our common birthright,—and may our connexion be cherished with mutual and increasing attachment! Thither may you have a prosperous voyage, and the protecting care of an Almighty arm. May much happiness await you, and blessings spiritual be your portion for ever.—Waterloo, Shefford, 20th April, 1839.

REPLY.

Accept, Gentlemen, my sincere thanks for the honour you do me, by thus publicly testifying your favourable opinion of my public conduct, and for the confidence and support you have in variably given me, in the execution of my duties. The comparative position of this section of the country at the present time, and in November last, certainly affords a cause for exultation, and I join with you in contemplating, with feelings of satisfaction, the reigning peace, and returning confidence, that now preside, where much alarm and distrust were but too well established. At the time first named, an infuriated French populace threatened one side of your district, whilst an equally deluded, and not less formidable, party, were arming on its United States Frontier; and, worse than all, a sworn gang of conspirators, leagued with your enemies, were working their infamous plans in the very heart of your country.—In this state of things, the Administrator of the Government, and the Commander of the Forces, offered you arms, and proposed military organisation; and the call was at once responded to. At a large county meeting, you unanimously resolved to uphold your Queen and the British Constitution, and to defend your country against internal and external attack. From that moment your disconcerted enemies saved themselves by flight, or sought refuge in the insignificance of their homes. In a few days it became my pleasing duty to communicate to head-quarters, that the county of Shefford was united, and safe from further danger; and by continuing to do your duty, as honourable and brave men and as loyal subjects, you gave me the means carrying out such measures as speedily brought on quiet, and restored confidence. As long as the same upright spirit continues to exist in these townships, and the same happy combination of parties ready to maintain the laws and to defend the country, be assured there will be no renewal of troubles, and I leave you, relying on your good sense to act on this principle, and with a full belief that you will meet a just recompense for such conduct by witnessing the rapid growth of prosperity these townships are capable of.

The report on Canada, now under discussion in the Imperial Parliament, will lead to important results; for the information contained will not be disregarded by persons desirous to benefit you. The report alluded to attributes the troubles amongst the French inhabitants mainly to a want of education, but with education there may still be a political and moral ignorance—so that knowledge, especially directed to this end, is still necessary to secure contentment and to maintain the Government; and I cannot forego this opportunity of saying, that in these townships the means of obtaining both the above are denied to a large portion of the people, until better provision is made, under present circumstances, there cannot be a more patriotic and laudable enterprise, than those persons possessing the ability, seeking opportunities to contribute to remove this evil. If benefit has attended my exertions, as you flatter me it has, I attribute success to the simple operation of explaining the just and mild laws of our country, and telling men their duty, and I have found no instance of persevering opposition where those have been made known. But as on one hand the isolated cottager is susceptible of good, on the other hand he is peculiarly exposed to the designs of evil men.

As respects the more personal and private allusions contained in this kind Address, I am at a loss to reply to them, and can assure you, that your expressions of approbation of my conduct and character will be cherished by me as valuable tokens of regard from men whom I respect, and who are too deeply interested in the occurrences of the times to be careless to what is passing. Gentlemen, if I have combined private beneficial acts with public duty, I trust the same spirit that has directed me will also afford me further means and the same desire to benefit others. Private affairs have for some time rendered my return to England an object when it could be done consistent with public duty, and I have the satisfaction of leaving you with such being the case. I thank you for your kind expressions concerning my family, and I trust no distant period will cause them, by my report, to appreciate, with myself, the kindness now exhibited towards us.

CONDITIONS OF ENLISTMENT IN THE COLONY OF THE BERMUDA ISLANDS.—Boys from fourteen years of age and upwards, and young men of good character, and able-bodied, will be enlisted, without distinction of colour, in order to be trained to arms, in conjunction with H.M.'s regular forces, to serve in this colony only. Their engagement in H.M.'s service is to be for life, but they will receive a temporary discharge from Military duty after three years, or a shorter period if thought fit, excepting for short annual periods of training, or when their services may be deemed necessary for the defence of the colony. During the period of training, as well as when called out, they are to receive pay, clothing, and allowances, like H.M.'s regular forces. Enlistment for the defence of the colony is not to prevent those enlisted, trained, and temporarily discharged, from engaging as seamen, or to have the right to leave the islands, equally with other natives not enlisted; but being within these islands, or its harbours, whenever their defence may be deemed to require their aid, or whenever they are required for periodical training, they are as enlisted soldiers, immediately to join the Queen's regular forces, of which they will constitute a part; and to place themselves under the Queen's officers, or incur the penalties they would be subject to by law. They are to be subject to whatever orders are given to them for attending the Military Schools, and such orders which may be deemed necessary for maintaining sobriety and good conduct. H. E. ROBINSON, Lt.-Colonel, Commanding H.M. troops, Bermuda. St. George's, Bermuda, May 3d, 1839.

East India Intelligence.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors was held at the East India House on Wednesday last, pursuant to the charter. The Chairman, Sir R. Jenkins, laid on the certain accounts and papers which had been presented to Parliament on the 25th March last. Sir C. Forbes complained that these accounts did not come down to so late a period as they ought, and as was provided for by one of their by-laws. The Chairman stated that the delay had arisen in completing the accounts in India, in consequence of steps which were necessary to be taken in winding up the commercial affairs of the Company. A portion of the accounts, too, which were put on board the Duke of Northumberland had been lost with that vessel.

The Chairman then acquainted the Court that the dividend warrants would be ready for delivery on Saturday the 6th July.

Sir C. Forbes said, it was at present of the greatest importance that the proprietors should know the real state of the financial affairs of India, especially as there was a war carrying on, the expenses of which ought to be borne by this country, and not by the East India Company. The Company had lost not less than 2,000,000*l.* in interest, in keeping up such large deposits in the different treasuries of India, the whole amount of which was not less than from 9,000,000*l.* to 10,000,000*l.* He hoped the finance accounts from India would be transmitted in future with more regularity. The Company might have paid off part of its debt with these deposits, and then, if they required a loan for political purposes, it could easily be obtained.—The Chairman assured the Court that the subject of obtaining the finance accounts regularly and speedily from India, was one which had occupied the anxious attention of the Court of Directors. He was also bound in justice to Lord Auckland to state, that the Governor-General had the same subject under his anxious attention. There were at the present time considerable sums in the treasuries in India, which he admitted were too large, but measures would be adopted to ensure a better arrangement for the future.

Mr. Poynder gave notice of the following motion—"That the petition of the clergy of Bristol and its vicinity addressed to the Court of Proprietors, and this day presented, praying that the Director's despatch of 20th Feb., 1833, may be carried into effect, be taken into consideration at the next quarterly Court."

Mr. Poynder wished to know if the Court of Directors had received any official particulars of a religious offering reported to have been made by the Governor-General at the heathen temple at Umritsir, on the occasion of his late visit to Runjeet Singh. The information was conveyed in a communication from a young officer who was present on the occasion in which it was stated that offerings were made to the temple.—The Chairman begged to state that the Court of Directors had not received any information on the subject, and he cautioned the Court of Proprietors not to pay attention to private reports of such a nature.

Mr. Poynder asked if the Court of Directors had any communication to make relative to Sir Peregrine Maitland. He (Mr. P.) happened to know, upon the best authority, that the despatch of the 8th August last, presented a most fallacious and unjust view of the circumstances which attended the resignation of Sir P. Maitland.—The Chairman replied that Sir P. Maitland was a Queen's officer, that he had tendered his resignation, which was accepted. The Court of Directors had nothing whatever to do with the resignation of Sir P. Maitland, or with his return to this country.

Mr. Montgomery Martin rose to submit a motion on the subject of the duties payable on various articles, the produce of British India, which was seconded by Sir Charles Forbes. It was understood that a requisition for a special Court for the above purpose would be drawn up and presented to the Directors.

Sir J. Bryant wished to know whether the office of Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India was vacant? He had heard a rumour to that effect, and also that Sir Thomas Reynells had been, or would be, appointed to fill the vacant situation. He likewise wished to know whether there was a probability of any of the Company's Officers ever being appointed to the command of the Indian Army. He did not wish that the Queen's Officers should be excluded from the command, but he thought that the Company's Officers ought to have a share of it.—The Chairman said he was not aware that there was any such vacancy at present as that alluded to. He had an opinion perhaps similar on the subject of one of the Company's Officers being appointed to fill that situation, but he was not called upon at present to discuss that question.

Sir C. Forbes then asked, "Are we at war or peace with Persia? Is there a Persian Ambassador in this country or not? Is he acknowledged? Have we an Ambassador in Persia, and is he acknowledged?"—The Chairman said it was not in his power to afford the Hon. Baronet any information on the subject beyond what had already been laid before the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston. [See also Parliamentary Report of last evening.]

Mr. Weeding said he was anxious to obtain some information relative to the overland communication with India. He wished to know whether any negotiations had been entered into with Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt, in order to secure a safe passage to India?—The Chairman said that he did not think any negotiation on the subject was at all necessary, as this country was on the most friendly terms with Mehemet Ali.

The efforts of the East India and China Association to obtain, through the Government, an arrangement with France, for the speedy and safe conveyance of the Indian mails between Alexandria and Calais, have proved successful. The convention concluded with the French Government stipulates,—That the correspondence between England and the East Indies shall be conveyed through France in plate-iron or tin cases, hermetically closed as regards India, or in sealed bags from England, under charge of a special messenger; and to be forwarded from Marseilles to Alexandria, and vice versâ, in steam-vessels of 160 horse power. To leave Marseilles on the 1st, 11th, and 21st of each month, and Alexandria on the 7th, 17th, and 27th of each month. The time to be occupied between Calais and Marseilles, 4 days 6 hours; and passage from Marseilles to Alexandria, 12 days 12 hours; and passage from Alexandria to Marseilles, 14 days 5 hours; making the time required for the outward mail between London and Alexandria 18 days, and for the homeward about 20½ days. The postage, therefore, of letters from London to India may be calculated at 3*s.* 1*d.* per single letter. The new arrangements to come into operation in two months from this time, or sooner if it can be effected.

The Iberia steamer, which arrived last Monday at Falmouth with the Mediterranean mails, brought intelligence that the letters from India had not arrived at Alexandria 27th May. The Hugh Lindsay steam-vessel, which was to have left Bombay 16th April, had not arrived at Suez 23d May.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

HON. EAST INDIA COMPANY'S DEPOT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I find by your paper of yesterday, that we are to be favoured with a visit from the Court of Directors, at which I am exceedingly gratified, as it will, if I am not much mistaken, prove of individual and general benefit. Visits of this class are generally looked forward to by all soldiers (from the private to the Colonel) as of interest;—the one calculating on praise for efficiency, personal appearance, &c., and the other as one of general congratulations (at least I suppose this to be the case here, though, having changed from the Queen's to the Company's, it may prove different). Having had some slight experience in matters of this kind in Her Majesty's service, I was somewhat surprised at the strength of the squads at drill; with the regiment I left, and where, as in other corps, the non-commissioned officer had no sinecure, 10, 15, or 20 men was a squad; but I here find 40, 60, and often 80. If Sir R. Jenkins is in possession of the Military tact he is reported to be, foregad he will stare at 800 being kept in order—drilled, messed, paid daily, and well looked after, by six or seven Serjeants: they have, it is true, three or four Acting-Serjeants, but from the uncertain and temporary nature of their situation (being pipeclay Serjeants), they have very little weight with the men. Different people have different ideas, even on the same subject, but having gained or imbibed mine in service, they may not perhaps coincide with those whose peregrinations have not exceeded the circuit of a depot.

It is a question with me, whether by giving a Serjeant too much to do, he will execute it so correctly as if he only had enough? whether it is likely to raise a non-commissioned officer in the opinion of recruits by "blowing him up," or "serving him out" on parade? whether the fortiter in re should not be accompanied by the suaviter in modo? whether those who command should or should not be a pattern of cleanliness, erect carriage, and soldierlike behaviour? whether, when a mess is complained of, it is most satisfactory to the party complaining, that those who are appealed to should "eat it up, rump and stump," by way of settling the point? This is "bolting (not blinking) the question." These are difficult points, which you, Mr. Editor, perhaps will solve, and thus greatly oblige a C.R.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF RECRUITS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Being a constant reader of the Naval and Military Gazette, my attention was attracted by some remarks which appeared in your paper of the 18th May, respecting the present system of medical examination of recruits. I perfectly agree with you in respect to the high importance you attach to a careful selection of recruits, especially at a moment so important as the present; and would even go farther, by urging that the same vigilance should be made to extend to the time of perfect peace, as well as to that at which there appears a certainty of our troops being employed in the active duties of the field.

It will, I presume, be at once admitted, that in the choice of men physically calculated for the active and efficient performance of Military duties, the Medical Officer acts a highly important part; and that the more he feels the high responsibility imposed upon him, and the more care higher authorities exert to ensure a strict fulfilment of this important duty, the more likely is the service to be benefited, and the greater credit is the person, who performs such a duty as it ought, likely to obtain. If the truth of this remark be admitted, as I hope it will, it appears to me evident that the now existing system of "double medical examination" of recruits, has a decided superiority over that which you propose as a substitute. The present system of "double medical examination" you condemn; and propose for adoption instead, one which would render the approval of a district Medical Officer final, and so place his opinion, I presume, (as you have not stated otherwise) beyond the reach of timely contradiction, merely because the vanity of such an officer is occasionally liable to be wounded by an exposure of his errors by a regimental Medical Officer, who may, or may not, be many years his junior in the service. While I advocate all due respect being paid to the feelings of those officers, yet, I apprehend, the degree of respect due to the feelings or opinion of any officer, of whatever experience or standing in the service, must, on certain occasions, have its limits, especially when, as in an instance like the present, an undue degree of influence would certainly operate against the general good. The adoption of the system you recommend would, I greatly fear, tend to engender carelessness and a feeling of irresponsibility, calculated by its results to reflect anything but credit on individuals, and to sow the seeds of self-destruction in the ranks of our Army. I am not altogether unacquainted with the operation of the existing system of "double examination" of recruits, and, more than once, have I seen recruits, approved in the first instance by District-Surgeons, by men too who pique themselves on being none of the least experienced or efficient Medical Officers of the Army, submitted to subsequent approval, with defects so glaring, that the simple consciousness of having passed them would have brought the blush of shame to the cheek of the merest tyro in the profession. To say that the rejection of those recruits was the result of mere whim or caprice, would be a miserable subterfuge; for I cannot believe that there is a Medical Officer holding a commission in the Army, who is capable of entertaining for a moment such base feelings towards a brother officer, or towards any other individual. On the contrary, I have ever evinced the strongest desire to give the primarily approving officer the benefit of any doubt which might exist respecting the case. Under these circumstances then, Sir, is, I would ask, the evil likely to be diminished by substituting that system you so strongly advocate? If such things occur while a check exists upon the opinion of a District-Surgeon, is the evil likely to be diminished by its removal? I should think not. Instead then of rendering the passage of a recruit to the ranks more easy than at present, I believe it would be more conducive to the benefit of the service, if the ordeal were rendered still more severe. In as few instances as possible perhaps, ought the decision to rest with an individual, and still less so with respect to district recruits. It is surely better that a tolerably efficient recruit should occasionally be rejected, than that men should be permitted to join by companies the ranks of regiments, whose bodily and constitutional defects would, on exposure to the usual duties of Military life, soon render them an incumbrance to the service. Actuated by no other motive than that both sides of the question should be fairly reviewed, I hope you will, on these grounds, give insertion to the above remarks. A Friend to the Service.

Edinburgh, 25th June.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—You will oblige a few of your readers and subscribers by stating in your next who are the Staff-Serjeants of a regiment, cavalry or infantry, the regulations we have not being explicit on the subject. Our list stands thus, but it has been disputed:—

Cavalry.	Infantry.
Regl. Serjeant-Major.	Serjeant-Major.
Farrier-Major.	Quartermaster-Serjeant.
Paymaster-Clerk	Paymaster Clerk
Hospital-Serjeant.	Hospital-Serjeant.
Armourer Serjeant.	Schoolmaster-Serjeant.
Saddler-Serjeant.	Armourer-Serjeant.
Schoolmaster Serjeant.	Orderly-Room-Serjeant.
Trumpet-Major.	Drum-Major.
Orderly Room-Serjeant.

Your's respectfully, J. C.

[If our correspondent's question refer to precedence, our only answer is that we believe none to exist, with the exception of the Serjeant-Major. As a matter of courtesy the Quartermaster-Serjeant would take precedence next to the Serjeant-Major, but in point of right the Senior Colour Serjeant takes Military rank next to the Serjeant-Major, and would command the regiment in his and the commissioned officers' absence. With reference to the other non-commissioned officers in the above list, they could not, under any circumstances, be in command, any more than a Medical Officer, a Quartermaster, or Paymaster, not holding another commission.—Ed.]

MILFORD HAVEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It appears to me the strangest thing in the world, that while the foreign packets can scarcely be kept afloat in Falmouth Harbour, that unrivalled port Milford Haven should be overlooked. There is every accommodation at that place for a packet station of any extent, and above all, a dock-yard adjacent, indeed I may say contiguous, where repairs and refits may be undertaken immediately on the arrival of the packets in port. Surely it only requires the attention of the authorities to be directed to these facts to have such a desirable object effected; I mean that of transferring the foreign packet station to Milford, and I know of no better means of accomplishing it than by the insertion of this in the columns of your widely-circulated Gazette.

The communication of "Moustache" has arrived by mere chance: it should have been addressed to the Editor.—We have no recollection of the letter of "A Serjeant-Major of the Militia."—"An East Indian" shall have attention.—We have this week addressed two packets to "T."

We beg to call attention to the Official Returns which we this day give of the Mates in Her Majesty's Navy on the 1st of January last, the dates of their examination for Lieutenants, and the ships in which they are serving.

In reply to "Nauticus," the Coast-Guard Inspecting Commander's appointments are not yet made.

We very much regret the unavoidable postponement of the letter of our able correspondent "Miles" till next week. "Chevron" has been received, and shall have attention.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1839.

WHAT is to be done for the Services by the Commission? is now the question which prefaces every conversation among Naval and Military men. From communications received this week, we greatly fear that the hopes so long deferred will be grievously disappointed, and that the Commission will not recommend any organic change in the present system of promotion. It is asserted, that the evils which exist cannot be remedied without very great expense to the country, and the Commission has been rigidly instructed to keep economy in view. Every beneficial change, not involving increased charge, will, we doubt not, be proposed, and probably effected; but we have excellent authority for stating, that "no very great change in the system of promotion has been found practicable, or even expedient: the sanguine will be sadly disappointed."

THERE is a certain code, known as the "Articles of War," which were drawn up expressly for the maintenance of discipline in our Military establishments, and by which our Army and Navy were formerly governed; but in these days of innovation—commonly called Reform—these regulations have been made a dead letter; and the misconduct of military men is made amenable to civil jurisdiction, rather than to the awards set forth in the military code. If this arises from the supposition, that the awards of punishment for crimes, as therein set forth, are too severe, let them be altered; but let the fiat of punishment emanate from a military tribunal, and the execution of it revert back into the customary channel. Soldiers should have nothing to do with Petty Sessions; the penitentiary and tread-mill are not places for such men. The barracks, the cells, and (if necessary) the halberds, will afford ample scope for punishment, and that too without the chance of contamination by intermixture with other miscreants.

But in these sympathising days, every leveller considers himself competent to sit in the judgment seat; and it stands to reason that men of equally gross habits will raise a cry of "arbitrary conduct" against those in authority. Hence we may trace the now common occurrence of shooting at non-commissioned officers, the Serjeants and Corporals; and the decisions, instead of meeting the award due to attempts at deliberate murder, have the sentence of death commuted to that of transportation, in order to keep pace with the affected humanity of the age. What is the consequence? Why, that every turbulent scoundrel, tainted with the prevalent principles of equality, spurns subordination, gives way to his mutinous feeling, and, if thwarted, plans the assassination of him whom he has devoted as his victim; feeling assured, that should he fail in his vengeful intent, his own life will not be forfeited; but willing to hazard the chance, in exchange for the diabolical success.

To the numerous instances previously on record, since this intermixture of civil jurisdiction with military discipline, we now have two recent occurrences of attempts on the lives of petty officers; the one occasioning the instantaneous death of a most meritorious man, and which will lead to the execution of the perpetrator; the other instance terminating in a severe wound upon a man fired at by mistake, or not intended to be hit, has ended in transportation only. If this continues, where is the non-commissioned officer who will dare to exercise his authority, or attempt to maintain the requisite discipline of the Army?

Complaints were made that soldiers, when scuffling, made use of their side-arms, and by command of the "sovereign people" the military are now made to display empty scabbards;—whereas, had soldiers, who were guilty of such misconduct, been made amenable to a Court-Martial, instead of a Petty Sessions tribunal, this dignified personage, "the people," would have had no cause for the exercise of its potential voice, and thus stigmatise the Army? To be consistent, then, "the Majesty of the people" must now interfere, and prohibit soldiers from carrying locks to their muskets, for if they can shoot a Serjeant, they can also shoot a magistrate or a constable, who may deem it his duty to enforce regularity of conduct; and it is the fashion to consider all men in the light of civilians, and that the code military shall have no influence over any, a doctrine quite congenial with the times. All insubordination in the Army has its source in a laxity of discipline, and the non-commissioned officers are the executives of the military code under the direction of their superiors: if, therefore, they are not supported by a rigid enforcement of the regulations of the service against those who set them at defiance, it will not be possible for them to do their duty with efficiency; and it must follow, that the Army will dwindle in time to absolute insignificance. The people should constitute one class, the Army another; the intermixture bodes no good in these times of anarchy and chartism; without a total separation of the two, how are we to be assured of the services of the latter, if called on to act against the former? True it is they spring from the people; but barrack habits, military discipline, and the duties of a soldier, soon obliterate the sentiments of equality, and a dignified pride induces them to despise an assimilation. Hence the soldiery consider themselves a distinct and superior body: this is more immediately and familiarly exemplified in the deportment of the new police force, as contrasted with that of former times.

Mercy is a benign attribute, and justly vested in the Crown; but in the exercise of the prerogative the greatest discretion should be observed, as mistaken lenity only tends to the subversion of intended good; and it is mistaken lenity to transfer the soldier from the ordeal of a Court-Martial to that of civil jurisprudence,—they are armed men, and require coercive restraints inapplicable to civil society

COMPLAINTS have been frequent of late respecting the operations of the Act 4 and 5 of William IV., cap. 52, commonly called "The Merchant Seamen's Fund Act," and we perceive that Sir Edward Codrington recently, in presenting a petition to the House of Commons, expressed his intention to bring the matter under the notice of the Legislature.

Our readers are aware that, for a century or more, all mariners employed in trading vessels belonging to British subjects were required to contribute sixpence per month, out of their wages, towards the maintenance of Greenwich Hospital.

That noble Institution was originally designed as an asylum for maimed and aged seamen, whether belonging to the Royal Navy or the Merchant Service; but as the effects of the wars we successfully engaged in, with but short intervals of peace, produced more claimants from the Navy alone than the funds created by the sixpences—augmented by forfeited wages, unclaimed prize-money, &c.—could maintain, rendering it frequently necessary to apply to Parliament for grants in aid; the seamen employed in merchant vessels derived little, in point of fact, no benefit whatever from their contributions.

For a length of time affairs went on thus. In war, when wages were high, the object of sixpence a month was a trifling consideration; and although the anomaly was sometimes complained of, even then, the payments were continued, and defended, on the principle, that as merchant seamen could not follow their calling in safety, wanting the protection of a powerful Navy, they were more interested than others in maintaining a fund for the relief of those maimed or wounded whilst serving in the fleet.

Others argued, that as the State thought proper to compel the service of seamen in war, and to assign them wages considerably less than what they could earn, if left at liberty to choose their employers, it became an obligation—a general obligation—on the country, every person in which was interested in the maintenance of our maritime supremacy, as the mainstay of our greatness and prosperity, to provide for these men when worn out in the service, or prematurely maimed, and rendered incapable of earning their living; for it is one of the inducements for a man to enter the Navy, and remain therein, that he is provided for in old age, but it is too bad that the fund required to maintain him should be exacted from his hard earnings.

All this produced its effect on the public mind. About 1832 or 1833, the grievance of contributing to a fund from which they had no prospect of benefit, now or hereafter, was loudly complained of. Many petitions were presented to Parliament, and in 1834 the Act alluded to was passed, annulling the contributions to Greenwich Hospital, but providing that, in lieu thereof, 2*s.* per month should be paid by Masters and Mates, and 1*s.* per month by common seamen, to a fund created for their exclusive benefit.

Under this statute, a Corporation, with President, Governors, Trustees, &c., was established, having power to allot from the stock subscribed, for the relief of disabled seamen, their widows, and children, &c., and also to build a hospital for the reception of pensioners.

Now, at the end of four years, the parties contributing complain, notwithstanding that the payments are strictly exacted, that they are nearly in as bad a position as before; for although the revenue collected is upwards of 50,000*l.* per annum, the allotments are quite inadequate, even for temporary relief. Cases have been published, when, after 48 years' service, the pension granted was only 4*l.* per annum; and, moreover, the difficulty of establishing the claim, and getting the smallest compensation, is scarcely worth the time and trouble expended in the attempt. Indeed, many assert, that were it not for the Benefit Societies of which they are members, and the gifts of charitable people, who have consideration for their distress when shipwrecked or in sickness, they would absolutely starve, although entitled to relief from a fund created by subscriptions exacted by law from themselves.

Whether this be the case or not, all will admit that very great dissatisfaction exists, as well as a general impression amongst seamen that they are not fairly dealt with; and this is what has induced us to notice the subject—for our mercantile marine we shall always esteem as the principal element of our Naval power.

When we consider that the seaman has everything provided—that after purchasing clothes, and allotting to his family, if he have any, his wages are disposable; it is evident he can, if so inclined, subscribe more largely and conveniently to a fund for his future support than almost any other class of persons in the State, who earn their bread by labour. But in order to induce him to this, it is imperative that he should not only have unlimited confidence in the security and the good management of the fund, but also that he should have some clear, some palpable perception of the benefits he becomes entitled to. For these reasons, we imagine the attempts hitherto made, and now making, by well-intentioned persons, to form societies with this view, will not succeed. A scheme for this purpose must be a general and comprehensive one, and, for many reasons which we will not now stop to notice, it should be under the control of Government.

We would, therefore, revert to Greenwich Hospital, and make that Institution what it was originally intended to be—a national asylum—a comfortable and happy asylum for all British mariners. There we have the ground-work and machinery of an establishment—a noble building, with Commissioners, Governors, Auditors, Secretaries, Treasurers, and Clerks, already provided. All that is required is, to increase the inferior departments, to establish branches, and, if need be, erect more buildings in the vicinity. Already Greenwich Hospital derives a considerable revenue from its estates—the forfeited estates of the rebel Lords—fines, unclaimed wages, and prize-money:—this might be augmented by appropriating a portion of treasure, freight, &c., and much may be calculated on from the donations and bequests of patriotic individuals connected with commerce.

A certain monthly contribution—say the same as at present—should be exacted from every mariner, and he should be secured a certain provision for life, either as in-door or out-door pensioner; those who choose to subscribe more largely should be entitled to, proportionately, increased allowance; and the establishment might embrace—schools, savings' banks, annuity payments to widows, and other advantages, on the most liberal scale of the best-managed benefit societies. Inspectors should visit branches established in the principal sea-ports, and villages might be built on healthy sites, for the accommodation of married pensioners.

We have hastily sketched an outline of such a plan as we think accomplishable, if experienced persons are employed to work out the details. Its advantages are, the confidence it would instil—that it would preserve the loyalty and nationality of our most valuable subjects, and induce them to remain at home, and under their own flag, where these advantages existed;—and our earnest hope is, that influential persons, like Sir Edward Codrington, who feel a disposition to reward and encourage our seamen, and spare neither time nor trouble in the endeavour, may direct their views to this rather than any isolated or partial measures, which all experience shows will never realise the extent which is necessary to their success. A little stimulus would induce the Government to take up the matter in earnest; and even should it be considered objectionable to graft this fund upon the Royal Hospital at Greenwich, an Institution might be formed in the port of London, with the necessary number of branches, which would, after a while, effect the same object. The present system has not given satisfaction, and we fear will never possess the confidence of seamen, without which they will not be induced to subscribe willingly, much less liberally, towards its maintenance.

The following infantry regiments will embark in the course of the present year for foreign service. We set them down in the order of their landing in England, but it does not follow as a consequence that they will embark in the same order. In this arrangement the rule often followed is that "the first shall be last, and the last first:"—96th, from America in Sept. 1835; Royals, 1st battalion, from West Indies in Jan. 1836; 7th, from Mediterranean in April, 1836; 25th, from West Indies in April, 1836; 38th, from East Indies in May, 1836; 42nd, from Mediterranean in August, 1836; 19th, from West Indies in August, 1836; 88th, from Mediterranean in Sept. 1836; Rifles, 1st battalion, from America in Sept. 1836; 97th, from Ceylon in Sept. 1836; 79th, from America in Oct. 1836. We have heard that the 96th will certainly proceed to New South Wales, and as certainly that the 7th Fusiliers will neither proceed to India nor to New South Wales.

In our remarks last week on the necessity of capital punishment for atrocious crimes, we find we have unintentionally been guilty of injustice (for so we suppose he would consider it) towards Colonel Maceroni. On again referring to his memoirs we perceive that he is "an enemy to the punishment of death altogether," and has on former occasions written against it. He would, however, substitute for it a punishment which most men would find more severe—perpetual hard labour in chains—in order that the caitiffs might thus afford a more lasting example, and at the same time benefit society by their labour. We differ from him wholly: we do not think mere example the only or chief desideratum in the punishment of atrocious malefactors. We think that they should be absolutely incapacitated either from offending in person, or instructing others to do so, which end can only be effected by removing them from a world which they pollute. We do not think the constant spectacle even of punished vice desirable for our youth to contemplate; and, with regard to their labour, whilst there are thousands out of employ, and we are sickened with cant about "surplus population," to thin which many of the individual clamourers for the abolition of hanging would suffer numbers guilty only of poverty to starve, why should we deprive the honest and willing from healthy employment, merely to inflict on the vicious punishment intolerable but for the chance of escape?

However, whatever may be Colonel Maceroni's opinions on this head, his testimony is good as to the facts, that capital and inevitable punishment will in a very short space of time almost eradicate the crime of murder, even in regions where it has so long flourished as to have become a national reproach: whilst that some kind of severe and certain punishment is necessary to effect this desirable end, he at least concedes; the means he proposes (being more severe than death itself) proving him not one of those philanthropists who would coax assassins to abstain from murder.

The standard of recruits for the regiments in Australia has been reduced from five feet six inches to five feet five and a half inches, which is the same standard as for the corps serving in India. This is one of the many most judicious alterations lately made in the Recruiting Department. We would very respectfully suggest, that at the end of one year, from the dates of the orders for lowering the standard to five feet five and a half inches in the regiments serving in India and Australia, that all recruits enlisted at that height should be re-measured, in order to ascertain the expediency or inexpediency of the measure. We have no doubt that the average height of those men will then be found to be at least five feet six and a half inches. Some old and experienced officers have informed us that it is a fact well known in every regiment, that the grenadiers are seldom enlisted as such—but are composed of men who have grown to the required standard while in the battalion companies. We would gladly learn that the reduced standard of five feet five and a half inches was limited to recruits under twenty years.

We have no knowledge of the "affair" of Lady Flora Hastings, except from the published statements of her own relatives, which we are bound to consider as correct, as they have not been contradicted. We have no interest whatever in the matter, except that it is one connected with the Service, as Sir James Clark is a Naval Surgeon, and that, as lovers of justice, we would warn the public against being led astray, even through the best feelings of our nature. Sir James Clark has remained silent, and his silence may be held as pleading guilty to the charge, but the delicacy of his situation ought to be recollected, and the continuance of the confidence of his Royal Mistress ought to be a pledge to the public, that he has done nothing which was not imperative upon him as a professional man. His friends (we suppose in compliance with his wishes) have also been silent, and we would have followed their example, but that a medical [redacted] the utmost importance, is involved [redacted]ion. To grapple at once with the [redacted]end that, in all suspicious cases (as [redacted] or moral character of the party be what [redacted] no medical man of character can prescr[redacted] without an examination, no matter whether such suspicions have arisen from his own observation, from intelligence from others, or from both in conjunction. Under such circumstances, it is his duty to dismiss from his mind all considerations connected with the rank or character of the lady (unmarried though she be), and ascertain the real nature of the case before he prescribes.

Were a physician in good practice to confine his suspicions only to the loose and dissolute, and depend upon the "ipse dixit" of those of good moral repute, he could (we are sorry to say) scarcely expect to steer long clear of the commission of a much more heinous crime than the raising a blush upon the cheek of the most virtuous female in Great Britain. We have upon this subject the high authority of Professor Hamilton, of Edinburgh, as well as that of the best authors upon such subjects. Ladies are severe critics upon their own sex, and, like all keen-sighted people, they are apt to see things that never existed, except in their own imaginations; but the idea of a conspiracy to ruin the reputation of Lady Flora is too ridiculous to be entertained for a moment. If any such wickedness had been intended, no examination would have been proposed, and the suffering party would have been left in ignorance of the accusation, whilst the tongue of scandal would have been busy with her fair fame.

We would also ask any person of common sense, if he thinks there is to be found a physician in Great Britain such a compound of rogue and fool, as to lend himself to such an intrigue, and at the same time press upon the party the certain means of vindication. If we are correct in the principles we have laid down (and we challenge the profession to refute them), Sir James Clark did nothing but his duty; and, upon Lady Flora's refusal to submit to an examination, his acquainting the Duchess of Kent with the circumstances was also a paramount duty, as standing in "loco parentis" to Lady Flora. What would have been said of the Court and Sir James Clark, if he had been called in to see a young lady really "enceinte," and had, either from want of caution or design, brought on abortion? Would not the Court have been considered (if it had become known) a den of lasciviousness, and the physician held up to public detestation, and a parallel sought for his crime, only amongst the professional poisoners of the lower empire?

We have long and zealously advocated the claims of Her Majesty's regiments serving in India to a relief from their tropical service in a less period than TWENTY years. The grievance is one admitted and deplored, but to so low an ebb has the Army been reduced, and so injurious to its efficiency for the relief of corps from foreign stations, has the depot system proved, that the regiments which went abroad in 1819 have not yet been all relieved, nor does the means at present exist of relieving them. It is true that there are many regiments now in England which have lately been withdrawn from Ireland, but who will say that these regiments can be spared, in the disturbed state of this country? We sincerely believe that an anxious desire to relieve regiments from India, at a much shorter period of service than they now perform, has long prevailed at the Horse Guards, but unforeseen circumstances have arisen to prevent the contemplated arrangements from being carried into effect. Even one regiment cannot be sent to India, though the demand for European troops is most urgent. The 13th Light Dragoons and the 16th and 54th Foot are still in India, nor is it certain that the 13th Light Dragoons can be spared on the arrival of the 15th Hussars to relieve them—nor that the 54th will return home, though the 21st Fusiliers landed in Madras in March last as their relief. The 16th, we fear, must also remain in India at least another year. These three corps have been abroad since 1819!

We have much satisfaction in giving publicity to some Resolutions relative to a Monument to be erected in Ceylon to the memory of the late Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Barnes, an Officer of whom the Army was justly proud.

We believe it is intended to convene a meeting of the surviving friends of the late General, for the purpose of entering into subscriptions to erect a Monument to his memory in this country.

Of the services of Sir Edward Barnes (having recorded them at the period of his lamented demise), we shall therefore briefly state, that in his early career he was an Officer of note in the West Indies, and that he assisted at the capture of some of the islands: he commanded a brigade at the chief battles of the war in the Peninsula. At the battle of Waterloo he held the important post of Adjutant-General, and was severely wounded. Subsequently he was distinguished by his judicious civil and military administration in Ceylon and the East Indies.

A monumental trophy to such a man will confer honour on the Army and the country, as well as on the memory of the departed soldier.

AT a meeting of several friends and admirers of the late Lieut.-General Sir Edward Barnes, G.C.B., &c. &c., held on Wednesday the 19th instant, at 105, Piccadilly, the Right Honble. Sir Robert Wilmot Horton, Bart., G.C.H., &c., late Governor of Ceylon, in the chair, the following Resolutions, which had been passed at a public meeting in the Island of Ceylon, on the 28th of May, 1838, His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor in the chair, were read:—

1st—Resolved, That the most appropriate mode of perpetuating the respect and very high estimation in which the late Gen. Sir Edward Barnes was held in this colony, and of acknowledging the important services he rendered to Ceylon during his Government, is, to erect at Colombo some durable Monument whereon to record these sentiments.

2d—Resolved, That subscription lists be circulated restricting the maximum subscription to 10*l*, but, in order to afford to all classes an opportunity of contributing, not prescribing the amount of the minimum subscription.

3d—Resolved, That the following gentlemen be appointed a Committee in Ceylon to collect subscriptions, and that they be requested to submit, for approval of a future general meeting of subscribers, such measures for adoption as may secure the execution, in England, by Sir F. Chantry, or some other eminent sculptor, of a suitable Monument to the memory of Sir Edward Barnes:—Mr. Anstruther, Mr. Turnour, Lieut.-Col. Charlton, Capt. Devell, Capt. Skinner (the last-mentioned officer to act as Secretary in Ceylon).

4th—Resolved, That these Resolutions, with subscription papers, be sent home, to be laid on the tables of the United Service Clubs, the Army Club, and for general circulation, that the friends of the late Sir Edward Barnes in Great Britain may have an opportunity of testifying their respect for his memory.

5th—Resolved, That the chairman be requested to communicate these Resolutions to Lady Barnes, with the expression of the deep sympathy and condolence felt by this meeting, and by all the friends of the late Sir Edward Barnes in this colony, for the irreparable loss sustained by herself and her family on this melancholy occasion.

6th—Resolved, That the Committee be instructed to request of the Right Hon. the Governor to sanction the printing, at the Government Press, the proceedings of this meeting in the Singalese and Malabar languages, in order to afford the native inhabitants, for whose information they are to be circulated, an opportunity of joining in the tribute to be offered to the memory of the late Sir Edward Barnes.

7th—Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Right Hon. the Governor, for his obliging and cordial co-operation in the proceedings of the meeting, and for his Excellency's able conduct in the chair.

T. SKINNER, Secretary.

It was thereupon moved, and carried unanimously—

1st—That this meeting observes with great satisfaction, from the above Resolutions, that the inhabitants of Ceylon have lost no time in marking their high respect for Sir Edward Barnes, by proposing the erection of a monument to his memory within the island, whose resources he was first to develope, and whose rising fortunes it was his pride to foster.

2d—That this meeting cordially approves of an object so creditable to its projectors and so honourable to the deceased officer, and pledges itself to use every effort to promote it by the collection of an auxiliary fund for that purpose in this country.

3d—That, from information laid before this meeting, it appears that the sum of 400*l*., in addition to the fund already raised in Ceylon, will be sufficient to complete the proposed Monument in an adequate manner.

4th—That for this purpose a subscription be entered into in this country, limiting the amount of individual contributions, as in Ceylon, to 10*l*.

5th—That subscriptions be received by Mr. Downes, Army Agent, Warwick Street, Charing Cross.

A vote of thanks having been passed to the chairman, the meeting adjourned to Saturday the 29th inst., at two o'clock in the afternoon, at 105, Piccadilly.

The Court.

On Thursday evening Her Majesty honoured the Marquess and Marchioness of Westminster with her company, at Grosvenor House. The Queen held a Court yesterday. The Bishop of Peterborough was presented in the royal closet, and did homage.

Her Majesty will hold a Levee at St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, the 26th inst., at 2 o'clock.

The Duchess of Gloucester gave a divertisement on Tuesday afternoon, to her youthful niece, the Princess Mary of Cambridge. Her Majesty the Queen came, accompanied by the Princess of Leiningen, and the youthful Prince her son. The Duke of Sussex, Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Princess Augusta, and the Princesses Augusta and Mary of Cambridge, formed the royal party. There was a dance. The company included many of the nobility, and there were upwards of 150 of the younger members of families of distinction. The party assembled at three o'clock, and broke up shortly before seven. The Queen Dowager came in the morning to see the arrangements, but was not present at the petite fête.

Progress of the Ballot since 1833 —

In 1833	For the Ballot	106
	Against it	211
1835	For the Ballot	146
	Against it	309
1836	For the ballot	88
	Against it	139
1837	For the Ballot	157
	Against it	267
1838	For the Ballot	200
	Against it	317
1839	For the Ballot (including Tellers)	218
	Against it	345

Thus it appears that the majority on Tuesday night is only 16 more than in 1835, while the minority is increased 72.

Sir James Graham emphatically affirmed that "he had never, in the whole course of his life, voted for the Ballot, or ever advocated the Ballot. He had constantly refused to support it, &c., &c." And we affirm as emphatically that there stands his name, James Graham, in his own handwriting, to the solemn recommendation of the Ballot to King William IV.'s Cabinet. Denied it by implication and inuendo he has; let him deny it directly if he dare. He cannot rail the signature from that bond. He cannot redeem the forfeiture incurred by his speech on Tuesday night. No, not if he were willing to cut his heart out to pay the penalty. There they stand; the damning characters burning into him, like the letters of fire that blasted the sight of ancient honour "fallen from its high estate," and emblazoned its shame on the eternal pages of history. "I always hated the Ballot, witness my heart, James Graham." So goes one testimonial; and the other, "I recommend the Ballot, witness my hand, James Graham."—Morning Chronicle.

On Monday, despatches, dated June 7, were received at the Colonial department from Gibraltar; dated May 30, from Malta; and dated May 24 from the Ionian Islands; dated April 20, from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope; also despatches, dated Feb. 22, were received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India. On Thursday, despatches were forwarded from the India Board, for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India. Despatches, dated May 14th, were received at the Colonial Department, from the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands.

The final adjudication on the Nelson monument case will take place by the Committee this day. We have elsewhere offered some further remarks on this interesting topic.

The Duke of Cambridge left Cambridge House on Thursday afternoon, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Cardigan at Canterbury. After inspecting the noble Earl's fine regiment, the 11th Lt. Dragoons, His Royal Highness intends to proceed to Maidstone, and then return to town.

Mr. Edward Hobhouse, brother of Sir John Hobhouse, has been appointed one of Her Majesty's Ushers Quarterly Waiters in Ordinary, in place of Lord de Roos, who has resigned.

The Marquess of Anglesey, with his sons Lords Alfred and George Paget, are shortly going to Russia, on a visit to the young Czarowitch. The aquatic part of the excursion will be performed in his Lordship's own yacht.

Lady Flora Hastings is labouring under severe and alarming illness. The Duchess of Kent, as she has been exceeded by none in her anxieties, so has she been unremitting in her attentions to the afflicted lady. Her Royal Highness and her whole household were in consequence absent from the drawing-room on Thursday.

A Military Officer, the brother of an Irish Peer, is said to have been detected in concealing or marking a card in play at one of the Clubs, and that the subject has been brought under the notice of the Commander-in-Chief, who has instituted an inquiry, the result of which has not been yet suffered to transpire.

The Eglinton Tournament.— The Knights and Esquires already enlisted meet at St. John's Wood Barracks every Tuesday evening for practice. The fete, it is expected, will cost Lord Eglinton twenty thousand pounds. It takes place in August next.

On Saturday, a numerous meeting of the friends of Poland was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street. The Duke of Sussex, who was in the chair, addressed the meeting at great length in behalf of the Poles; several resolutions were carried unanimously, and a subscription was entered into.

United Service Institution.—On Monday evening (the last meeting of the season), Mr. Snow Harris exhibited experimental illustrations of natural electrical phenomena, forked and sheet lightning, the aurora boreulis, &c.—Mr. Bucknell was present with his artificial process of incubation; and Mr. Forsyth explained the principle of the patent safety-gun, which cannot be discharged until brought to the shoulder.

United Service Benevolent Institution.—The grand fancy dress ball last night, at Willis's Rooms, was a very splendid affair. Several of the foreign ministers were present, with their ladies, as well as a great number of Naval and Military officers, in full uniform, which, with the splendid fancy costumes of some of the ladies, had a most brilliant effect. Many of the nobility, including several officers of the two services, had been for some time indefatigable in their exertions to "get up" this assembly with suitable splendour, and the result was one of the most brilliant and agreeble re-unions of the season.

Metropolitan Police.—It appears from official documents furnished by the Commissioners from 1830, the period when it was embodied, that the average number of officers in the force is 3,300 in the 17 divisions, making an average of 195 men, the smallest, or A, containing 116, and the largest number in the K division being 290. There are every year received 1,100 new members; the number resigning or discharged being 1,068, and those who die annually being 38. Of those admitted, two-thirds are of the ages between 20 and 31, and the remainder from that age to 38. Being a selected body, the value of life is above the usual average, and the tendency to fall is counteracted by the constant discharge of the unhealthy. The bodily labour is considerable, each walking on the average 20 miles per day, which with attendance at police-offices may be estimated as 25. Out of the 17 districts, the most healthy are those of Whitehall, Westminster, and Kensington, and the least healthy are Holborn, Finsbury, and Hampstead. Out of the whole force, two and three-quarters per cent. are always sick; in the least healthy on the average of twelve days and three-quarters, and the most healthy six and three-quarters per man. The maximum illness was in January, and the minimum in June and July, with the exception of epidemical seasons, when there is a slight variation. The rate of mortality is proved to be of the same character regarding the months as at the most popular benefit societies.

Italian Opera.—Mademoiselle Pauline Garcia appeared last Saturday in Cenerentola, and has given a much higher impression of her powers than she did in the part of Desdemona. Except in her sister, the lamented Malibran, we recollect no artiste who has given promise at so early an age of so decided a nature, and if what she has yet to do in point of cultivation is carefully matured, so as to save her from that extravagance which was Malibran's only fault, she will not be, as a singer, at all her inferior, and must necessarily acquire high consideration in all the theatres of Europe. Even in point of feeling, apart from the mechanism of the art, and constituting its only permanent attraction, we are disposed to form equally great anticipations of Mademoiselle Pauline. There is little room, however, for its display in Cenerentola, and her manner in this performance was subdued rather than otherwise, but the whole regulated by a pure and sound taste. The opera, however, afforded abundant means of distinction, but none greater than in the finale of the second act, both her solos in it being honoured by an encore. In the tours de force, with which they abound, none was more conspicuous than her descent of the scale for a double octave, every note of which was as pure and distinct as a clarionet. The curtain fell amidst a thunder of applause. The Queen and the Duchess of Kent were present.

Mr. Kollman's Concert.—Mr. Kollman gave his fourth concert on Wednesday morning at the Hanover-square rooms. It was attended by a brilliant and overflowing audience; in fact the rooms were so full, that great numbers were obliged to obtain seats in the orchestra for want of other places. Miss Birch was more than usually delightful in Weber's scena, "Softly sighs," as was Miss Dolby in Beethoven's difficult aria, "Per pieta non dirmi addio;" and as for Giubilei, he was excellent in everything. In the accompaniments to the vocalists, as well as in various instrumental concerted pieces, Mr. Kollman proved himself to be a brilliant as well as skilful musician. With regard to the piano-fortes invented by him, the statement that they are particularly adapted for tropical climates, in consequence of an improved method for retaining them well in tune, deserves the attention of musical purchasers.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, June 17.—Lord Brougham having moved the third reading of the Beer Act in Part Repeal Bill, found himself rather hard pressed, without receiving the support of the Bishops, on which he had calculated. His Lordship indulged in the following observations:—"But the fact was, although their Lordships were very anxious about the privileges of the people, there was one other matter which, just about this period of the evening, they generally had deeper at heart—something more intimately connected with the nobler parts and functions of many of their Lordships [a laugh]—and it was not the lay Lords only of whom it was true: there was the Right Reverend Bench [a laugh]. The Right Reverend Prelates were the especial guardians of the morals of the people, and had implored him to come forward in their behalf in this matter. He had yielded to their wish—he had consented to become their tool—he had brought forward this measure; and now, out of the twenty-six Right Reverend Prelates, two only had sacrificed their dinner [a laugh],—their love for their bellies—their belly, which was their god!"

The Marquess of Salisbury rose to move that the words be taken down; but the Noble and Learned Lord, professing that he had no objection to repeat the words, contrived, with some dexterity, to put their Lordships on a wrong scent, till the time had gone by for taking the words down. The Bill was ultimately recommitted.

FRIDAY, June 21.—Lord Lyndhurst presented a petition from Mr. Burge, praying to be heard at the bar against the Jamaica Bill.—Lord Brougham presented a petition from certain West India planters and merchants, praying to be heard by Counsel against the same Bill.—The petitions led to a long discussion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 17.—The House proceeded to take into consideration the second report of the select committee on the case of privilege involved in "Stockdale v. Hansard," the debate thereon occupying the whole night. Lord J. Russell moved a resolution, declaratory that, under the special circumstances of the case, it was not expedient to adopt any further proceedings for the purpose of staying the writ, &c.; but that, the circulation of the printed Parliamentary Papers being conducive to the public interest, the House would consider measures requisite to be adopted, in consequence of the result in the case of "Stockdale v. Hansard," for the maintenance of the power of the House, after the committee had completed their inquiries, and made their final report.—Mr. Warburton moved, as an amendment, a resolution declaratory of the expediency of enforcing the privileges now.—Sir R. Peel, the Attorney General, Mr. Sergeant Wilde, Mr. Pemberton, Sir R. Inglis, and Lord Howick, took part in the debate.—The House divided—for the resolution 184, for the amendment 166, majority 18. The House then divided on the second resolution, when the numbers were for it 132, against it 36, majority 97.

TUESDAY, June 18.—Merchant Seamen.—Sir E. Codrington presented a petition, signed by a number of Merchant Seamen, complaining of the deduction now made from their monthly wages for the support of Greenwich Hospital, under certain acts of Parliament, and praying for inquiry.

Danish Claims.—Mr. Cresswell moved an Address to Her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to direct the commissioners, to whom it was referred, to examine the claims of certain British subjects, in respect of losses sustained by the seizure of ships and cargoes by the Danish Government in 1807, to proceed to adjudicate upon the claims which they have received, and upon which they have made a report to the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the motion.—It was carried by Ayes, 95; Noes, 32.

The Ballot.—Mr. Grote moved for leave to bring in a bill "To provide that the votes at election for members of parliament to be taken by way of ballot."—Lord Worsley seconded the motion.—Mr. Gaskell opposed it, as calculated alike to affect the morals and the constitution of the country.—Mr. Macaulay supported the motion, contending that, however, he only pledged himself to support the principle of secret voting, as the only specific remedy for intimidation.—They were followed by Mr. Milnes, Lord J. Russell, Mr. Shell, Sir J. Graham, Lord Howick, Sir R. Peel, and Mr. Grote (in reply).—The house divided—Ayes, 216; Noes, 323—Majority, 117 against the motion.

WEDNESDAY, June 19.—The Jamaica Enactments Bill was read the third time, on the motion of Lord J. Russell, after which Mr. Goulburn moved the omission of the three first words of the first clause of the bill.—After some discussion thereon the house divided—for retaining the clause as it stood, 267, against, 227; majority in favour of the clause, 10. The bill was of course passed.—The adjourned debate on the subject of Education was resumed, Mr. Wyse opening the renewed discussion. He was followed by Mr. Colquhoun, Mr. C. Buller, Mr. Acland, and Sir S. Lushington.—On motion of Mr. D'Israeli the debate was adjourned until the next day.

THURSDAY, June 20.—The adjourned discussion on the National Education Plan was resumed, Mr D'Israeli opening the debate, followed by Mr. Ewart, Mr. Plumptre, Sir G. Staunton, Mr. G. Knight, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Gladstone, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir J. Graham, Lord J. Russell, and Sir R. Peel.—The house then divided—for the original motion, 280; for the amendment, 274; Majority, 6

FRIDAY, June 21.—The Deptford Pier Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. Cayley moved the second reading of the Redcar Harbour Bill, which led to an extended debate. Eventually the House divided—for the Bill 32, against it 114.

Affairs of Persia.—Lord Palmerston, in answer to a question from Mr. Mackinnon, said, that the difference which existed was very far short of an absolute rupture. Sir John M'Neill was at home on leave, which had been granted to him, before the occurrence which gave rise to the retirement of his successor. The chargé d'affaires had withdrawn from the territories of Persia on account of difficulties which arose with the Shah, and was ordered to remain at Erzeroum, the nearest point to the Persian frontier, for the express purpose of being at hand to receive any communication which might be made. On the other hand the Persian Government had sent an Ambassador to this country, but he had been told that he could not be received until the differences between the two countries were arranged. Sir J. M'Neill was subject to the regulations which existed in other instances, and his salary would be reduced one half during his absence. The chargé d'affaires did the duties and received the salary of the envoy. With regard to the affair at Bushire, no difficulty had been experienced by Sir F. Maitland as to his landing, and after his landing he had an amicable communication with the Government. The difficulty was as to the manner in which he should embark. The Governor insisted that the embarkation should take place at the Custom House quay instead of at that which was opposite to the residence; and Sir F. Maitland having been informed that an indignity was intended to be offered to him which he ought not to submit to, insisted on embarking at the quay opposite the residence. He had taken measures of precaution, and had the boats of the Wellesley ready, and shots were exchanged. He, however, embarked as he had announced his intention to do, and, in consequence, the Resident of the East India Company had accompanied the Admiral to the Island of Karek. A communication was afterwards made on the part of the Government of Fars, and when the last accounts left, Admiral Sir F. Maitland was going back to Bushire, to have some communication with the authorities upon the subject.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

Spain.—Gen. Espartero is raised to the rank of a grandee in Spain, with the title of Duke de Vittoria. Despatch from the Spanish Ambassador residing in Paris to the Consul of Spain in Bayonne:—

"I hasten to inform you that the French Government has just made known to me, that it has resolved to reinforce its Naval stations along the coast of Spain, for the purpose of preventing the landing of men and warlike stores for the enemies of Her Majesty. The French ships of war are hereafter, in conjunction with our vessels, to watch the coasts, and to be placed at the disposal of our competent maritime authorities, in order to be employed in securing the communications between the different harbours, in facilitating the Military operations, in transporting troops and ammunition, and in obstructing, by timely executed movements, those of the partisans of Don Carlos."

Portugal.—General Macdonald has been arrested at Oporto, in consequence of a telegraphic despatch from Lisbon. He had been searched, and also his lodgings, but nothing was found tending to criminate him in treasonable purposes. The charge against him was for organising a revolution at Lisbon, Braga, and Oporto, which was to have broken out simultaneously. The passport by which he travelled was in the name of Mowbray. It is said that he will be detained for some time, to be confronted with Gen. Cordova.

Canada.—The peaceable are fast leaving the colony, and coming to the United States. Sir George Arthur is returning to England, and the whole province seems to have lost their senses. Their last outrage is on a United States vessel, that touched at Brockville. The 16 000 British regulars can hardly keep them in order.—New York Herald. 25th May.

Cape of Good Hope.—Accounts have come to hand to the latter part of April. No further hostilities had taken place after the retreat of the emigrant farmers, as mentioned in the Government Gazette of 1st Feb. last, and a convention concluded between the Zoola chief and the emigrants, by which the former agrees to restore the horses, cattle, and arms of the latter, and relinquishes for their use the country south-west of the Togala river. The emigrants were healthy, and did not appear to have suffered from want; so little, indeed, that a quantity of rice, landed at Natal, had been shipped again for Cape Town.

SONNET.

Farewell! it is a common word, and day
By day is uttered by the multitude:
But when in that one breath doth pass away
The vital hope that had our life endued
With love of life, filling with noble thought,
And glorious action, that which else had been
A dream obscure;—when from that word is wrought
An agony that, to the world unseen,
Within the core of the bereaved heart,
Like fire doth quiver, and like ice congeal;—
When, to survive in their own sphere apart,
It sunders two betrothed souls,—the soul
Of thought for no use farther marks it, save
To syllable sweet love into the grave!

Voyages of the Adventure and Beagle. 3 vols. 8vo. With Appendix. H. Colburn.

This truly valuable work is the result of nearly ten years' voyaging, for surveying and other scientific purposes, partly on coasts little known, of H.M.S. Adventure and Beagle, between the years 1826 and 1836, describing an examination of the southern shores of North America, and the Beagle's circumnavigation of the globe. The narrative is divided into three parts: the first, Vol. I., by Captain Philip Parker King, containing the results of the first expedition between 1826 and 1830, and principally confined to the southern coasts of South America, with a minute account of Patagonia and Fierra del Fuego, and their inhabitants; the second part, Vol. II., by Captain Robert Fitzroy, giving the proceedings of the Beagle during the second expedition, from 1831 to 1836, comprising the completion of the former surveys of the southern coasts of South America, and Captain Fitzroy's observations in circumnavigating the globe; and the third part, Vol. III., by Charles Darwin, Esq., M. A., Secretary to the Geological Society, who accompanied Captain Fitzroy as Naturalist, comprising his observations during the second expedition. The Appendix is a half volume, containing a great variety of papers on scientific subjects connected with the voyages.

These volumes may, therefore, in some degree, be considered as three separate works appearing simultaneously on the same subject, and, for the vast extent of new country described—the importance of the discoveries disclosed—the value of the information conveyed—and the results to science to be deduced from the observations of men of such intelligence and discrimination, we know of no work of modern times of greater public utility, or that sheds more lustre on the enterprise and hardihood of the British character. Through the indefatigable exertions of the officers and seamen on these fatiguing and dangerous expeditions, the southern shores of South America, hitherto but imperfectly known, and the intricate coasts and intersecting channels of Fierra del Fuego, hitherto almost a terra incognita, are now as clearly defined and set down in the charts as any bays and channels whatever in the most frequented parts of the world; and the aborigines of Patagonia and Fierra del Fuego, of whom we have had no written accounts for upwards of sixty years, and of whose present state we were entirely ignorant, are now rendered as familiar to us as it is possible to understand a people from a mere coast acquaintance, and speaking an unknown language; with such particulars of their habits, ceremonies, laws, superstitions, and religion, as could be gathered under such circumstances. To dilate, however, upon all the important discoveries and observations made during these voyages, would require more time and space, and a greater degree of minute attention, than in our limits we can possibly afford; and as they are written principally in the shape of journals of each day's proceedings, we can do little more than merely cull here and there, from either volume as it may best suit us, such facts and observations as we may consider most likely to interest our readers.

The natives of Patagonia first seen were in Gregory's Bay, at the entrance of the Second Narrow in the Strait of Magellan, who received the advances of the strangers without the least distrust.

"They were eight or ten in number," says Captain King, "consisting of an old man, his wife, three young men, and the rest children, all mounted on good horses. The woman, who appeared to be about 50 years of age, was seated astride upon a pile of skins, hung round with joints of fresh guanaco meat and dried goose flesh. They were all wrapped in mantles, made chiefly of the skins of guanacoes (llamas), sewed together with the sinews of the same animal. These mantles were large enough to cover the whole body. Some were made of skins of the 'zorillo' or skunk (an animal like a pole-cat, but ten times more offensive), and others of skins of the puma, or South American lion.

"The tallest of the Indians, excepting the old man, who did not dismount, was rather less than six feet in height. All were robust in appearance, and with respect to the head, length of body, and breadth of shoulders, of gigantic size; therefore, when on horseback, or seated in a boat, they appeared to be tall, as well as large men. In proportion to the parts above-mentioned, their extremities were very small and short, so that, when standing, they seemed of but a moderate size, and their want of proportion was concealed by the mantle, which enveloped the body entirely, the head and feet being the only parts exposed."—Vol. I., pp. 16, 17.

"While the ship," continues Captain King, "was getting under weigh, I went ashore to a larger number of Indians who were waiting on the beach. When my boat landed, they were mounted and collected in one place. I was surprised to hear the woman accost me in Spanish, of which, however, she knew but a few words. Having distributed presents to each of the party, they dismounted (excepting the elders), and in a few minutes became quite familiar. By this time Captain Stokes had landed, with several of his officers, who increased our party to nearly double the number of theirs, notwithstanding which they evinced neither fear nor uneasiness. The woman, whose name was Maria, wished to be very communicative; she told me that the man was her husband, and that she had five children. One of the young men, whom we afterwards found to be a son of Maria, who was a principal person of the tribe, was mounted upon a very fine horse, well groomed, and equipped with a bridle and saddle that would have done credit to a respectable horseman of Buenos Ayres or Monte Video. The young man wore heavy brass spurs, like those of the Gauchos of Buenos Ayres. The juvenile and feminine appearance of this youth made us think he was Maria's daughter, nor was it until a subsequent visit that our mistake was discovered. The absence of whiskers and beard gives all the young men a very effeminate look, and many cannot be distinguished, in appearance, from the women, but by the mode in which they wrap their mantles around them, and by their hair, which is turned up and confined by a fillet of worsted yarn. The women cross their mantle over the breast like a shawl, and fasten it together with two iron pins or skewers, round which are twisted strings of beads and other ornaments. They also wear their hair divided, and gathered into long tresses or tails, which hang one before each ear; and those who have short hair wear false tails made of horse-hair. Under their mantle the women wear a sort of petticoat, and the men a triangular piece of hide instead of breeches. Both sexes sit astride, but the women upon a heap of skins and mantles, when riding. The saddles and stirrups used by the men are similar to those of Buenos Ayres. The bits also are generally of steel; but those who cannot procure steel bits, have a sort of snaffle, of wood, which must, of course, be frequently renewed. Both sexes wear boots, made of the skins of horses' hind-legs, of which the parts about the hock joints serve for the heels. For spurs they use pieces of wood, pointed with iron, projecting backwards, two or three inches on each side of the heel, connected behind by a broad strap of hide, and fastened under the foot and over the instep by another strap. The only weapons which we observed with these people were the 'bolas' or balls, precisely similar to those used by the Pampas Indians."—Vol. I., pp. 18, 19.

The huts or toldos of the Patagonians are all alike; of a rectangular form, ten or twelve feet long, ten deep, seven feet high in front, and three or four in the rear. The frame is formed by poles stuck in the ground, having forked tops to hold cross-pieces, on which are laid poles for rafters to support the covering, which is made of skins of animals sewn together, so as almost to be impervious to wind or rain. The posts not being easily procured, are carried from place to place in all their excursions.

With respect to the so-long-mooted point of stature and dimensions of the Patagonians, Captain King says, subsequently, that of the number he saw, none measured more than six feet two inches; but he supposes it possible that the preceding generation may have been a larger race of people, and that by a different mode of life, or a mixture by marriage with the Fuegian tribes, they may have degenerated into a smaller race.

"Taking," he says, "all the evidence together, it may be considered that the medium height of the males of these southern tribes is about five feet eleven inches. The women are not so tall, but are in proportion broader and stouter than they are generally plain-featured. The head is long, broad, and flat, and the forehead low, with the hair growing within an inch of the eyebrows, which are bare. The eyes are often placed obliquely, and have but little expression; the nose is generally rather flat, and turned up; but we noticed several with that feature straight, and sometimes aquiline. the mouth is wide, with prominent lips, and the chin is rather large; the jaws are broad, and give the face a square appearance; the neck is short and thick; the shoulders are broad; the chest is broad, and very full; but the arm, particularly the fore-arm, is small, as are also the foot and leg; the body long, large, and fat, but not corpulent. Such was the appearance of those who came under my observation.

"As to their character, the Patagonians are friendly, without the disposition to quarrel, after the novelty of first acquaintance has worn off, which is so common among savages in general."—Vol. I., pp. 102, 103

Captain Fitzroy says, that he has nowhere met an assemblage of men and women whose average height and apparent bulk approached to that of the Patagonians. He is not aware, however, that a Patagonian has been seen, during late years, exceeding in height six feet and some inches, but he sees no reason to disbelieve Falkner's account of the Cerique Cangapol, whose height is given at seven feet and some inches.

The Fuegian tribes differ materially from those of Patagonia. Those on the north-eastern part, however, somewhat resemble them, and seem to be much in the condition the Patagonians must have been before they had horses. The south-eastern tribes, or Tekeenicas, are low in stature, ill-looking, and badly proportioned, having bodies much larger in proportion to their cramped and crooked limbs. If not altogether naked, they wear only portions of skins on their bodies, which are variously painted. The sling is their principal weapon of defence or chase. They build their wigwams totally different from the Patagonians, or any other of their own nation. It is of a conical form, made of a number of poles, or young trees, placed, touching one another, in a circle, with the small ends meeting, and only sometimes have bunches of grass or pieces of bark thrown upon the side exposed to the weather. The remaining (Ahkhoolip) tribes are stouter and hardier. Their huts are of the beehive, or haycock form, not more than four or five feet high, and two, three, or four yards in diameter; they have, however, an excavation in the centre, which gives another foot or two in height. Branches of trees stuck in the ground, bent together towards the top, form the structure, upon which skins, pieces of bark, and bunches of coarse grass, are roughly fastened. The Chonos tribes, on the western shores and islands of Patagonia, are less savage than the Fuegians. Their wigwams are of the bee-hive shape, but their canoes are very large, and propelled by oars.

"The most remarkable traits in the countenance of a Fuegian," says Capt. Fitzroy, "are his extremely low, small forehead; his prominent brow, small eyes (suffering from smoke), wide cheek bones, wide and open nostrils, large mouth and thick lips."—Vol. II., p. 175.—"The neck of a Fuegian is short and strong; his shoulders are square, but high; his chest and body are very large. The trunk is long, compared to the limbs and head. His arms and legs are rounder, and less sinewy, than those of Europeans, his joints are smaller, and his extremities are likewise comparatively less. Most of them are rather bow-legged, and they turn their feet a little inwards in walking."—p. 176. "When discovered by strangers, the instant impulse of a Fuegian family is to run into the woods with their children, and such things as they can carry with them. After a short time, if nothing hostile is attempted by the intruders, and if they are not too numerous, the men return cautiously, making friendly signs, waving pieces of skins, rubbing and patting their bellies, and shouting. If all goes on quietly, the women frequently return, bringing with them the children; but they always leave the most valuable skins hidden in the bushes."—p 177.

"From the concurrent testimony of the three Fuegians abovementioned," says Capt. Fitzroy, alluding to the aboriginal natives brought by him to England, and afterwards returned to their native country, "obtained from them at various times, and by many different persons, it is proved that they eat human flesh upon particular occasions, namely, when excited by revenge, or extremely pressed by hunger. Almost always at war with adjoining tribes, they seldom meet but a hostile encounter is the result; and then those that are vanquished and taken, if not already dead, are killed and eaten by the conquerors. The arms and breast are eaten by the women, the men eat the legs; and the trunk is thrown into the sea. During a severe winter, when hard frost and deep snow prevent their obtaining food as usual, and famine is staring them in the face, extreme hunger impels them to lay violent hands on the oldest woman of their party, hold her head over a thick smoke made by burning green wood, and pinching her throat, choke her. They then devour every particle of the flesh, not excepting the trunk, as in the former case."—Vol. II., p. 183.

The whole account of the education of the Fuegians above alluded to, and of their return to their native land, after an absence of three years, and their reception and treatment by their family and tribe, is exceedingly interesting, and forms one of the most remarkable incidents connected with the expedition.

On the summit of Mont de la Cour, near Port Gallant, in the Strait of Magellan, were found the remains of a glass bottle, and a roll of papers, which proved to be the memorials stated to have been left by Don Antonio de Cordova, and a copy of a document that had previously been deposited there by M. de Bougainville. The originals are placed in the British Museum; but before Captain King finally left the Strait, copies were made on vellum, and deposited on the same spot.

We shall again recur to these highly interesting volumes; and in the meantime beg strongly to recommend them to our readers.

The British Angler's Manual. By T.C. Holland, Esq. Whitehead and Co. R. Ackermann.

Not only a most useful, but a very exquisite, amusing, and interesting work. Holland, a lover of nature, is one of our most favourite landscape painters; and we have in this volume nine of his paintings, engraved by that celebrated artist, W. R. Smith, with upwards of forty delicious wood-cuts, many of them rich and mellow landscapes, and all calculated to captivate every lover of the fine arts. The information on the "Art of Angling," and the instructions "on fly-fishing, trolling, and angling at the bottom, and more particularly for the trout," will be prized by all the brothers of the gentle craft, especially as they are the result of more than thirty years' practice in the principal rivers, lakes, and trout streams of Great Britain. Moreover, they are put forth in the most simple and unaffected style, with occasional anecdote, reflection, and sentiment, so that the volume may be classed as a fit companion to "Izaak Walton," and, therefore, a literary luxury that should be in the library of every gentleman and sportsman. We must limit our extracts, though, if space would admit, we should gladly give many passages of great taste, in which the volume abounds:—

Thames Fishing.—"The vast metropolis of the British empire contains many thousand brothers of the angle, 'who have few opportunities of exercising their gentle craft' at any great distance from home; it is, therefore, a happy circumstance that they have so noble a river as the Thames, in which to practise their art. The scenery on its banks is of unrivalled beauty, and few streams contain a greater variety of fish, and fishing stations. I have met with anglers, who affect to despise Thames fishing; but for myself, after having cast a fly in many of the principal rivers and lakes in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, I can still enjoy a day's barbel, or roach, and dace-fishing at Richmond, Teddington, or Hampton. A fine balmy day, the delicious scenery, a cheerful and skilful companion, a pic-nic dinner on board your punt, and ten or fifteen brace of barbel to carry home, are pleasures not to be scorned, and give me leave to tell those gentlemen who despise Thames fishing and cockney anglers, that many of them would cut a poor figure in a punt, or on shore, if they had to contend with the practised neatness, quickness, and dexterity of a London Artist."

Again:—

"I am not ashamed to own, that, although I have for many years enjoyed the highest excitement of trout and salmon fishing, I can find much pleasure in taking a young friend with me for a day's gudgeon fishing at Hampton, and partaking, in the intervals of sport, of a meat pie and a bottle of sherry, with an appetite earned by exercise, and an eye alive to all the beauties which surround me."

We will conclude with a salmon-fishing anecdote:—

"When I visited Loch Awe, in the year 1835, I met an intelligent Highlander (of course, in that district, a Campbell), who related an anecdote, connected with the weight of a salmon, that I shall repeat, and leave my reader to his own share of credence. A tall, stout, young Campbell, from Glenorchy, celebrated for his success as a salmon fisher, left his native glen for the river Awe, which runs from the Loch of that name to Loch Etive, through a narrow ravine at the foot of the mighty Ben Cruachan. The bed of this river is stony, and, in many parts, the water is rapid and turbulent, but it subsides occasionally into deep pools, which are the favourite resorts of large fish. Our experienced Highlander reached a well-known deep of this description, with a strong eighteen-feet rod, and an immense wooden pirn, on which was wound eighty yards of strong line, and had only cast his fly a second time when he struck a fish. The fish ran out his line with such furious rapidity that he was obliged to follow with his utmost speed over rocks and stones, and frequently through the water also, for he soon found that he had no chance whatever of turning his fish until they should reach a broad deep pool, above a mile below him. At this haven he at length arrived, much exhausted with fatigue; not so the fish, for he seemed to be as vigorous as ever, and the angler, on finding he had room to try his skill and the strength of his tackle, soon recovered his spirits, when, as if in derision of both, the fish, after a violent plunge or two, took to the bottom, and there remained immovable, resisting every effort to rouse him. Suddenly, however, he again ran up the stream, carrying the Highlander after him through the same rugged route, to the imminent peril of life and life, till he reached the pool where he was first struck. After a short struggle, in which the angler so far succeeded as to turn the fish down the stream, or, rather, submitted to be himself taken down, and that, as before, in no gentle fashion, they reached the deep pool once more, when after a few fruitless efforts on the part of the Highlander, the fish again took to the bottom, where he lay in the most dogged sullenness, defying all the powers of the enemy to draw him from his retreat. Night was now coming on, and even our hardy angler was exhausted by his long contest, he therefore sate down between two rocks on the bank of the river, in a secure place, and determined to rest there till certain fishermen arrived, as was their custom, at break of day, from whom he might obtain assistance. He fixed his rod securely, and contrived that his pirn should give out the line freely, and then placed the line between his teeth; so that if the fish should leave the bottom, the running of the line might awaken him. In this situation he slept soundly till three in the morning, at which time the fishermen found him—the rod and line were undisturbed, and the fish still at the bottom;—but the Highlander was now awake, and, with the assistance of the friends in question, he soon succeeded, with their nets, in capturing this doughty fish, which proved to be a fine salmon, weighing seventy-four pounds. The truth of the above anecdote was vouched by several respectable Highlanders at the inn of Port Sonachan."

Castle Martyr; or, a Tale of Old Ireland. 2 vols. Cunningham.

After a long, unreadable, and intolerable bore of an "Introduction," abounding with anachronisms and blunders of all sorts, we enter upon a melancholy tale—melancholy, yet with little true pathos—in which, with incidents and episodes of the Irish Rebellion of 1798, and something very like an abduction or two, the usual (or more than the usual) number of love-makings, seductions, marriages, deaths, &c., attract and distract the attention of the reader. The fable of "Castle Martyr," though ill-constructed and in bad keeping, is not altogether without interest; but the scenes, characters, and incidents are scattered about in a strangely zig-zag, harum-scarum manner. The language is not remarkable for accuracy, the style for purity, or the diction for refinement. However, if the work be that of a young writer, as we suspect to be the case, there is reason to hope for improvement. This we shall readily greet in his two three-volume productions announced—"The Ormonde Annals," and "Reginald the Bachelor."

Gray's Elegy, written in a Country Churchyard. Van Voorst.

We noticed, some months since, Mr. Van Voorst's beautiful edition of this most celebrated composition. The volume before us is a polyglot edition, with the most approved versions of each stanza in Greek, Latin, German, Italian, and French: it has, therefore, even greater claims to praise that the former tasteful publication, and there can be no question of its success. The patronage afforded to re-publications like this is the best testimony of the increasing estimation of our old English Classics.

The Tragedy of Count Alarcos. By the Author of "Vivian Grey." H. Colburn.

This fine tragedy is another of the fruits of Macready's endeavour to revive the English serious drama on our stage; and though circumstances have not allowed of its being produced in action, it will be among the least fugitive of the many testimonies to the praiseworthy attempt which is about so prematurely to close. "Alarcos" is founded on an old Spanish ballad, which relates the fatal loves of the Count Alarcos and the Infanta Solisa, daughter of the King of Castile; and it is no sparing commendation to say, that it fully answers to the high reputation already attained by its writer in other departments of literature. It is in fact, though not, as we conceive, peculiarly adapted to the stage, one of the finest dramatic poems that our day has produced—full of passion, finely discriminated in character, and, though extremely simple and condensed in plot, with quite sufficient incident to keep the attention alive from the opening to the close.

There is evidently no reason why this in many respects admirable work should not ultimately appear on the stage, especially if the author would carefully overlook it with an express view to that end. In the meantime we commend it to our dramatic readers in particular, as presenting scenes of passion and of pathos that have scarcely been surpassed, if equalled, by any living dramatic writer.

Portrait of the Earl of Roden. Hodgson and Graves.

A very clever mezzotinto engraving from the original picture by Say. The friends of this noble Conservative have now the opportunity of obtaining not only a striking likeness of his Lordship, but a print that deserves to be prized as a work of art. We have seldom seen a better engraving from the burin of Lupton.

The present number of the "Aldine Magazine," the cheapest and most respectable of the cheap[er] class of monthly periodicals, completes, we observe, the first volume. Its opening paper, on "the Royal Academy of Arts," triumphantly vindicates the character of that institution. Amongst the original articles, we also find a long, curious, and highly-interesting notice of the late James Bird, the celebrated Suffolk Poet. The Aldine poetry this month bears the impress of more than usual merit.

The Nelson Memorial.—The exhibition of the models and drawings for the projected monument to our greatest Naval hero, which has been partially open to public inspection for the last three weeks in St. James's-street, differs in one very marked feature from the previous one held at Mr. Rainy's Gallery; namely, in the much larger proportion of monuments of the columnar kind brought forward on the present occasion. In the first exhibition, out of upwards of one hundred and sixty designs or models, there were but six of a columnar character; and of these two only were strictly triumphal columns. In the present exhibition, on the contrary, we find not fewer than forty-six projects for a monumental column of some sort or other, out of a total number of designs and models amounting to about one hundred and sixty-seven—being more than a fourth of the whole. The cause of this marked difference in the opinion and inspirations of the artists may readily be traced; first, to the former decision of the Sub-Committee, by which the highest prize was awarded to a Corinthian column; and secondly, to the strong and unanswerable arguments, brought forward by the author of a letter to the Duke of Wellington, touching that decision, in support of a column as a fitting memorial for this particular occasion. Of that letter we, in common with many of our contemporaries, took proper notice at the time in this Journal; and we are glad to find that the letter has worked out the intention of its writer, not only by inducing many more artists than before to adopt the columnar character in their designs for the monument, but also by persuading the architect, who had received the first prize on a previous occasion, to alter his column in every point respecting which judicious and critical observations had been offered by the writer of the letter in question. Thus the intended situation of Mr. Railton's column, which was shown to be injudicious, and likely to produce local inconvenience, has been changed by that architect for the one which the rest of the artists had already adopted. The rusticated plinth, which was deprecated as ridiculous, has been removed. The cabling of the lower portion of the shaft, which was declared to be a violation of all the rules of good taste, has disappeared, as the top gallery has (which was justly called an eyesore), and with it all access to the summit of the column. At the same time the capital, which Mr. Railton had commended, as an example from Mars Ultor, on account of its simple grandeur, has now assumed, in imitation of the capital adopted by another competing architect, a richer and more complicated form. In fact, the rewarded column is no longer what it was, and is much better than it was; but then the improvements in it are not the results of Mr. Railton's own inspirations—they are the suggestions of another.

A weekly journal of considerable influence, the Spectator, without surrendering its former objection to a column as a monument, is inclined to think that in all probability it will be the class of memorial which the Committee will adopt for execution. The Spectator, setting aside Mr. Railton's column, has distinguished two only, out of the many proposed columns to be found in the present exhibition, as being worthy of consideration—Case's granite Corinthian, and Granville's non Corinthian; the one 207, the other 217 feet high, including the statue. We agree in the justice of singling out these two specimens; but for more reasons than one, which must occur to every one of our readers, we cannot agree with the Spectator in preferring the granite column of Mr. Case to the iron column of Mr. Granville. Supposing that no physical objections exist against an iron column (and we do not profess to decide that question, although we have been assured that none exist in reality), then we say that a column such as Mr. Granville has so exquisitely delineated in all its minutest details, far outstrips all stone columns, for originality of conception, grandeur of idea, richness of composition, usefulness of arrangement, and, finally, for its eminently national character and appropriate destination. A great iron column is the imitation of no other as yet in existence. A granite column, on the contrary, can only be a repetition. The emblem of strength is iron. The emblems of Naval power are the iron cannons and shot. A spiral band covering the lower half of the shaft, with figures in cast-iron three feet high, relates very legibly to every eye the whole history of the hero, which a granite shaft cannot even hint at. The richness of the brass or iron-gilt ornaments, the base and capital, contrasted by the blueish tint of the iron shaft, must be such as no bronze ornament or granite can rival. The gilded statue of Britannia "hurling (to use the artist's own words) the thunderbolts as emblems of universal power, and holding in her left hand the sceptre of the sea, becomes at once typical of the pre-eminence of Great Britain over the ocean, and is a much more appropriate termination to a lofty column, raised to the glory of the first Naval Commander that ever lived," than Mr. Case's proposed statue of Nelson in his Admiral's uniform, whose lineaments could not be perceived at that elevation. These alone are sufficient features of superiority over every other form of triumphal column hitherto proposed for the Nelson Memorial, by which Mr. Granville's iron column recommends itself for a preference. But there is a feature in the present amended plan of that young architect—whom we understand to have been a student of the French and (subsequently) of the English Academy of Arts—which adds greatly to the importance and value of his project; and that is, the peculiar character of the marble pedestal and octagonal sub-basement of his column, enriched by the chisel of the sculptor in caryatids, bas-reliefs, and the statues of renowned Naval Commanders. That peculiarity consists in this, that in its interior the sub basement will offer "four spacious rooms, forty-one feet by twenty-five feet each, and nineteen feet high, lighted from the top, and presenting an excellent opportunity for forming a Naval library and gallery of pictures," or, indeed, admirably calculated for the reception of the United Service Museum.

Other journals have each chosen their favourite model or design from the great mass before them, and recommended it to public favour. We have selected the iron column, because, although mentioned in more or less distinct terms by almost all our contemporaries who have given an account of the present exhibition, it seems not to have received that degree of attention which its originality and intrinsic merits deserve, and which our present notice will secure to it, among the very class of enlightened readers who, more than any other, must feel interested in this question.

THE LATE GENERAL LORD WM. BENTINCK.

His Lordship entered the Army 27th Jan. 1791, as an Ensign, in the Coldstream Guards. In 1792 he received the King's leave to serve as a volunteer with the Prussian Army, under the Duke of Brunswick, about to enter France; he joined that Army, but immediately returned, the Duke not permitting him to serve. The 1st Aug. 1792, his Lordship was appointed Capt. in the Scotch Greys, and 20th Feb. 1793, Capt. in 11th Drags. In April, 1793, he accompanied his reg. to Flanders, and was appointed A.D.C. to the Duke of York. He was present at the battle of Famars, siege of Valenciennes, and other affairs. He returned to England when the Army went into winter quarters, and accompanied Lord Moira as A.D.C. in the expedition to the coast of France. In the spring his Lordship returned to the Duke of York's Army, and remained until it again went into winter quarters. The 21st Feb. 1794, he was appointed Major 28th Foot, and 20th March Lieut.-Col. 20th Drags., which corps was reduced 20th Sept. 1802. The 1st Jan. 1795, he was appointed A.D.C. to the King, and received the rank of Col. In May, 1799, Lord William was appointed to remain at the head quarters of Suwarroff's Army in Italy, where he continued till the beginning of 1801, and was present at the several battles that took place during that period. In July, 1801, he went out to the Army in Egypt, and returned in Jan. 1802. In April, 1803, his Lordship sailed for India as Governor of Madras, and returned in Jan. 1808. The 1st Jan. 1805, he was appointed Major Gen. In Aug. 1808, he was appointed to the Staff of the Army under Lieut. Gen. Sir H. Burrard in Portugal. His Lordship was subsequently selected to proceed on an important mission to the Supreme Junta of Spain. In the frequent conferences he had with Count Florida Blanca, he urged the adoption of such energetic measures as he conceived would prove advantageous to the Spanish cause; but he soon saw, with regret, the supineness with which the Junta beheld the gigantic efforts of Buonaparte to complete the subjugation of their country. Still there was a good disposition in the people, and a patriotism, which only wanted a proper and vigorous direction. In a despatch, about the beginning of Oct., Lord William observes, "I am more and more convinced, that a blind confidence in their own strength and natural slowness are the rocks upon which this good ship runs the risk of being wrecked." His Lordship's opinion proved but too correct: the events in the Peninsula evinced the penetration and judgment with which he viewed the actions of the Spaniards. He continued with the Junta, corresponding with his Government and Sir John Moore, until the latter end of Nov., previous to which Mr. Frere had arrived at Aranjuez, as Minister Plenipotentiary of Great Britain, and Lt.-Gen. Moore, conceiving that his Lordship's services, now that he was superseded in his diplomatic character, would be useful to the Army, gave him an order to join. The sense entertained of Lord William's Military talents by Sir John Moore is particularly expressed in a letter to Mr. Frere, of 10th Nov. 1809, from Salamanca. Lord William accompanied the Army in its retreat. At the battle of Corunna, owing to local circumstances, the right wing of the British Army was placed on very unfavourable ground, and it was of the utmost consequence that this point should be maintained to the last. Lord William's brigade, consisting of the 4th, 42d, and 50th, occupied this important point in the British position; the Brigade of Guards was in the rear, and Sir John Moore directed the Hon. Major Gen. Paget to bring up the reserve to the right of Lord William.

Sir David Baird, leading on his division, of which Lord William's brigade formed the right, had his arm shattered with a grape shot, and was obliged to leave the field. The French Artillery plunged from the heights, and the two hostile lines of Infantry mutually advanced beneath a shower of balls. They were still separated from each other by stone walls and hedges, which intersected the ground, but as they closed, it was perceived that the French line extended beyond the right flank of the British, and a body of the enemy were observed moving up the valley to turn it. An order was instantly given, and the half of the 4th regiment, which formed this flank, fell back, refusing their right, and making an obtuse angle with the other half. In this position they commenced a heavy flanking fire, and Sir John Moore, watching the manœuvre, called out to them, "That was exactly what I wanted to be done." He then, accompanied by Lord William, rode up to the 50th, which had got over an inclosure in the road, and charged the French in the most gallant style — They succeeded in driving the enemy out of the village of Elvina with great slaughter. In this conflict, Major Napier, advancing too far, was wounded severely, and taken prisoner; Major Stanhope, also, of the 50th, received a mortal wound. Sir John then proceeded to the 42d, forming the left battalion of Lord William's brigade, and addressed them, "Highlanders, remember Egypt!" They rushed on, driving the French before them, till they were stopped by a wall. Sir John accompanied them in the charge, and told the soldiers he was well pleased with their conduct. He sent Capt. Hardinge to order up a battalion of the Guards to the left flank of the Highlanders, upon which the officer commanding the Light Company conceived that as their ammunition was nearly expended, they were to be relieved by the Guards, and began to fall back, but Sir John, discovering the mistake, said to them, "My brave 42d, join your comrades, ammunition is coming, and you have your bayonets!" They instantly obeyed, and all moved forward. At this period, and just as he had directed the most able dispositions, the gallant Moore fell by a cannon shot. The troops, though acquainted with the irreparable loss they had sustained, were not dismayed. By the most determined bravery, they not only repelled every attempt of the enemy to gain ground, but actually forced him to retire, although he had brought up fresh troops in support of those originally engaged. The enemy, finding himself foiled in every attempt to force the right of the position, endeavoured by numbers to turn it—a judicious and well timed movement, which was made by Maj. Gen. Paget with the reserve, upon the right of Lord William's brigade, defeated this intention. The Major-Gen having pushed forward the 95th (now Rifle Brigade) and 1st battalion 52d, drove the enemy before him, and in his rapid advance threatened the left of the French position, and this circumstance, with the position of Lieut.-Gen. Fraser's division (calculated to give still further security to the right of the line), induced the enemy to relax his efforts in that quarter.

Lord William's next appointment was to command a division of Sir A. Wellesley's Army, with the local rank of Lieut.-Gen., and shortly after to the important situation of Minister at the Court of Sicily, and Commander-in-Chief of all H.M.'s forces in that island. On his first arrival in Sicily, finding the Court of Palermo under the influence of Buonaparte, and that the inhabitants deprecated the Queen as the adviser of measures which would have led to the invasion of the island from the opposite coast, Lord William returned to England, preferring to make his representations in person, instead of entering into a detailed correspondence with ministers, as to the real state of affairs, and so much confidence was placed in his judgment, that full powers were granted him to adopt such a line of policy as might appear best adapted to secure the independence of the island, and prevent the Queen's party from obtaining any ascendancy in the State. Her Majesty did not submit to these arrangements without manifest reluctance and great exertions to place matters on a different footing, but in vain, and Lord William released from their dungeons those virtuous nobles whom the Queen had confined, in consequence of their opposition to her views. Lord William was for some time Commander-in-Chief of the Army employed on the Eastern Coast of Spain towards the close of the Peninsular war, and, from 1813 to 1815, Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies.

The 4th June, 1811, his Lordship received the rank of Lieut.-Gen., 27th Jan 1819, the Colonelcy of the 11th Light Dragoons; and the 27th Jan. 1825, he was promoted to General. Lord William had the honour of wearing a medal for the battle of Corunna. He was a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and of the Hanoverian Guelphic Order.

The demise of this gallant nobleman took place on Monday evening, after a long illness, at his residence in the Rue Chaussée d'Antin, Paris. His Lordship was in his 66th year, and next brother of the present Duke of Portland, he married in 1803 the Lady Mary Acheson, daughter of the first Earl of Gosford, by whom he has left no issue. It was only at the close of last week a new writ was moved for Glasgow, of which city he was till then the representative. We will add, from many years' personal knowledge, that in private life he was no less respected than in Military command.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 8s. and 21s., stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 68, Cornhill.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street), but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

COMPANION TO FROISSART.

On the 1st July will be published, Part I., price Two Shillings, of

THE CHRONICLES of MONSTRELET.
With Notes and Woodcuts.
Uniform with the present Edition of Froissart.

As nearly as can be estimated the work will be included in Twelve Parts; but will certainly not exceed Thirteen.

The Chronicles of Monstrelet form an immediate continuation of those of Froissart, and take up the general history of Europe, from the point at which that work terminates. Extending over a space of fifty-three years, they furnish as minute details of the occurrences of the times as the volumes of his celebrated predecessor, and they are further distinguished by the greater accuracy of the dates and the singular fidelity of his transcripts of public acts and original documents. This accuracy has rendered the Chronicles of Monstrelet one of the most valuable storehouses from whence more modern historians have drawn materials for the correction of the errors or misrepresentations of contemporary writers, and they are esteemed accordingly. But this business-like accuracy has not interfered with the spirited flow of narration, which so charms us in the pages of Froissart; we may point to the account of the battle of Azincourt as a striking instance of his descriptive power. "The character of Monstrelet," says the writer of his life in the Biographie Universelle, "stands high as an historian. Henault, Bayle, Moreri, le père Lelong, Foppens, Duverdier, Duchêne, Sorel, Lenglet-Dufresnoy, all unite in praising the accuracy of his dates, the simplicity (naïveté) of his style, and his lucid narration. His work is a rich mine, which may be explored with advantage by the philosopher who labours to ascertain facts, and to trace the causes which have influenced the springs of action."

MR. MOON, HER MAJESTY'S PUBLISHER and PRINTSELLER, 20, THREADNEEDLE STREET, LONDON, has the honour to announce his intention to publish the following

IMPORTANT ENGRAVINGS.

THE WATERLOO BANQUET

AT APSLEY HOUSE,

MR. MOON HAS THE DISTINGUISHED HONOUR TO ANNOUNCE THAT MR. SALTER, WHO HAS BEEN SO LONG AND ANXIOUSLY ENGAGED ON THIS GREAT AND INTERESTING NATIONAL PICTURE, RECEIVED FROM HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON THE EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE OF BEING PRESENT AT THE BANQUET ON TUESDAY LAST, WITH A VIEW TO ITS COMPLETION.

MR. MOON is about to place this splendid and remarkable Picture in the hands of an eminent engraver, with a view to publication. The peculiar character of the interest which attaches to such a work has determined him to have it executed in the very highest style of art; and to seek his remuneration for the great outlay incurred rather in the increased value of the impressions than in their number. The scene includes between sixty and seventy striking portraits of the old warriors who fought by the side of their illustrious host, in those brilliant campaigns which terminated with the Battle of Waterloo. Year after year is thinning the ranks of these "heroes of a hundred fights," and striking out some names from the muster-roll of the veteran companions in arms who assemble on this remarkable occasion. Year by year is therefore adding to the value of a picture which presents a most touching, and will, in all probability, be an imperishable, record of this unparalleled event—including, as it does, a union of extreme brilliancy with minute truth. The artist has so contrived his materials as to introduce into the Picture no single ornament of the table or banquetting-room, but such as—like the shield on the sideboard, and magnificent plate on the tables—contribute an interest historical as well as pictorial,—as having some direct reference to the great event after which the banquet is named, and being the gift of some one or other of those Sovereigns and Chiefs whose fortunes hung upon its issue. Mr. Moon's object is, on his part, to add to the value of the publication by so limiting the number of impressions as shall enable him to insure fine copies to the whole of his subscribers; who are, therefore, requested to favour him with early applications, to prevent disappointment, for this, the only authentic engraving of the Waterloo Banquet.

From the TIMES.

The room in which the Banquet is held is in the picture an exact copy of the real apartment. The numerous paintings in the possession of His Grace, which decorate the walls of the apartment itself, are, in the representation in Mr. Salter's picture, all faithfully copied, and the details of furniture, the candelabra, the superb plateau, &c., are all elaborately set forth. The numerous portraits are good likenesses of the original; indeed the eye of the spectator discovers without difficulty the face of every individual, and recognises the closeness of its resemblance to the features with which he is familiar. * * * The engravings will be most interesting records and excellent illustrations of the great day of victory which resulted from the talents, valour, and military skill of the illustrious Duke and his companions on the field of battle.

From the MORNING CHRONICLE.

The subject is an extremely bold and difficult one, but Mr. Salter has treated it with consummate skill, and his success may be said to be complete. A masterly style of composition has enabled him at once to preserve the order of the table, and yet to overcome the unpleasantry of straight lines in the arrangement of his figures. The dinner has been eaten, the dishes have been removed, dessert and wines have followed, the table is laden with the costly plate which grateful nations have heaped upon the invincible defender of their liberties and independence—the veteran chief himself has risen to address that remnant of his old companions in arms (upwards of sixty in number) who, surviving the shock of a hundred battles, are still left unvanquished by the hand of time. The stiffness of the party has relaxed—the chairs have somewhat receded from the table—the old warriors have grouped themselves in knots (here the mastery of the composition, aided by the fine perspective, is most conspicuously evinced), and are either attentively listening to their illustrious host, or engaged in earnest and brief conversation amongst themselves. There is a wonderful reality in the picture. The likenesses are positively startling.

CAVALRY.

1st Drag. Guards.—There are now in this town, studying the "art of war," under the auspices of the officers of the 1st Drag. Gds., several detachments from the Cavalry troops of the districts. Capt. Martin, we understand, is highly pleased with the appearance and discipline of these representatives of our Yeomanry Cavalry, and there is no doubt but the instructions received from that gallant officer will be most beneficially felt in the provincial service.—Niagara Chronicle.

4th Drag. Guards.—Hd.-qts. and three troops, Birmingham, with officers, Lieut.-Col. Chatterton, Captains Hodge, Mayow, Archer; Lieuts. Mcynell, Arkwright, Coster; Cornets Souter, Jacob, Turner; Surg. Flanagan; Quartermaster Andrews; Lieut. and Adj. Ibbetson. Two troops at Coventry, with Major Makepeace; Captains Heighan, Place; Lieuts. Clerk, Rochfort. One troop at Dursley, Capt. Tait, Lieut. Eliot. On leave—Lieutenants Harper, Rolls; Cornet Symons, Assist.-Surgeon McGregor.

8th Hussars—Major the Hon. E. Wodehouse has returned from leave, and taken command of the regiment at Dundalk, in the absence of Lieut.-Col. the Hon. G. B. Molyneux, who is purchasing remount horses.

15th Hussars—The following officers embark in the General Palmer for Bombay, to sail 1st July:—Maj. Phillips, Brev.-Maj. M'Queen, Capt. Chambers, Adjt. Cox, Assist.-Surg. Bisset. In the Malabar, to sail 10th July:—Lieut.-Col. Sir W. Scott, Lieuts. Higgins and Pilgrim, Cornet Nolan and Assist.-Surg. Reed.

Last week as a boy, named John Blurton, twelve years of age, son of a soldier in the 17th, was bathing in the Medway, near the barracks, he suddenly disappeared, and was observed to rise only once, when his head came up to the level of the water. An alarm was immediately given at the barracks by one of his companions, when Col. Brotherton and a number of the soldiers instantly rushed to the spot and the gallant Colonel, throwing off his coat and stock, plunged into the river, hoping to recover the poor lad, by diving, before life was extinct. Unhappily, the humane and intrepid effort was unsuccessful, as it was not until a considerable time had elapsed that the deceased was found, by means of drags, twelve feet under water, and of course quite dead. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict of accidental death was returned.—Maidstone Journal.

16th Lancers.—The cups were disappointed of their Indian turf sports this year for the Lancer's shield and tankard. The Englishman laments this the less, having the hope that, "after a glorious campaign, it will be confounded for over a race-course established at Cabul or Herat." The design of the shield is chaste and simple:—a wreath of barrel and an interior circle of snake-work, encompass a centre flute, in perfect relief, of a Lancer in the act of charging infantry. The design is superior to the execution. The design of the tankard is equally chaste, and the execution of the Lancer, surmounting the lid, is much better than that on the shield.

17th Lancers.—Cornet Hon. G. O'Callaghan, extra A.D.C. to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, is about to retire from the Army.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards—Col. Aitchison and the officers of the regiment gave their annual grand dinner at the Clarendon Hotel on the 21st inst. About thirty officers sat down to dinner.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—A General Court-Martial assembled at Chatham on Monday, for the trial of Paym. Sharp of this battalion, on charges preferred by the Commander-in-Chief and Secretary-at-War, for entering into bill speculations with a person of the name of Hoare, unconnected with his regimental duties—Col. Fitzmaurice, Coldstream Guards, President. Mr. Anderson appeared from the Horse Guards as prosecutor. The Court continued sitting till Wednesday, when the proceedings closed. We shall give the result when approved by Her Majesty.

5th—Capt. L'Estrange, late of this reg., is about to leave Ireland, having exchanged into the 21st, at Madras.

8th—arrived at Halifax 5th May, in the Pique, Andromache, and Wanderer, men-of-war, from Montego Bay, Jamaica. They disembarked at two o'clock yesterday. The 8th left Halifax about five years ago, and brings back some familiar faces, but few of the gallant corps who left our shores in health and vigour have withstood the effects of the pestilential climate.—Halifax Times, May 7.

9th—The Plantagenet sailed from Portsmouth, June 20th, for Bengal, with Lieut. Farrant and Ens. Palmer.

10th—At a General Court-Martial re-assembled at Cawnpore, 21st Feb. 1839, Ens. J. A. Campbell was arraigned on the following charges:—Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman in the following instances:—

First.—In having neglected to attend parade for muster on the 1st Jan., 1839, (though he had been on the 10th of the preceding month censured for neglect of duty as officer of the day, and having in a letter addressed to Lieut. and Adjt. John Bruce, falsely assigned illness as the cause of his absence from muster parade.

Second.—In having, on the 1st Jan., 1839, entertained and associated with soldiers' wives, and other women, in the house of, and in company with, Harriet Monks, a woman of bad character, during which evening the house was visited by Gunner James Printon, 3d comp., 5th Batt. Art., who, for a short time, sat at the table, notwithstanding that Ens. Campbell had been earnestly and repeatedly cautioned by his commanding officer against the ruinous consequences of intimacy with Harriet Monks, and had led his commanding officer to believe that he had separated himself from her entirely.

Third.—In having, on the evening of the same day, whilst in an extreme state of intoxication, severely beaten and kicked, without any immediate provocation, Khoda Bux, Khudmutgar.

First Additional Charge.—With having at Cawnpore, on the evening of 10th Jan., 1839, broken his arrest, by entering the bungalow of Dr. Charles M'Cardy, Civil Surgeon of Cawnpore.

Second Additional Charge.—With conduct highly disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—First Instance.—In having, on the above mentioned occasion, without the slightest provocation, grossly abused and maltreated Khoda Bux, Khudmutgar, in the service of Dr. M'Cardy. Second Instance.—In having at the same time, during the absence of Dr. M'Cardy, broken open a box, and supplied himself with beer, after drinking which, he, Ens. Campbell, was conveyed to his buggy in a state of intoxication.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—Finding.—The Court having considered the evidence before it, is of opinion that Ens. J. A. Campbell, H.M.'s 10th Foot, is, with respect to the first instance of the charge, guilty, excepting the word "falsely," of which the Court acquits him.

That in the second instance he is guilty, with the exception of the word "entertained," of which the Court acquits him, as well as of the criminality conveyed in the following passage, "during which evening the house was visited by Gunner James Printon, who, for a short time, sat at table;" the Court considering the evidence insufficient to establish the fact here represented. In the third instance, that Ens. Campbell is guilty of having, on the evening of the same day, whilst in a state of intoxication, beaten and kicked Khoda Bux, Khudmutgar, but the Court finds him not guilty of the remainder of this cond., and acquits him thereof.

The Court is of opinion, with respect to the facts found in these three instances, that Ens. Campbell is guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman. The Court is further of opinion, that on the first additional charge Ens. Campbell is guilty. That in the first instance of the second additional charge he is guilty, and, in the second instance, that he is guilty, with the exception of having "broken open a box," and of being conveyed to his buggy in an extreme state of intoxication, of which exception portion the Court acquits him; and with respect to these two instances the Court finds Ens. Campbell guilty of unbecoming conduct.

Sentence.—The Court sentences Ens. J. A. Campbell, H.M.'s 10th Foot, to be cashiered.—Approved. H. FANE, Gen.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court having discharged its duty in trying the above sentence, in obedience to the Articles of War, would, in consideration of Ensign Campbell's youth and experience, and the earnest request and contrition by him expressed, respectfully recommend him to such alleviation as the Commander of the forces may be able to afford him.

Remarks by His Excellency.—The Commander in Chief can see no grounds for the "alleviation," which the members of the Court recommend, because the misconduct of the prisoner was in direct disregard of, and inattention to, the warning of his Commanding Officer, conveyed in the letter of Dec. 9, 1837. The sentence to have effect from the date of its publication at Cawnpore.—By order of the Commander-in-Chief,

J. BYRNE, Major, Assist. Adj. Gen. H.M.'s Forces in India.

Cumberland, the gallant Commander of the detachment, entered the room, he was welcomed by his men with three loud and hearty cheers. The kilted sons of Caledonia sounded their gathering, and the barrack was tastefully decorated with laurels, a star of bayonets facing the door, and St. Andrew, surrounded by the Scotch thistle, underneath the Sphynx, Egypt, and the other memorable insignia of the regiment's heroic deeds; a triumphal arch in the centre of the room, with a crown of laurels suspended from it, and two cross swords over the crown, with the words "This we will defend." The entertainment was altogether splendid.

The three new 32-pounders of nine feet, eight feet six inches, and eight feet, respectively, have been ranged; and it has been found that the eight-foot gun, of 42 cwt., with a charge of six pounds, has given greater ranges than the gun of nine feet, and 50 cwt., with a charge of eight [illegible] vant), Tyne, in quarantine from Constantinople, whence she arrived on Sunday last, and Weasle, caulking, will remain in port, besides Ceylon, receiving-ship, and the st..packets Achel and Blazer, waiting their turn of service. Confiance left Naples on 28th ult., on which day Megera arrived from Alexandria, but brought no Indian Mail, the same not having arrived Alexandria down to 22d, although five days over due, owing, is supposed, to the inefficient state of the Hugh Lindsay, which turn it was to convey the same from Bombay to Suez. Megera returned to Alexandria on the 31st ult, with the London Mail which arrived by Blazer from Gibraltar on the preceding evening. On the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, a ball was given by Major M. Louis's troop R. H. Artillery, at the barracks of that corps, in Limerick Garrison. The dancing, which commenced to the air of "The Plains of Waterloo," lasted for full two hours, and consisted of about 100 couples on the floor. It was then immediately followed by "The Triumph," and was carried on with renewed vigour for above an hour, and was followed by a hornpipe, after which the healths of our Sovereign Lady and the Duke of Wellington were drank by all present with three times three, together with the healths of Lieut.-Col. J. Michell, C.B., commanding Rl. Artillery in the district, Major M. Louis, commanding the troop, and the only two of the troop now serving, who were present at Waterloo, viz., Quartermaster-Serj. David Best, and Master-Tailor Robert Law. Everything was carried on with the strictest propriety and regularity, and it may not be unnecessary to add, that it was intended for some time by Captain A. Macbean at present commanding the troop, Captain Macquarie, Scots Greys Lieut. Needham, R.H.A., and Sam Needham, together with several other ladies. The young men composing the troop were each accompanied by a ball partner invited from the garrison, all of whom were strictly respectable. The ball room was decorated with laurels and bouquets, and at either ends were formed stars made of dream swords, bayonets, and other cavalry appendages. The music consisted chiefly of violins and clarionettes. The principal entrance was covered over by a canopy of evergreens, and guarded at either side by two brass pieces of ordnance, a demonstration likely to recal to the remembrance of many present the use to which similar ones were converted twenty-four years since. The only regret manifested by the troop on this occasion was caused by the absence of Major Louis, who is on leave. The fete terminated at six o'clock the following morning, in the greatest order and harmony.

The Right Hon. Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, K.C.B. and K.C.H., accompanied by Maj. Forster, A.A.G., and Capt. Hon. R. Bruce, A.D.C., arrived in Longford, June 24, on a tour of inspection. He proceeded to the barracks, where he remained for upwards of an hour, inspected the detachments of the 8th Hussars and 99th Foot, and lunched with Maj. Macpherson and Lieut. Read, 99th, and Capt. Shewell and Cornet Wilson, 8th Hussars, the officers in command there. Sir Edward left Longford Barracks about two o'clock for Boyle, where he arrived in the evening, and inspected the depot of the Rl. Irish Fusiliers. The remains of the gallant veteran will be interred at the Rl. Garrison Chapel, Portsmouth, with Military honours, this day at 2 o'clock. The Lords of the Admiralty have signified that every mark of respect that can be shewn the deceased will be agreeable to them. The Rl. Marine Artillery, which Sir Richard so long and so ably commanded, will fire nine guns previous to the usual three rounds of small arms, which will be fired by a detachment of all the troops off duty, under the command of Col. Jones, R.M. The bands of the Royal Marines and 84th regiment will attend, as will of course all the officers of the Army and Navy at Portsmouth. We also understand it is the intention of every householder in the town to shew the respect for the deceased by closing their windows during the time of the funeral.

It is strongly rumoured at Bombay that three Queen's regiments are to be immediately sent to that Presidency—one from Ceylon, the other two from Bengal and Madras. May we ask which corps are to be found available for the duty just at present?—Madras U. S. G., April 5th.

1st Foot, 21 Patt.—A General Court-Martial assembled at Chatham on Monday, for the trial of Paym. Sharp of this battalion, on charges preferred by the Commander-in-Chief and Secretary-at-War, for entering into bill speculations with a person of the name of Hoare, unconnected with his regimental duties—Col. Fremantle, Coldstream Guards, President. Mr. Anderson appeared from the Horse Guards as prosecutor. The Court continued sitting till Wednesday, when the proceedings closed. We shall give the result when approved by Her Majesty.

5 L.—Capt. L'Estrange, late of this reg., is about to leave Ireland, having exchanged into the 21 t, at Madras.

8th—arrived at Halifax 5th May, in the Pique, Andromache, and Wanderer men-of-war, from Montego Bay, Jamaica. They disembarked at two o'clock yesterday. The 8th left Halifax about five years ago, and bring back some familiar faces; but few of the gallant corps who left our shores in health and vigour have withstood the effects of the pestilential climate.—Halifax Times, May 7

9th—The Plantagenet sailed from Portsmouth, June 20th, for Bengal, with Lieut. Farrant and Ens. Palmer.

10th—At a General Court-Martial re-assembled at Cawnpore, 21st Feb., 1839, Ens. J. A. Campbell was arraigned on the following charges:—Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman in the following instances:—

First.—In having neglected to attend parade for muster on

The corps, after the termination of the siege operations, assembled in columns in close order in the square at Brompton Barracks, and opening out from the front to wheeling distance, marched past Sir W. Waire and the deputation in slow and quick time. Shortly after a charge of 30 pounds of powder was fired at the bottom of the Medway, to shatter a supposed wreck. The charge was fired by the battery at a distance of 500 feet, and in very deep water. The whole of the arrangements were well managed, and not the least entertaining portion of the day's proceedings was the dinner at the Crown, given by the Court of Directors. This was followed by a subscription ball, at which all the rank and fashion of the county attended. We regretted the absence of Sir Richard Jenkins, the Chairman, and of the Marquess of Douro, who were both compelled to attend the debate of Monday in Parliament.

Ship Letters from South Seas, Pernambuco, Sydney, by the Ann, Bull, arrived at Milford.

Portsmouth, June 28.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Boadicea transport, Apollo troop-ship, and Pantaloon brig, tender to the Royal George yacht, have arrived during the last week. The transport from Bermuda, with upwards of 100 convicts, whose transportation is near at an end, and some invalids and stores; Captain Lindsay, of the Royal Artillery, had them in charge. The Boadicea has since gone to Woolwich, having previously removed the convicts into the hulks here. The Apollo was from Trincomalee and the Cape of Good Hope; she had the 58th regiment on board from Ceylon, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Frith; they have been landed on the other side of the water, and are in Haslar Barracks for the present: the Apollo is in harbour refitting. The Pantaloon was from Quebec (18 days), brought invalids, discharged men and despatches; she is ordered to Milford to take some marines, and to return with supernumeraries. Hydra steamed yesterday to Plymouth on her way to the Mediterranean Cuckoo Post-office steamer came in harbour yesterday afternoon. Avon steamer returned from Cork on Saturday evening, and this morning she embarked about 110 of the 2d battalion of the 60th Rifles, and has gone with them to Ireland; there is another draft left, which she will carry over. Messenger steamer has been engaged during the week in the trial of Mr. Grant's newly-invented fuel for steamers; in this case it answered very well; Captain-Superintendent Sir E. Chatham went in her; the vessel took a turn round the Isle of Wight. Hastings is at Spithead nearly ready for sea; a part of her crew are at work on the Revenge, still lying alongside the jetty; they have got some victualling stores on board, and made as much progress as their means will admit. Lily is in dock under refit, and Clio in the basin. Britannia is very nearly ready to go to her moorings. The anniversary of Her Majesty's coronation has been celebrated in this port in the customary manner, by the ships and batteries being decorated with flags, and the former firing a royal salute at 12 o'clock. The people in the public departments have not been at work since noon. The Gorgon has opened a rendezvous in Portsea for seamen. Ships in Port—Hastings, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Lily, Clio, Apollo, Seaflower, Pantaloon, Messenger st.-v., and Saracen's prize, in harbour.

Plymouth, June 28.—(From our own Correspondent).—21st—Rolla, 10, Lieut.-Com. C. Hall, having had her defects made good, went out of harbour, and sailed for the coast of Spain on the 26th. Arrived the Netley, tender to the Impregnable, from Liverpool, with volunteers for the Belleisle, 74, Capt. J. T. Nicolas. 24th—Sailed Aud lighter, with stores for Portsmouth and Sheerness Dockyards. 25th—Sailed Swale, tender to the Astrea, with stores for the packets at Falmouth; also Camel lighter, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard. 26th—Sailed Devon lighter, with stores for Lord John Hay's squadron. 27th—Vengeance, 84, was hauled out of dock, having been new coppered, and America, 50, was taken in the same tide to have her copper cleaned. 28th—Nile, 92, will be launched this afternoon at a quarter past five; the following are her dimensions, viz.:—Length of keel for tonnage, 170 feet 4 inches; length of gun deck, 205 feet 6 inches; breadth to outside of wales, 54 feet 3 inches; breadth for tonnage, 53 feet 7 inches; breadth moulded 52 feet 9 inches; depth in hold, 23 feet 2 inches; burthen in tons, 2,598 and 1-94th. Cornwallis, 74, Capt. Sir R. Grant, will be paid off on Tuesday next. We have seen a letter from Pique, 36, Capt. E. Boxer, dated Halifax, 31st May; she was to sail for St. John's, New Brunswick, the next day, return to Halifax, and it was thought she would then be ordered to England. Inconstant, 26, Capt. D. Pring, was at Halifax on 31st May. The following ships have been appropriated for the accommodation of the public, at the launching of the Nile, viz.:—Caledonia, Calcutta, Lancaster, Forte, Phœbe, and Pallas. In the Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Cornwallis, Belleisle, Druid, Pandora, Carron st.-v. In the Sound—Hercules, Childers.

Malta, June 6.—On Thursday morning the division under the orders of Commodore Sir Thos. Fellowes, consisting of Princess Charlotte, Vanguard, Asia, and Zebra, returned into port, having extended their eight days' cruise no further than the Faro of Messina, during which they anchored at Syracuse and Catania, and having remained two days at each port, many of the officers were enabled to ascend Mount Ætna. The nobility and Sicilian gentry visited the respective ships, and were quite delighted with the civility and attention shown them by the Commodore and officers. On Thursday, at sunset, Admiral Sir R. Stopford, re-shifted his flag to Princess Charlotte, from Rodney, and at daylight yesterday put to sea with Vanguard, Belleraphon, Minden, Talavera, Castor, and Dido. We understand Castor will be despatched to Athens, and the rest will proceed to Palermo, and probably thence to Naples, but will be back here before the end of the month, to receive final orders from England as to whether they are to proceed or not to the Levant this summer. On Sunday last Zebra sailed for Catania to recover an anchor left there last week owing to a grou'd swell, and from thence she will join the Admiral, who has left orders for Asia to follow him to-day, and Rodney to morrow, so that after these departures only Rhadamanthus st.-frigate, Pembroke, refitting (to proceed to the Levant), Tyne, in quarantine from Constantinople, whence she arrived on Sunday last, and Weazle, cashing, will remain in port, besides Ceylon, receiving-ship, and the st. packets Acheron and Blazer, waiting their turn of service. Confiance left for Naples on 28th ult., on which day Megæra arrived from Alexandria, but brought no Indian Mail, the same not having arrived at Alexandria down to 22d, although five days over due, owing, it is supposed, to the inefficient state of the Hugh Lindsay, whose turn it was to convey the same from Bombay to Suez. Megæra returned to Alexandria on the 31st ult, with the London Mails, which arrived by Blazer from Gibraltar on the preceding evening. On 31st, Volcano sailed for the Ionian Islands and Patras, and Hermes for Gibraltar. On Monday last, Mr Hall, of Castor, Midshipman, passed his examination for a Lieutenant on board Rodney. In Port—Ceylon (bearing the flag of R.-Adm. Sir J. Louis), Rodney, Pembroke, Tyne, Weazle, steam-frigate Rhadamanthus, steamers Acheron, Blazer.

Malta, June 15.—An English squadron, composed of three ships of the line, two frigates, a corvette, and two steamers, left on the 8th for the coast of Syria. The Bellerophon has just sailed for the coast of Sicily, to join the ships which are to proceed from thence to the coast of Syria.

H.M.'s sloop Ætna, Sir J. Wilson Commander, arrived here on Sunday morning, it is understood, for the purpose of receiving recruits for the Navy. This vessel has been, it is stated, in Scotland, for a similar purpose, but has received very few seamen, and, in all probability, her success here will be little better. Forty years ago she mounted 28 guns;—she was under the command of Lord Exmouth at Toulon, and is well adapted for shoal water and bombarding. She was made to give, on that occasion, to the gallant Admiral efficient support. Her Commander is also like the Ætna, a veteran in the service;—when Captain of the foretopmast of the Shannon, he was promoted for gallantly risking his own life in aiding to save the life of the brave Sir Phillip Brook, in the celebrated action on board the Shannon. It is several years since a vessel of this class was in Shields.—Gateshead Observer.

Jamaica, May 14.—Vessels ordered home—Andromache, 28, Capt. Baynes, C.B.—Nimrod, 20, Com. Fraser—Ringdove, 16, Com. Hon. K. Stewart—and Wanderer, Com. Bushy. Serpent, 16, Hon. Com. Gore, left for Havannah on 4th—Vestal, Captain Carter, left on 5th for Barbadoes, and Dee, 41., Com. Sherin, on 6th, for St. Thomas's. Nimrod, 20, left on 28th ult. for Nassau.

Barbadoes.—By the brig Stormont, twenty-five days' passage, we are informed of the following movements of H M.'s ships at that island:—Charybdis, Lieut. Tinling, arrived May 14th, from St. Thomas's, in twelve days, and sailed on 17th for Jamaica. Columbia, st., Lieut. Thompson, arrived there on 15th, and the brigantine Buzzard, Lieut. Fitzgerland, on the same day, from Prince's Island, in thirty-nine days. Racer, Com. Byng, arrived on 16th, from Martinique, in two days.

Rio de Janeiro, 4th April.—[We give an extract from another letter.]—H.M.S. Electra, Commander Wm. Preston, has just returned to this port from England, having captured two more slavers trading under Portuguese colours. This success has created no slight sensation in the slave market here, from the circumstance that one of the captured vessels, the Carolina, being held in high estimation as a fast sailer, bets were made that she would escape any of Her Majesty's ships. She was taken after a very interesting chase of 13 hours. The slaver Diligente, previously captured by the Electra on her passage to England, has been condemned by the mixed Court of Commissioners. The three prizes, having nearly 800 slaves on board, are lying in the harbour.

The late Colonel Sir Richard Williams (whose demise took place at Portsmouth on the 21st Instant) was appointed Second Lieut. 26th Aug., 1778; First Lieut. 17th Feb., 1781; placed on the reduced establishment of the corps 1st Sept. 1783, but employed on foreign service until 27th May, 1785, re-appointed to full-pay on 2d Mar. 1787; Capt.-Lieut., 14th May, 1795; Capt. of Rl. Marines, 27th Jan. 1796; Major in the Army, 25th Apr. 1808; appointed senior officer of an establishment of Rl. Marine Art., formed 1st Sept. 1804, and continued with that establishment until promoted to a Majority in the Rl. Marines, 15th Feb. 1809. He was appointed to form and to command a battalion of Royal Marines for foreign service, subsequently denominated the First Batt., on 27th Sept. 1810, and continued in the command of that battalion, variously employed in Portugal, in Spain, and in America, until the latter end of May, 1815, when, upon the return of the battalion to England, it was disbanded. The 21st Jan. 1813, he received the brevet of Lieut.-Col., and 20th Dec. 1827 that of Colonel; the 1st Jan 1816, he was appointed Maj. Commandant of the corps of R. Marine Art., consisting of four companies. For his services he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath.—He was on the retired full pay of the corps. Sir Richard was one of the Commissioners of Naval and Military Inquiry; an officer of high merit and distinction, highly esteemed as a soldier, and who in private life secured to himself, by his unaffected urbanity and benevolence of heart and demeanour, the regard of all his acquaintance. It falls to the lot of few men to leave behind them such sincere and heartfelt regret.

The remains of the gallant veteran will be interred at the Rl. Garrison Chapel, Portsmouth, with Military honours, this day at 2 o'clock. The Lords of the Admiralty have signified that every mark of respect that can be shewn the deceased will be agreeable to them. The Rl. Marine Artillery, which Sir Richard so long and so ably commanded, will fire nine guns previous to the usual three rounds of small arms, which will be fired by a detachment of all the troops off duty, under the command of Col. Jones, R M. The bands of the Royal Marines and 84th regiment will attend, as will of course all the officers of the Army and Navy at Portsmouth. We also understand it is the intention of every householder in the town to shew the respect for the deceased by closing their windows during the time of the funeral.

Electra sailed from Rio Janeiro for Valparaiso 10th Apr.

Hermes arrived from Malta at Gibraltar on 6th, and proceeded on her return 7th June.

Official Return of the Names of the Mates in Her Majesty's Navy, on the 1st day of January, 1839, the date of their examination for Lieutenant, and the ship in which they are serving:—Concluded from page 387.

Capt. Pechell has recently given notice of a motion in the House of Commons, on the subject of a bounty granted last session of Parliament to Captains of county vessels fitted as slavers, the purport of which motion is to show, by a memorial of Mr. Woodhead the Navy Agent, on behalf of the officers and crew of H.M.B. Buzzard, that the captors of these vessels derive little or no benefit from the Act of Parliament, in consequence of the bounty being paid on the number of tons those vessels measure under the present mode of admeasurement; whereby, as in the case referred to, a vessel built for this trade, capable of carrying from 270 to 300 slaves, and measuring 122 tons, according to the mode of admeasurement up to Sept., 1835, would only give bounty on 38 tons, according to the present mode of calculating the tonnage.

Sir James Clark, R.N., is the son of a respectable farmer on the Boyne. After studying in Edinburgh, and passing at Surgeons' Hall, London, for the Navy, Sir James was appointed Hospital Mate at Haslar, and in due time after serving afloat promoted to the rank of Surgeon. On the peace taking place, he returned to Edinburgh and took the degree of M.D., and soon after went to the Continent with a young gentleman, on whose death he settled in Rome, and eventually came to London, where he attained his present exalted station.

Mr. Edm. Hempstead, Mate of the Excellent, has joined the R.N. College upon the new principle.

The Boadicea tr., Lieut. Ward, Agent, arrived from Bermuda, whence she sailed on 21st May, has brought home 1,500 convicts, and a few Military invalids, under the charge of Capt. Lindsay, R.I. Artil. Madagascar and Snake were lying at Bermuda, the former had arrived there a few days previously from Vera Cruz, with freight on board for the Commissariat, and was about to proceed with freight for the Commissariat at Quebec and Newfoundland. Snake was refitting, and when completed was to go to Jamaica. The Com.-in-Chief, Sir T. Harvey, sailed for Halifax, with his flag on board Inconstant, on 14th May; Commodore Douglas, with his broad pennant on board Modeste, on 14th May for Jamaica; and Crocodile on the same day for Newfoundland.

Recruiting for the Navy is prosecuted with much vigour in Portsmouth. Every street nearly has its rendezvous for seamen.

The Lords of the Admiralty have issued orders prohibiting women and children, when embarked on board any of H.M.'s ships or troop-ships, the usual proportion of spirits; but in consideration thereof have granted them double allowance of tea, cocoa, and sugar.

The Camperdown, 104, is to be docked and examined at Sheerness. This small and compact three-decker is admirably adapted for a flag-ship (should such ever be required) in the Baltic.

The crew of the Pylades, recently paid off at Plymouth, before discharge, presented, through Commander Castles, the Boatswain with a gold chain and call, the Carpenter with a handsome gold snuff-box, as a proof of good feeling after nearly four years' service together.

The Hon. Col. Morton's yacht that was seized has been released, but some of the crew are still in jail.

The Cambridge, 80, is ordered for commission at Sheerness, and it is reported Capt. Taylor, of the San Josef, will command her. This noble ship is built after the late Danish Christian the Seventh.

The Layton convict-ship has sailed from Deptford, and to call at Woolwich.

The Worcester, 52, on the slip at Deptford, has been surveyed this week, and found in good order.

Orestes arrived at Rio Janeiro from River Plate, 24th April.

Fleets in the Mediterranean.—Toulon, June 9.—The Porte has 7 ships-of-the-line, 8 frigates, 4 brigs, 2 cutters, and 2 steamers. Total, 23 well-armed and well-armed and well-equipped vessels. The Egyptian fleet comprises 12 ships-of-the-line, 4 frigates, 4 sloops, 3 brigs, and 1 steamer. In all, 24 vessels. The Russian fleet in the Black Sea is composed of 2 120-gun ships, 1 of 110, 8 of 84, 3 of 74, 6 60-gun frigates, 4 44-gun frigates, 5 24-gun sloops, and a considerable number of small vessels. In all, a fleet of about 50 sail. The French fleet consists of 4 ships-of-the-line, 1 sloop, and 1 brig. The English fleet, under Adm. Sir R. Stopford, comprises 8 ships-of-the-line:—Princess Charlotte, 104; Rodney, 92; Asia, 84; Vanguard, 80; Bellerophon, 80; Minden, 47; Talavera, 74; Pembroke, 74; 2 frigates—Castor, 36; and Talbot, 28; Tyne sloop, 28; and Jaseur brig, 16.

Fly arrived from Cobija at Valparaiso, 19th March. Harrier arrived from San Blas at Valparaiso, 18th March.

Royal Marines.—Capt. Palmer, Sec.-Lieut. R. B. Monds (Woolwich division) 2 Serjs., 1 Corporal, 1 drummer, and 23 privates, have embarked on board the Hercules. Capt. Barnes, First-Lieuts. Payne and Hollingsworth, with 5 Serjs., 4 Corporals, 2 fifers, and 66 privates, embarked on board the Winchester for Pembroke, to relieve the detachment there.

We give another letter from the Persian Gulf:—

H.M.S. Wellesley, April 16th.—"Sir F. Maitland being on a visit to Capt. Hennell, the British Resident, and his lady, at Bushire, and about to return to the ship from the landing-place he debarked at, opposite the Residency, it was intimated to him by the Persian Governor at a visit of ceremony, that when he re-embarked for the ship with his luggage, it must be from the landing place near the Custom House in the town, and that a deviation from that regulation would be opposed, but Sir F. told him that as he had landed so also would he embark from the beach opposite the Residency, and that the consequence of resisting him would be on the head of the Governor. Accordingly being desired, after this avowal, to be in readiness on the preceding evening for fighting service, I kept into the armed boats, on the morning of the 26th ult., at daylight, and, after a pull of eight miles, approached the shore, when the Persians, under cover of some redoubts, opened a brisk fire of musketry on both our flanks. Two men were slightly wounded, Serjt. Evans and Private Hill. Some few shots were returned, but I did not wait to let the Marines with me discharge their muskets, the boat I was in being on the left of the whole, but pulled instantly for the beach, and formed my party of 70 as rapidly as possible, this being quickly effected the firing ceased, the Persians flying in all directions, leaving one killed and one or two wounded. Sir F. did not wish to pursue the advantage we had gained any further, and he embarked as he had told the Governor he would do, accompanied by Lady Maitland and Mrs. Hennell; the boats remained for some time taking off the luggage and furniture of the Resident. I remained on shore with 40 men, Lieut. Urquhart and Lieut. Walker, of the Bombay Engineers, a volunteer, for the protection of the Residency, and the Resident's own guard of 24 Sepoys, added to my royals, gave me an army of 61 for the general protection—blowing weather, which cut off all communication with the ship, detaining me on constant garrison duty until the 30th, the Persians hourly increasing by large armed tribes coming in from the country, mounting guns, and entrenching themselves near us. I was not idle in getting a brass gun and two swivels on the parapet of a high building which commanded them, which was my citadel and last hold in case of being overpowered by numbers, but we were on host in ourselves and a dread to the Persians. The morning of the 30th dawned in beauty and calmness, and at daylight all the boats of the ship armed to the bows were seen approaching to the shore, they were soon at the landing-place, and in an hour or two all the remaining furniture and effects of the Resident and his number six suits being safely deposited in them, I marched my small band of 50 men through an assembled crowd of between 400 and 500 armed Persians down to the beach, and immediately embarked, the boats backing out, with their guns to the shore, but no further hostilities were offered. After the lapse of a few days an embassy arrived to arrange the differences between the Governor and the Resident, and Sir F. was requested to remain a short time. The following is an extract from a letter sent by Captain Hennell to the Governor of Bushire on the proceedings:—"The conduct of the party of Royal Marines left in the residency for its protection, by His Excellency Sir F. Maitland at my request, was most satisfactory, and I feel greatly indebted to Capt. Ellis, of the corps, the officer in command, for the very able and efficient measures adopted by him to place the building in a state of defence, under the menacing attitude assumed by the local authorities. J. Hennell, Resident, Persian Gulf."

The Coast Guard.—I understand that a commission, composed of several Lords of the Treasury, is at present investigating into the manner in which this important branch of the public service is conducted. The spare time of their Lordships cannot be better employed, and as they do not act in the capacity of paid commissioners, the gallant Sir Thomas Hyde Page will not attempt to stay their proceedings, nor throw obstacles in the way, if they are inclined to make most searching inquiries into the state of the Coast-Guard Service, not only as it may affect the protection of the revenue by the prevention of smuggling, but also as to its efficiency as a useful augment to the Naval Service, which the public believes it to be, and which, on its original formation, was held out to Parliament as a justification for its great cost to the nation. I have no documents that could enable me to ascertain the amount which must have been expended on the various marine barrack villas, adorned with white painted flag staffs, with which the coasts of the United Kingdom are studded. But in looking into the last year's finance accounts, under the head "Customs' Department," I find 170 000*l.* charged for the maintenance of the preventive land and water-guard of Great Britain and Ireland, besides revenue cruizers 115,000*l.*, together nearly half a million per annum. The worthy board of civilians, the Commissioners of the Customs do not, I see, condescend to afford Parliament any information as to this expenditure, nor as to the amount of the disposable force under their command, consisting of 5,000 men, over which the Admiralty have no control, besides 200 or 300 Naval officers! Nor can I find the number, names, tonnage, force, or description of their cruising craft. I hope some independent member of the honourable house will supply these deficiencies, and move also for a return of any capture or captures which either or any of the said Custom house cruizers may have been fortunate enough to make for the last three years. If Parliament chooses to exercise no control over so large an expenditure, what is to be said of the Admiralty which delegates its power to such a Board as the Customs? making officers of Her Majesty's fleet dependent for promotion on a certificate of their being good Custom-house officers; and, should a war break out, apparently qualifying them for the command of frigates and line of-battle ships, because they have been promoted over the heads of their sea-going brethren, on the recommendation of the Chairman of the Board of Customs, and in all probability for their subserviency to the Honourable Board, by having given the Commissioners and Comptroller-General of the Coast Guard as little trouble in their vocation as possible? If the commission now sitting would move for copies of the correspondence of the Coast Guard officers with the Board of Customs, they will obtain some curious information, which I trust may lead to putting an end to a system which is derogatory to the character of the Navy, and prejudicial to the interests of the public. I shall hereafter trouble you with a few further remarks on this subject.—Correspondent, Morning Chronicle.

The Coast Guard station at Salcombe detained one man for having been concerned in landing some tubs on the 18th inst.; the boat and 19 tubs were secured at the same time. On the 20th, the Yanflett Creek Coast Guard boat seized 16 boxes of cigars (about 36lbs.) on board the Windsor homeward-bound East Indiaman. On the 24th, a seizure of 149 tubs, and the capture of one man, who was in the act of carrying away one tub, was made by the Coast Guard at Whitenose station in the Weymouth district. A small number of those were picked up by the Osmington station. On the 22d inst., a seizure of 63 tubs and 5 men was made at Budleigh Salterton, under circumstances which reflected very great credit on the boatmen who had the look-out. It was necessary to haul the smugglers and the tubs up over the cliff. Mr. Robert Synge appointed Mate of the Ranger, R.C. vice Bamber, resigned. The appointments of Inspecting Commanders for the 5th July have not been received.

Yachts. Cowes, June 26th.—Lord Yarborough, in his yacht Kestrel, returned here yesterday from a cruise. The Elizabeth, Hon. A. H. Moreton, has arrived at the rendezvous. Lord Exmouth has sailed in his yacht for Naples. Several of the vessels belonging to the members of the squadron are at anchor off here.

The Morning Star, R.Y.S., arrived in the Bay of Cadiz, with the Hon. H. Upton, Lord Lovain, and the Hon. Josceline Percy on 8th inst. Several of the R.Y.S. are expected to rendezvous in this delightful harbour in the course of the ensuing month.

PUNCH SONG.—From the German.

Four noble elements,
Joined in the bowl,
The mirror of life are,
The light of the soul.

Crush first the golden lime,
Crush his bright mad,—
Aye sharpness and bitterness
Joy leaves behind.

With the sugar cane's milk,
from
The Isles of the West,
Tame his fierce lava-floods,
Calm him to rest.

Push in the water, now,
Foam-gleaming tide,—
Water embraceth
The universe wide.

Next the Spirit who builds on
The wine-press his throne,—
He that the life of life
Giveth alone.

Quick ere he vanisheth,
Fill for the brave,
While yet glows the nectar,
Drink deep of his wave!

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE LINE THE BAYONET, NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—A few weeks since you were so good as to insert in the N. & M. G. some observations of mine on the claims of the Line; and, in conclusion, I expressed my opinion of the musket and bayonet, as being the best of weapons for Infantry.

Your correspondent, Arthur, in an article in your last week's Paper, complains that I have accused him of recommending scythes and pitchforks in place of the musket and bayonet. I must beg your correspondent to peruse again with attention the article in question, and he will find that I have mentioned neither his name nor that of any other person as upholders of the scythe and pitchfork system, and deterrers of the musket and bayonet; and I am therefore quite at a loss to conjecture why he has drawn such conclusions from any part of my letter to you. There are some persons to be found who, not until long since the termination of the war, have most ingeniously discovered that the musket and bayonet, by which the British Infantry long ago raised itself to the highest pinnacle of fame and glory, is a vile and worthless tool. This weapon, which has ever been the terror of our enemies, and the sheet anchor of the British Army in every situation in which it is possible that troops could be placed, it is now the fashion with a few (a very few only) to denounce. Since the war, all sorts and descriptions of nostrums have been recommended in various periodical works as substitutes for the musket and bayonet. Broad-swords and pikes are held up to our admiration by some; scythes, pitchforks, and bludgeons, by others; and I saw, not long since, an article in some publication or other, in which one or two swivels, on a traverse, were recommended to be attached to every company of Riflemen: and a most portable and efficient accompaniment it would undoubtedly prove in the desultory description of warfare so frequently carried on by that description of troops, and especially so in rough and mountainous districts.

I have seen these and various other modes for destroying our enemies suggested, and I therefore felt myself perfectly warranted in expressing an ardent hope (which I now repeat) that "we may long cling to the musket and bayonet, and that it may long continue in use in our ranks, in preference to broad-swords, pikes, scythes, and pitchforks, so strongly recommended by some few theorists of the present day."—Ninety-nine out of every hundred of practical and experienced soldiers will agree with me in thinking it by far the most perfect and the most formidable weapon ever invented; and it would be almost superfluous to add, that it enabled our unrivalled Infantry, during a long and sanguinary war, to bear away the palm from the most experienced and the best commanded troops in Europe. If, then, it has ever sufficed against such opponents, I am at a loss to conceive how any doubts can, for one instant, be entertained as to its efficacy against any lawless rabble which may be rash enough to put it to the proof. A mere handful of Infantry sufficed for the Welsh miners and colliers at Merthyr, and a detachment of the 45th regiment taught the deluded followers of the lunatic Courtnay such a lesson in Kent, as will, in all probability, prevent them from trying a similar experiment again. Should enemies of that description deem it better generalship to shut themselves up in barns or other buildings, with a view of setting at defiance the troops sent to suppress them, they would very soon discover that they had committed an egregious mistake; for if a piece of Artillery happened not to be immediately at hand, wherewith to blow open the doors and windows, some pioneers, with crowbars, and other implements of a similar nature, which are used in real warfare for forcing doors and windows of barricaded buildings, would speedily effect an opening, through which the Infantry would rush with fixed bayonets, and the business would be settled in a manner by no means satisfactory to the garrison.

Arthur invites me to disprove certain axioms of his; but as I have never touched on either of those points in my letter to you, Mr. Editor, but merely stated my opinion of the musket and bayonet in general terms, I do not feel myself called on to enter into a lengthy discussion in defence of a weapon to which our Army is so mainly indebted for its numberless splendid victories. The facts speak for themselves. Arthur lays great stress on the bayonet exercise. That our Infantry soldiers would be more profitably employed in practising to poke and thrust with the bayonet than in learning the sword exercise (a weapon with which they are not armed), I am very ready to admit; but I need not remind Arthur,—if he has ever served in the field,—that the magical effect so constantly wrought by the musket and bayonet in the hands of our Infantry has not been by a few isolated men (to use a phrase of our French neighbours) stabbing and poking, and thrusting at each other, but by the irresistible charge in line, whether in the attack or in the defence of positions, preceded by one volley and a loud cheer. It is this mode of applying the weapon in question that has caused our enemies, in all parts of the globe, so often to recoil and to fly before it in utter confusion and dismay. In the dark and unenlightened age to which I allude, the Imperial Legions of Napoleon were such simpletons as to fly in terror before an Infantry which was totally uninstructed in bayonet fencing; and I am sanguine enough to believe that similar results will follow if our Infantry are again brought in contact with any troops of any nation.

I have already stated what all the Military world knows, or ought to know, that our Army owes its glorious victories to its always endeavouring to close with its opponents, and to settle the business with the bayonet; and, in my opinion, Arthur need not entertain those doubts and apprehensions which he expresses as to the result, if our Infantry are called on to suppress Chartists or others of the same kidney, who will, undoubtedly, find that meddling with edged tools is a most unsafe and unpleasant experiment. With the particulars of Colonel Thompson's affray with some Arabs I am not sufficiently acquainted, and shall, therefore, offer no opinion on the subject; but my belief is unshaken, that 650 regular British Infantry (which is the number stated to have been under Colonel Thompson's command) are, if ably directed, quite a match for any 650 human beings on the face of the earth, whether Cavalry or Infantry, in mountains or in the plain.

I must be permitted to believe, that had bayonet fencing been introduced at so early a period as the American revolutionary war, the result at Bunker's Hill would have been precisely the same; and I shall probably be deemed an incorrigible sceptic by some few for doubting whether a single soldier more would have fallen on either side if this new theory had been then known.

As to the fate of detachments of Infantry which may be employed to defend manufactories in disturbed districts, I am obliged again to differ in opinion with Arthur. Is it to be conceived that an Infantry which successfully resisted, hour after hour, the reiterated and desperate attacks of the brave, numerous, and highly-excited troops of Napoleon, fighting under his own eye, and aided by the fire of an overwhelming Artillery, which poured death and destruction every instant on the dauntless defenders of Huguemont and La Haye Sainte,—is it to be conceived, I repeat, that such an Infantry, well supplied with ammunition, would be dislodged from manufactories properly barricaded by an infatuated rabble, aided by dust-carts and hair mattresses?

Surely I am not singular in holding an opinion on this point diametrically opposite to that of Arthur. It was my lot to be employed in the disturbed districts of the northern part of the kingdom, in 1819 and 1820, and I am enabled, therefore, to say a few words in reply to the queries of Arthur as to the steps which ought to be taken when troops are called out on this most unpleasant duty.

I have many times seen troops deployed quite across streets, and I never remember to have witnessed anything like an attempt on the part of the populace to crowd in too close on the soldiers, provided they were cautioned by the officer commanding to keep back, and the front rank (if Infantry are employed) brings his musket and bayonet to the charging position; for the populace, the mob, the rabble, or by whatever name you are pleased to call them, have an aversion to approach too close to a line of musketeers, and they have an additional objection to a too intimate acquaintance with certain drachms of powder and the ounce of lead, which they well know is contained within that tube called a musket.

The best and most harmless mode of obliging a mob to get out of the way and to recede rapidly, (unless they are becoming mischievous and proceeding to extremities) is to deploy a few dragoons across the street, who, by backing their horses on the toes of the most forward of the mob, will instantly cause them to get away in all haste. Of this I have had frequent ocular demonstration, and that too in one of the most densely populated cities in the kingdom, where an exceedingly bad and turbulent spirit existed at the time. I agree with Arthur that the musket and bayonet is less adapted for escalades than a sword, to which I would add also a pistol; but as in every other situation in which troops are liable to be placed, it is generally admitted to be an extremely perfect and formidable weapon, we must take it "for better, for worse," and not discard it from our ranks because it may not be so applicable in one particular instance, as weapons of another kind. Unhandy as is the weapon in question in scrambling up ladders, yet Picton's brave division contrived to mount and to carry the tremendously lofty walls of the castle of Badajos with it, in spite of the resistance made by the veteran troops lining the top. Such facts as these should never be lost sight of; they are better than half a million of theories. Sir Charles Napier has (in my opinion) very ably replied to Arthur's doctrine as to the superiority of national over mixed regiments, and I shall touch on that point no further than by stating that I happen to have seen a great deal of national as well as mixed regiments, both in campaigns and elsewhere, and until Arthur recently started the question, I never once, during a long Military life, recollect to have heard the subject mooted. I cannot but think it rather puerile, as well as injudious and unprofitable, to draw invidious comparisons, from whence no benefit can possibly be derived to the service, to individuals, or to the country. I entertain as high an opinion of national regiments as Arthur, and an infinitely higher one of mixed ones than he appears to do. In fine, I believe national corps to be, generally speaking, as good in every sense of the word as mixed ones; but that they have ever proved themselves better, braver, more devoted, more highly disciplined, or that they have outstript the mixed ones in any one excellence which we most appreciate in soldiers, I positively deny; and I am most certain my opinion on this score coincides with that of the great mass of officers and soldiers of practical experience.

My letter has extended to a much greater length than I at all intended, but before I conclude I beg to say a few words on an article, I believe of Arthur's, (if not his, I trust he will pardon my mistake) written some weeks or months ago in the Naval and Military Gazette, in which, speaking of riflemen, he wrote something like the following, or at all events words to that effect—"Riflemen can never be safely trusted at any distance from the support of cavalry, and it would be easy at any time to settle them with a body of sailors."

This appears to be the opinion of Arthur; but Arthur Duke of Wellington thought very differently. What the fate of the Rifle Brigade might have been (which formed no inconsiderable part of that splendid light division of the Peninsular Army) if, during the seven campaigns in that country, it had constantly been liable to be attacked by sailors instead of veteran French soldiers at the out-posts, I cannot take upon myself precisely to say; but I am strongly inclined to think that the labours of the rifleman would have been of a somewhat less arduous nature. No one holds our gallant tars in higher veneration than myself, yet am I so very unconscionable as to believe that British Riflemen on their own element (terra firma), are not less formidable than our seamen are on theirs. Neither Wellington nor any of the different chiefs of the light division ever hesitated to entrust to the Rifle Brigade the most perilous and most advanced posts of the Peninsular Army, frequently far away from the support of cavalry. Nor was this confidence misplaced; for during the whole of that protracted war, no one instance occurred of the Rifle Brigade, or of any of its detachments, being surprised by the vigilant enemy, in whose very teeth they were so constantly posted; nor had the French cavalry, at any one time during the war, the smallest success to boast of against them. I could give Arthur instances enough where the riflemen were detached many, many miles from the support of cavalry or artillery, but the following anecdote (for the accuracy of which I pledge myself) may suffice perhaps to prove to Arthur the very erroneous opinion he has formed as to the helplessness of riflemen.

In the month of March, 1810, previous to the invasion of Portugal by Massena's Army, the Rifle Brigade held the most advanced posts along the line of the river Agueda, and four of its companies were stationed at Barba del Puerco, having no cavalry nearer to their post than some of the 1st German Hussars, who were at Villa de Ciervo, a distance of ten or twelve miles at least. The French General, who commanded 9000 men on the opposite side of the river at San Felices, attacked the British at Barba del Puerco at midnight, with a chosen band of 600 grenadiers and light infantry, hoping to surprise, and, perhaps, to "settle" these helpless riflemen; but in casting up his accounts at the termination of the affray, the balance was most certainly not in favour of the attacking party. Before the assailants could reach the summit of the pass, the riflemen, under the gallant Sidney Beckwith, after having poured in their fire, fixed their swords on the rifles, and, with a loud cheer, charged right down on these midnight adventurers, who fled down the pass in an infinitely shorter space of time than was occupied by them in ascending it. They recrossed the bridge, and joined their reserve of 1500 men, having left many killed, wounded, and prisoners in the hands of the Rifle corps. Both the Duke of Wellington and General Craufurd expressed their approbation in the highest terms of this business: and it was such a lesson to the French, that during the five following campaigns in that country and in the south of France, a similar attempt was never again made against the green jackets.

Arthur will perhaps be convinced that Generals of no small note did venture to entrust posts of the utmost importance to riflemen, when immediate support from cavalry or artillery was impossible; and had he belonged to the light division in those days, he would know that "settling" British Riflemen is infinitely more simple in theory than in practice. In offering some observations a few weeks since on the claims of the line, it was solely with a hope that the suggestions therein contained might be considered worthy of notice, and not with a view of seeking a controversy. Yet I am ready, and, I hope able, if required, to defend the opinions I have offered on that subject. I have, &c.

MILFORD HAVEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your last Gazette is a proposition from your correspondent Philotheorus to change the packet station from Falmouth to Milford. After what Captain Manderson and an old officer some years since stated on the subject, I concluded no seaman, with the slightest knowledge of the two places, would ever advocate such a measure. In a few words I will endeavour to show that with a westerly wind blowing hard, a packet leaving Falmouth may, by carrying sail, weather Ushant, and proceed on her voyage; while the one on clearing the harbour of Milford Haven, would be unable on the larboard tack to get to windward of Ireland, or on the starboard to go to the westward of the Land's End, in truth it is a cul de sac, and with the prevalence of westerly winds quite an unsuitable place for packets. Then as to the convenience of a Dock-yard, Plymouth is quite near enough to afford all that is wanted. As to the packets being scarcely kept afloat, there is water enough for a line-of-battle ship if they wish to anchor in deep water.

COOPER'S HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Senior United Service Club,
Thursday, June 27th, 1839.

SIR,—You will oblige me by inserting the copy of the following letter in your columns when convenient.

SAMUEL THOMPSON, Captain, R.N.

(COPY).

United Service Club, Pall-Mall, Wednesday, June 26, 1839.

SIR,—Having read in the second volume of the "History of the Navy of the United States of America," by J. Fenimore Cooper, Esq., at page 259 of that volume, the following mis-statement of the force of H.M.S. Phœbe, in the action between that ship and the United States frigate Esser, off Valparaiso, on the 28th of March, 1814, viz.—

"Captain Porter, who had every opportunity of observing the armaments of the two English vessels, states, in his official communication to the department, that the Phœbe mounted 30 long eighteens, sixteen 32lb. carronades, with one howitzer, and six threes in her tops."

And again, in page 270 of the same volume—

"The Esser (with a very trifling exception, while closing) fought this battle with her six long twelves, opposed by fifteen long eighteens in broadside."

I have to request you to inform Mr. Cooper from myself (as I had the honour to serve on board the Phœbe on that occasion) that the above is a mis-statement, the Phœbe mounting only twenty-six long 18-pounders altogether, and, in fact, having only thirteen ports on either side of her main-deck, as may be ascertained by inspection of that frigate actually at this moment in Plymouth Harbour. Trusting that this evident mis statement may be duly corrected in your next edition, I remain, Sir, your obedient humble servant, SAMUEL THOMPSON, Capt., R.N.

To R. Bentley, Esq., New Burlington-street, publisher of the "History of the Navy of the United States of America," by J. F. Cooper, Esq.

A correspondent, under the signature of "Moustache," suggests to the Military Commission a plan which he describes "as trifling in point of expence," and just to all ranks; it is to grant 1s. a-day extra to each officer, without any reference to rank, for every seven years' full-pay service; so that an unfortunate Ensign of fourteen years' service, would have 2s. a-day extra, and a Field Officer of twenty-eight years' service, 4s. a-day extra, and so on for every seven years, up to the Field-Marshal. We recommend "Moustache" to furnish an estimate of the expense.

"A Constant Reader" has mistaken some remarks in our last. In defending Sir J. C. we made no "attack" on others. We most sincerely deplore the conduct a distinguished and amiable lady has met with, but, at the same time, consider Sir James as blameless in the matter.

Our attention has been called to a long statement put forth by Capt. Barber, respecting Steam Communication with India; the simple answer to the whole of which is, that the public does not come forward to supply the funds, and it is invidious to cast reflections on the Company for not doing that which the complaining party would be the first to condemn, under other circumstances, viz., to disarrange the existing system, although imperfect, before a most comprehensive one has acquired a consistency. The scheme proposed would be found prodigiously too expensive, and the Directors have to answer to the Proprietors for any waste of finances.

We cannot inform a correspondent at Higham Ferrers why the Wellingborough troop of Yeomanry Cavalry were selected to be disbanded, in preference to the other troops of the county, Wellingborough being the chief manufacturing town, and having the greatest population, except Northampton, in the county, and the only place where it has ever been necessary to call the Yeomanry out in aid of the civil power, to suppress riots, &c., since the formation of the force in 1831.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1839.

THE Military Commission sat twice this week, and will, if possible, meet twice next week; in which case the Report will be made at the end of the week.

The members of the United Service who have been examined before the Commission have, with one solitary exception, observed the most rigid secrecy in regard to their evidence. The exception referred to is that of the Naval Lieutenant, who thought himself at liberty to print his evidence and circulate printed copies through the public press.

THE constant theme for months past in our files of Cape papers has been the comments on the accusations of Lieutenant-Governor Stockenstrom against the English and Dutch settlers of the Cape Colony, as delivered by him before the committee on the aborigines previous to his obtaining his appointment to the Eastern Province of the Colony—the indignant denial of the colonists of the truth of the accusations of cruelty towards the Caffers—the counter-charge laid against the Lieutenant-Governor of having himself, some twenty years before, shot a Caffer youth, in cold blood, who was endeavouring to hide himself from his pursuers in a bush;—the action raised by Lieutenant-Governor Stockenstrom against the magistrate, Captain Campbell, for conspiracy, and for improperly taking the affidavits of the witnesses regarding the death of the Caffer youth; the opinion of the judges at the Cape that a Caffer youth had been shot by Captain Stockenstrom; their acquitting Captain Campbell of any conspiracy against the Lieutenant-Governor, who had then, with damages and costs, to pay to the amount of 3 000*l.*: finally, we have the Court of Inquiry (consisting of the Governor of the colony, his military Secretary, Captain Dundas, R.N., &c.) assembled by orders from England, to investigate the truth or falsehood of the charge against the Lieutenant-Governor. We subjoin the opinion of His Excellency Sir George Napier, who, with the other members, admits that the act of shooting the Caffer youth was committed, but who palliates it as having been justified by the usages of border warfare.

OPINION OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

Graham's Town, Cape of Good Hope, 11th June, 1838.

After mature deliberation upon the evidence before the Court of Inquiry, respecting the grave charge against Captain Stockenstrom, the Lieut.-Governor of the Eastern Districts of the Cape of Good Hope, of having 24 years ago "shot an unarmed helpless Caffer boy, while hiding under some driftwood, and in a cold-blooded deliberate manner," I have come to the following opinion:—

1. That Capt Stockenstrom was on the Commando in Caffer land in the year 1813.

2 That the Commando was under the orders of Major Fraser, an officer of high character and honour, and well known for his great humanity towards the Caffers on all occasions.

3. That the general orders promulgated on that Commando, by the Governor and Commander in Chief, were "to destroy and lay waste" and these orders were consequently issued to the troops and burghers on the Commando, and also to shoot all the male Caffers, as appears by evidence on the minutes of the Court.

4. That the Caffers on that day were in the bush on the banks of the Blinkwater River, and various other parts, as clearly shown in evidence, and that during the general rush, which was made to scour the bush on the banks of the river, Capt. Stockenstrom's party saw two Caffers concealing themselves under some driftwood in the bed of that river, and upon a cry of "the Caffers throw," Capt. Stockenstrom and others fired, and killed 2 Caffers.

5. That although several shots were fired, only two Caffers were found dead; but it appears clear to me from the evidence of several witnesses, and the statement sworn to by Capt. Andrews, an old and highly respectable officer, respectable officer, respecting Major Fraser's report, which Capt Andrews saw him write in his bed room at his house, that those two Caffers were armed with assagais, and were not helpless boys, but grown up young men

6 That all the witnesses who were present on that Commando fully agreed that Capt. Stockenstrom, the day before the shooting of the two Caffers, saved the lives of seven others, who were on the point of being shot in the camp, by running forward and placing himself between them and the pointed guns of the burghers who were just going to put them to death.

7. That from all the foregoing facts and circumstances, I am clearly and decidedly of opinion that Captain Stockenstrom, in shooting the Caffer, acted according to orders and the established custom of Commando warfare against Caffers as stated by all the witnesses, and I therefore fully and honourably acquit him of shooting an unarmed young Caffer boy in a cold blooded or cruel manner. He shot the Caffer in the bush, as any young officer of one-and-twenty years old, or indeed any officer would have done under the same circumstances and orders. I further declare it to be my opinion, according to the statements of every one of the evidences, without a single exception, that Captain Stockenstrom, although it was only a year after the barbarous murder of his father by Caffers, was totally incapable of a cruel cold-blooded murder of a Caffer boy in order to revenge that father's death,—the crime attempted to be fixed upon him by his enemies.

8 and lastly It appears to me that that the Civil Commissioner, Capt Campbell, certainly acted very injudiciously as a magistrate, by delaying to send the depositions of Klopper and Botha to the Governor, but in this I do not conceive he was actuated by any wish to injure Capt. Stockenstrom; and I am therefore, in justice to that magistrate and also to Mr. Van Ryneveld, called upon to acquit them of conspiracy against the Lieut.-Governor, but I am of opinion that there were persons who, in collecting evidence against Capt. Stockenstrom, did not conduct themselves in a fair or open manner, and that pains were taken to excite the angry feelings of the burghers or boers against the Lieut. Governor. Capt. Stockenstrom, for his evidence given so fearlessly before the Committee of the British House of Commons.

GEORGE NAPIER,
Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Cape of Good Hope.

WE understand that the 96th Regiment cannot be spared from the manufacturing districts in which it is now quartered, but, as convict guards may be required, they will proceed to Chatham for embarkation. Six months ago we informed our readers that the 96th Regiment would proceed to Australia, and that the 7th would neither embark for India nor for N. S. Wales. We, though not Yankees, can "guess" pretty well at these arrangements.

THE standard of recruits for all regiments of infantry in India and Australia has been lowered since our last publication another half inch. The recruits are now taken at five feet five inches. The remarks which we made last week are now still more applicable, and we trust that no men above the age of twenty may be enlisted, unless they be five feet six inches:—growing lads, from sixteen to nineteen, at five feet five inches, are excellent recruits and imbibe at that early age a love for the service, which recruits more advanced in years are seldom found to acquire.

ASHAM fight took place at Chatham on Thursday last in the presence of the Master-General of the Ordnance and many distinguished visitors. The attack was made by a coup de main,—and the escalade having been successful, a series of instructive operations took place between assailants and defendants inside the works. We cannot too highly commend this system of practical instruction adopted by Sir William Warre in his garrison,—so superior to the mere parade displays with which the English troops are so often teazed, for the amusement of the ladies and the cockneys, without instruction to either the officers or the men.

The Hampshire Telegraph, in giving publicity to a garbled statement respecting a night disturbance at Portsmouth, on the 19th instant, between drunken men and women, policemen, and some soldiers, makes the following libellous attack on the gallant 84th regiment:—

"It originated in the ignorance naturally arising from the worst regulated regiment in England, and fostered by the pride, contempt, and fool hardiness of a boy, who, because he appends Honourable before his name, thought he could outrage with impunity the liberty of men, in very many senses infinitely his superior. We trust he will be convinced of his error at the next Sessions, and will then learn, as he ought now to know, that his duty is to support the law, and not thwart it—to lend his aid to the civil authority, and not to degrade it—to support order, and repress all innovations of the peace and quietude of the civil society in which he is thrown;—in these qualifications we suspect the Hon. Lieut. Blackwood will be found wanting, and has, consequently, while intrusted with an important charge, failed in his duty, for which he will have to answer in a civil point of view before our forthcoming Sessions, and in a Military point of view to the report which will be made of the transaction by a Court of Inquiry, held to-day, at which Colonel Menzies, of the Marines, presided."

A paragraph so gross and insulting to a distinguished corps, and a young officer, because, forsooth, he has "honourable" to his name, we might have looked for in the Weekly Dispatch, but we confess our astonishment that the Hampshire Telegraph, a paper claiming the support of the United Service, should thus attempt to sully the reputation of a corps, and injure the prospects in the Army of a youth. At least, we might have expected that so virulent an attack would have been withheld till after the Military investigation.

We have the satisfaction of stating, that the Court of Inquiry referred to, and consisting of three Field Officers of other corps, after a full examination of all the circumstances, have entirely exculpated the 84th regiment from the charge, and to the complete satisfaction of the Major-General commanding the South-West District.

We are not yet aware of the result of the trial for the alleged assault on the police, which was to take place at the Quarter Sessions, to be held in Portsmouth yesterday. We trust, however, that the young officer, though "Honourable," will be honourably acquitted; but, whether or not, the attack on his character before trial is discreditable in our contemporary.

We have reason to believe that the foundation of the disturbance in this case, and in many others at Portsmouth, arises from irregularity on the part of the police, in constantly allowing public houses to be open all night with impunity; but this fact, as affecting the conduct of the civil force, seems to have escaped our contemporary in his anxiety to vilify the 84th regiment, the young "Honourable," and the respected Town-Major White.

THE undeviating exaction of documentary evidence, in testimony that the claimants for pensions are the actual individuals entitled to payment, is in itself evidence that frauds of this nature have been practised. Nor is this altogether surprising; for the widow who cannot obtain the residue half-pay of a deceased husband, and likewise establish her claim for pension without being subjected to the compulsory payment of some seven or eight pounds, at the least, Government stamp duty, under the formula of "Letters of Administration" (which is, indeed, grasping at a shadow and losing the substance, as it most generally swallows up the pittance due; at a period, moreover, when funeral charges form an additional bill to medical expenses, and nurse attendance on protracted illness, &c.), which leads to the employment of lawyers and vexatious objections from public offices, and the like, is very apt to imagine herself treated with an asperity widely estranged from that feeling of compassion and sympathy which her state of distress might be thought to elicit. When, therefore, in addition to this, we take into consideration the various dispositions which must pervade so numerous a class of sufferers, together with the grades they hold in the scale of society, we ought not to feel surprised at finding that some individuals among them should prove unprincipled enough to glory in a scheme of retaliation, which is not only productive of profit, when successful, but which is, perhaps, the only source of subsistence. Hence, notwithstanding the precautions observed in the above exaction, as well as examination of documentary testimony, frauds upon the Pension Fund are, from time to time, discovered. What was there in times past to prevent, for instance, the unscrupulous widow of a soldier or sailor (pensioner, we will say, for wounds or long service) from concealing the death of the husband, taking to herself a substitute, who is willing to pass in his name, and by removal to a distant town evade the chance of detection, and continue in receipt of the Government boon! By availing ourselves, however, of the facilities afforded by the new "Registry" scheme, such frauds may be effectually prevented in future; and, as regards the consideration of the widows, in respect to their pecuniary necessities (and to most of whom the half-crown fee for burial certificate, which is required to accompany the petition for pension and pay, is of some moment), if the suggestion is taken in the spirit of charity, this document may, hereafter, be dispensed with in their case. The plan is simply this: that the several Registrars throughout the kingdom be instructed to insert, in red ink, the name, and date of demise, of all persons who die in their districts, and were in the receipt of pay or pension from Government, noting whether officer, and of what rank; soldier, sailor, Dock-yard, Customs, Excise, &c.; together with the number of pension-ticket or other document (if any), which must be produced to him when the death of the individual is announced for registry. This distinction of red ink will facilitate the proposed scheme, by demonstrating, at a glance of the eye over each page of the Report, whether the lists contain any such. These returns, being sent to the principal office in London quarterly, the Chief Superintendent may be required to furnish an extract of such deaths to that particular department by which the individual was paid, or under which he served; and this documentary evidence, or notification, of the death of the persons designated, being furnished by an authorised Government agent, should carry the same weight of testimony as to the fact as would the half-crown certificate from under the hand of the officiating clergyman, and prove a greater relief to the widow than benefit to the church. A further advantage would likewise accrue to both Admiralty and Horse Guards; for the reported death of officers is frequently a subject of considerable doubt, as is exemplified by the retention of names, known to be extinct, on the Army and Navy Lists; whereas, as every district has its Registrar, no individual can depart this life without the fact being known; and if he be required to particularise the dependants of Government, as proposed, so even, though an officer's necessities should drive him into obscurity, still his demise must be reported in the public announcement.

We are well satisfied to find that the models and drawings for the Nelson Testimonial are to be open for three weeks to the public, and more especially as the profits arising from the exhibition are to go to the fund of the Sailors' Home and the Destitute Sailors' Asylum—two Institutions deserving the support of every member and connection of the United Service. We intend shortly to review thoroughly the pretensions of the several Institutions professing advantages for the soldier and seaman; but, in the mean time, we recommend all who value a Memorial to Nelson to gratify themselves with an inspection of the models, especially as they will, in so doing, perform an act of benevolence at a very trifling outlay.

It is now several years since a refuge harbour was projected on the eastern coast of England, and the vicinity of the Tees was considered the most central and eligible, not only on account of the facility of reaching that leewardly position in north-east gales, but because the work is already partly effected, by the natural formation of the salt scars off the village of Redcar, in Yorkshire, and needs but an inconsiderable outlay to accomplish, compared to the benefit which navigation will derive from such an undertaking.

When we inform our readers that the number of vessels annually wrecked between the Firth of Forth and the Humber, averages more than six score, and that in the whole of that extent—a line of coast always thronged with shipping—there is not a single harbour for which a vessel can run for refuge at low water; and when they consider the loss of life, and the calamity to the families of the sufferers, which such a dreadful sacrifice involves, year after year, they will agree with us, that any means which can avert, or even palliate, such an evil are most desirable.

Were it only for the feelings of humanity, a harbour of refuge should long since have been constructed in that or some other position on the eastern coast, available at all times and seasons for vessels in distress; but there are also more worldly or more politic reasons which render it imperative that it should be accomplished with as little delay as possible.

In case of war, we have no arsenal along that coast—nothing, in fact, between Sheerness and Leith, capable of receiving a vessel requiring refit and repairs; and this, to say the least of it, is an inconvenience to which a nation like England should not be exposed.

It is now several years since—we believe so far back as 1833—that, when our Editorial labours were just commencing, our attention was requested to this very subject. Unwilling to give our approval—humble as it is—to any project, until perfectly satisfied of its merits and utility, we recollect inquiring of officers, and others, competent to judge, and the result was, as we have stated, not only that an obvious necessity existed for a deep and commodious harbour on the eastern coast, for Naval purposes in case of war—that the existence of such an asylum would save many valuable lives—but that the site selected presented great natural facilities for the purpose, and possessed in its immediate neighbourhood, and of easy transport, the requisite materials for completing breakwaters, docks, &c.

Various causes have operated since that time to delay the progress through Parliament of the Bill brought in for granting the necessary powers to the parties who proposed the undertaking; and, in the mean time, the project was honoured with the approval of his late Majesty, who was, moreover, pleased to permit the intended harbour to be called "Port William." At length the Bill arrived at that stage, the second reading, when it is usual to take the sense of the House, and, on the 21st instant, it was thrown out by a large majority. The objection that proved fatal was, that, being a private Bill, proposing to levy a toll upon passing vessels, the principle was a bad one, and not compatible with Parliamentary usage, except in some special cases.

Now, in this objection we entirely concur; for not only was the principle sought to be established an injurious one, but it is our opinion—and we have often expressed it in these columns—that it would be a great national benefit if all tolls, taxes, dues, &c., exacted upon tonnage, were abolished, and the charges to which they apply borne by the community at large. The ship-owners being relieved of these onerous and, in some cases, unjust demands, would be the better able to compete with foreigners, and, cæterus paribus, our navigation and commerce would be extended. But, although we admit the full force of this objection, we by no means concur in the reasons delivered by one influential member in particular, who voted against the Bill. We allude to Mr. Aaron Chapman; and it is because we esteem that gentleman's character highly, and are fully aware of its great influence with the "shipping interest," that we are induced to revert to the matter on the present occasion.

Mr. Chapman was pleased to denounce this proposal for forming a refuge harbour at Redcar, as "a visionary scheme—the mere coinage of the engineer's brain;" for which expression he was rebuked by Sir Edward Codrington, who used a very happy quotation,— thereby implying, that the sufferings of unfortunate seamen exposed to shipwreck are little regarded by the ship-owners, those "Gentlemen of England, who live at home at ease," who think little, and care less, about the "dangers of the seas," while they take especial heed to insure their vessels.

This reproach, which too many ship-owners deserve, cannot apply to Mr. Chapman, who, for his kindness and regard of those in his employment, may be held up as a pattern to his fraternity. But, although the worthy member for Whitby, a tidal port, was certainly entitled to vote against any scheme prejudicial to his constituents—as the formation of an at all times accessible harbour in their vicinity undoubtedly would be—we think he might, like the member for Scarborough, another tidal harbour, have confined his observations to the very reasonable and sufficient objection for throwing out the Bill, without running counter to the expressed opinion of those who are certainly, in every respect, as competent to judge as himself, and, moreover, unprejudiced by local influences.

Admirals Codrington and Adam, in Parliament, and several other distinguished Naval Officers, out of Parliament, including Captain Beaufort, the talented hydrographer, are not only patrons, but warm advocates of the project, and we trust that they possess sufficient influence to induce the Government to take this matter in hand, so that the work may be commenced, either at Redcar, or some more eligible position, if such can be found. A small vote, taken annually, would, in a few years, enable the engineer to make sufficient progress to show the utility of the design, and render it partially applicable; but as this, like every other work of magnitude, will require time to perfect, our opinion is—and we have reason to know that we speak the opinion of the Navy generally on the point—that it is one of those matters that cannot be commenced too soon.

We resume this week our abstract of Major Tulloch's Report, which is daily attracting the increased attention of the public, both civil and military, in this country, and has been noticed most favourably abroad, both in France and Germany:—

Section III.—Ionian Islands.—The seven islands—Corfu, Paxo, Santa Maura, Cephalonia, Ithaca, Zante, and Cerigo—are comprised in one Military command. The physical aspect of these islands is very much alike. They are by no means remarkable for that exuberance of vegetation which in warm latitudes is supposed to be a source of insalubrity. They differ little in the nature of their climate; but, like all mountainous regions, are subject to sudden atmospherical changes, which are more sensible to the feelings than the mere range of the thermometer would indicate. The N. and N.E. winds are cool and pleasant, but the S. wind, and that of the collateral points, is hot and humid, frequently accompanied by the sirocco. The average annual heat is 65½, and the average number of days of rain in the year is about 105, which falls not in torrents, but in genial showers. Earthquakes are frequent, but they seem to exercise no evil influence on health, and have not caused any deaths among the troops, as far as we can learn.

The troops in this command consist of the service companies of several regiments of Foot, two companies of Artillery, and a party of Sappers and Miners—a force varying from 3000 to 4500 men. The troops have been in these islands much employed in making roads; and the most severe cases of disease came from these working parties; but sickness generally has not been more prevalent among them than among the men engaged merely in garrison duties. That working on the roads and fortifications, which has given to the soldiers extra pay, from 6*d.* to 1*s.* per diem, has not operated prejudicially to health, is proved by the simple fact, that at Corfu and Vido, where the soldiers have been constantly employed in this way, the average deaths for the last twenty years have not exceeded two per cent. annually. Barracks and hospitals formerly were of the most wretched description, but both are now much improved. The rations consist of one lb. of fresh meat and one lb. of bread on six days in each week, and one lb. of salt meat and ¾ lb. of biscuit on the other day. All kinds of provisions are cheap and plentiful, and the soldier's pay is here found sufficient for all his wants. No wine is issued to the troops, but the soldier is forced to purchase it from the canteens only, where it is adulterated more than elsewhere.

The admissions to hospital have averaged 1201 per 1000 of the strength annually, being only one-twentieth more than in Malta, but the mortality greatly exceeds the average at that station, having been, on an average of twenty years (from 1817 to 1836), 25·2 per 1000 of mean strength annually. Thus the climate of the seven islands has proved more inimical to the troops than that of the other Mediterranean stations; and in some of the Islands the mortality has equalled occasionally that of the West Indies. The mortality among the natives is not more than one in thirty-nine per annum, which is the same as at Malta. During the last six or eight years a great decrease in the mortality among the troops has taken place, which, we think, may be attributed to improved barrack and hospital accommodations, progressive agriculture, and the draining of lakes and marshes. The prevalence and fatal character of fevers is one of the leading features in the Ionian climate—nearly half of the admissions and deaths being attributable to that class of disease. Remittent fever has cut off about nine per 1000 annually, while in Malta and Gibraltar it has not destroyed above one in 3000, if we exclude the year 1828. Though not so prevalent, this fever is as intense as in the West Indies; one in eleven having died out of those attacked, and, occasionally, at some stations, one in every three. Its prevalence is confined to July, August, Sept., and Oct; in this respect differing from remittent fever in the West Indies and Western Africa, which rages at all seasons, but more commonly from July to October. Intermittent fevers are most common in winter and spring; and it has been noticed, that those who have had remittent fever in the summer are particularly liable to intermittent in winter, even if removed from these islands to a station where it is rare. The 7th Fusiliers removed to Malta in 1828, and almost every person who had suffered from remittent in the Ionian Islands was seized with intermittent at Malta. This was also observed in the cases of fever, so fatal to our troops at Walcheren on their return to England.

The natives do not suffer from these fevers as our troops do. It has been demonstrated by most accurate investigations, that mortality by fever is nearly twice as high among the soldiers above twenty-five as among those under that age.—(A strong argument in favour of the present rotation system, which sends the newly-recruited corps first to the Mediterranean.)

Eruptive fevers are here exceedingly rare; and diseases of the lungs are less prevalent and less fatal than at Malta or Gibraltar. The same remark applies to liver complaints. Diseases of the stomach and bowels are within a fraction the same as at Malta; but it may be observed, that cases of chronic dysentery are very fatal here, as also in the other Mediterranean stations, and even more so than in the West Indies, though, fortunately, less common. The seven islands have hitherto escaped cholera in its epidemic form, though it ravaged the adjacent continent and the other Mediterranean stations. Delirium tremens has been five times as prevalent and fatal here as in Malta or Gibraltar. The causes, probably, are the increased means for intemperance, arising from working pay—the low price of liquor—the numerous detachments, and the unenclosed state of the barracks. The other diseases do not call for any especial notice, except the comparative exemption from venereal affections in this command. The plague, however, is one of the contingencies to which troops in these islands are subject, though it has not broken out since 1816. In Dec. 1815, it appeared at Marathea, on the S. side of Corfu, and in a few days it cut off one-fourth of the inhabitants of that village, and spread to several adjacent ones. By excellent precautions, and strong cordons of troops, the disease was confined to the upper and lower districts of Leftimo, and the capital escaped. The plague ceased in May, 1816. Out of 700 in Leftimo attacked by it, only 70 recovered; and of the troops, out of twenty-eight seized, only three survived. After it had ceased in Corfu, it broke out early in June, 1816, at Comitato, in Cephalonia, and caused death in almost every case in a few hours. In this instance the Military suffered less than at Corfu. It is remarkable, that this plague appeared at the period esteemed the most healthy of the year, and that it was as virulent in the middle of winter at Corfu as in the middle of summer in Cephalonia.

Having made these general observations, we shall next follow the Report in its investigations into the relative salubrity of the islands

---

In our last number we inserted a letter, signed C. R., complaining of the deficient means at the East India Company's Depot, Chatham, for the instruction of the large body of recruits lately raised. We believe that the press of duty on the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Company has been, and still is, most severe; but we trust that measures may be promptly adopted to lighten the toil of these zealous and meritorious servants of the monarch-merchants. We are aware, from our own personal knowledge, of the excellent interior economy established by Colonel Hay, the Commandant of the depot, and the temperate manner in which he exercises his command; we must, therefore, utterly condemn the complainings in which C. R. indulges in the concluding part of his letter, and recommend the writer in future to lay his grievances before his Commanding Officer, by whom they will be fairly inquired into, and by whom they can best be redressed. Such a letter as the one we refer to is calculated to produce the very evil it seeks to remedy. Any appeals to the public on personal and private wrongs, without having first been made to Commanding Officers, and in vain, we wish to discourage; for they are not only calculated to create distrust between superiors and inferiors, but are productive of retaliation on one side and a spirit of insubordination on the other.

W. Cowper have succeeded Lord Byron and Mr. Rich as the lord and groom in waiting on Her Majesty.

Despatches were received on Saturday at the Colonial Department, from the Governors of British Guiana and Bermuda. Despatches were forwarded for Major-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, the Governor of Gibraltar; for Major-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, the Governor of Malta; and for Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. On Monday despatches were received at the Colonial-Office from Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar; from Major-Geneneral Sir John Harvey, Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick; from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Colin Campbell, Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia; and from Col. Cockburn, Lieut.-Governor of the Bahamas. Despatches were forwarded on Tuesday from the India Board, for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at the presidencies of Bombay and Madras. Despatches were received at the Colonial-Office, from the Governor of Van Diemen's Land. On Wednesday and Thursday despatches were received from Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Colborne, the Governor of the Canadas, from Sir George Arthur, the Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada, and from the Governor of Newfoundland. Also yesterday from the Governors of Southern Australia and New South Wales,

The Queen has appointed Arthur Aston, Esq., Secretary to the Embassy at Paris, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Queen of Spain; Henry Lytton Bulwer, Esq., Secretary to the Embassy at St. Petersburgh, to be Secretary to the Embassy at Paris; and the Hon. J. A. D. Bloomfield, Secretary to the Legation at Stockholm, to be Secretary to the Embassy at St. Petersburgh.

The Archbishop of Canterbury will hold confirmations throughout the diocese this summer.

Lady Flora Hastings, we regret to state, still continues seriously indisposed. The Duchess of Kent, the Marchioness of Hastings, and Lady Sophia Hastings, have been constant in their attentions to Lady Flora. In consequence of her Ladyship's melancholy state, the Court Ball announced for last night was postponed by Her Majesty. The greatest sympathy prevails in the Court circle towards the universally-esteemed lady.

The Duchess of Montrose and Lady Sarah Ingestrie are the two noble ladies excluded from the Palace on the ground, as they suppose, that Her Majesty had been misinformed as to certain marks of disapprobation of Her Majesty, which took place at Ascot.

Yesterday (the 28th June), in celebration of the anniversary of Her Majesty's coronation, the Tower and Park guns fired a royal salute. The river presented a very brilliant and animated appearance: nearly all the shipping were decorated with flags and banners of all descriptions. At Woolwich a review of the troops took place on the Barrack-field, fronting the garrison, and the Royal Artillery poured forth their heavy pieces of ammunition in commemoration of the joyous event.

Prince William Alexander of Orange, eldest son of the Prince of Orange, and grandson of the King of the Netherlands, was married at Stuttgart, on 18th inst., to Princess Frederica Sophia Matilda, second daughter of the King of Wurtemberg. The young Prince is in his 23d year, and the Princess in her 22d year.

Sir John and Lady Conroy and family left town, on Sunday, for a tour upon the continent.

It is expected that a promotion will take place in the Navy on the anniversary of the coronation, which will include the remainder of the Post Captains of 1800, &c.; and also that the Colonels of the Army of the same year as the last-made Major-Generals, and who were Lieut.-Colonels in 1831, will be promoted, most of these officers having been in the service from 40 to 48 years!—Morning Herald. [Our contemporary's anticipations were rather improbable, pending the sittings of the Military Commission.]

Banquet to the Duke of Wellington, at Dover.—The preparations of the ancient ports for this festival in August are of the most spirited description, a splendid pavilion is to be erected in the field of St. Martin's Priory, immediately opposite the Maison Dieu, capable of dining 2,225 persons, besides spacious galleries for the accommodation of 500 ladies, 50 musicians, and 40 vocalists; so great an interest has it excited on the continent that many distinguished foreigners have solicited the committee to allow them to join in doing honour to the great Duke. His Grace has not fixed the day in August for the fete, but it is hoped that it may be on the 21st, the anniversary of the Battle of Vimiera (1808), when Sir Arthur Wellesley, with a very inferior force, routed the French army.

and not taken any means to obstruct our progress, except by endeavouring to excite religious prejudices against us. The troops were in perfect health. The Camel Battery surpassed all expectations. The great want is that of camels, many having died, but cafilas of 8000 were following the Army at no great distance. There had been snow above the pass on the 17th and 18th March. Very decided measures had been resolved upon for dealing with the predatory Beloochees, in prosecution of which Mr. Ross Bell had been deputed to Shikarpore. The Army it was hoped, would be collected at Candahar before the end of April. It is not improbable that our next accounts will announce the King has been rescued.

The Junior Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, have drawn up a petition to the Queen, praying that Her Majesty would be graciously pleased to repeal the statute of celibacy which prevents them from marrying.

The Nelson Testimonial.—On Saturday a numerous meeting of the general committee was held at the Thatched House Tavern. The Duke of Wellington having been called to the chair, asked the amount of subscriptions that had been received? Sir G. Cockburn replied about 18,000*l.*, and that it was intended that the statue should cost 30,000*l.* On its being proposed that the committee should proceed to the ballot, Mr. Croker moved that, whatever design the committee might adopt, they should have the power of making any variations or alterations in the details which they might deem expedient. A Gentleman remarked that if they did not succeed in raising the 30,000*l.*, he would vote for returning the money. It would be better to erect no monument at all, than to erect one unworthy the reputation of Nelson. A Gentleman wished to know whether the power it was intended to confer on the committee would extend so far as to enable them to lop off one of Nelson's arms, in the event of the artist whose design should be adopted having given him two, which, as the committee were aware, several of the artists had done, though the arm had been shot off? Several noblemen and gentlemen answered "Oh, certainly." The motion was put and carried. The committee then proceeded to the ballot. Sir P. Laurie and Sir G. Cockburn were appointed the scrutineers. At four o'clock Mr. Boulton was declared to be the successful competitor, there being a majority of votes in his favour. The model which has been selected is No. 65 in the list, and consists of a fluted column surmounted by a statue of Nelson, and having on one of the sides of the square pedestal a carved representation of his being carried below deck when mortally wounded at Trafalgar.

The Great Western arrived at Bristol on Wednesday night, having performed the voyage in 13 days. She brings home 114 passengers.

A general meeting of the friends of the late Admiral Sir P. Malcolm was held yesterday at the Thatched-house Tavern, to decide upon the report of the Committee for the erection of the proposed monument. The Earl of Powis was in the chair. The report stated that 756*l.* 18*s.* had been received, exclusive of a local memorial in Eskdale, amounting to nearly 200*l.*, which would be sufficient to erect a handsome tablet in the parish church of the Malcolm family at Westerkirk. The Committee had had an interview with Mr. Bailey, and had ascertained that a handsome marble monument might be erected to the memory of Sir P. Malcolm for 1,000*l.* in St. Paul's. Colonel Pasley moved that as soon as the subscriptions should amount to the last-mentioned sum, Mr. Bailey should be requested to submit designs for the approval of the Committee. Colonel Graham seconded the motion, and it was carried.

An affair of honour took place on the 9th inst., between Col. Charritie and Mr. Sanguinetti. The parties met, each attended by his friend, on the old race-course, and the distance being taken, and the word given, the latter gentleman fired—the gallant Colonel discharging his pistol into the air. The cause of dispute, we understand, arose from some disagreement at billiards.—Cheltenham Looker-On.

Thames Royal Yacht Club.—On Saturday the great below-bridge sailing match took place, for boats varying from 10 to 18 tons, and described as yachts of a middle class; and the distance as usual, from Greenwich to Coal House Point (two miles below Gravesend) and back. The Royal Sovereign steamer had been engaged to accompany the match, for the accommodation of members and their friends, and she left her moorings at Adelaide Wharf about half-past nine in the morning. On the arrival of the steamer at Greenwich, the Commodore and Captain waited upon Adm. Sir T. Hardy with the cup, and at 11 o'clock the following were at their stations:—Petrel, 15 tons; W. Egan owner; colours—red, white, and blue. Victorine, 13 tons; T. and W. Stokes, owners; colour—blue with white cross. Lady Louisa, 13 tons; T. Smith owner; colour—blue. Fortuna, 18 tons; W. Pegg owner; colour—red over white. Petrel was the weathermost yacht, the others being in the order above set out, the Fortuna lying most to leeward on the north side of the river. The signal gun being fired, the start took place amidst the cheers of the spectators. The Lady Louisa took the lead, and cut gallantly through the water, followed by Fortuna, Victorine, and Petrel, the last three being nearly in a cluster, and making after the leading vessel at a good pace. At Woolwich the state of things changed, Victorine passed all her competitors in fine style, and became the first boat in the match; Lady Louisa was then second, Fortuna third, and Petrel last. Between Woolwich and Gravesend Fortuna passed Lady Louisa, and took the second place in the race, Petrel being considerably astern of the other vessels, and indeed altogether out of the match. At half-past 2 Victorine rounded the flag-boat, which was achored two miles below Gravesend, and 15 minutes to 3 she was followed by Fortuna, and at 13 minutes to 3 by Lady Louisa. The contest was now back to the place of starting, at which Victorine arrived at 5 minutes to 6, winning the match. Fortuna came in at 10 minutes past 6, and Lady Louisa at 18 minutes past 6. The cup was then presented to the owners of Victorine by Commodore Harrison, and the health of the Queen drunk out of it by many of the company, with the usual honours. The match was well contested, and every vessel well handled.

Sheriffs' Court, Red Lion-square.—Truefitt and another v. Rose.—Cure an Moustache.—Mr. Webb, the plaintiffs' attorney, said that this was an action brought by the executors of the late Truefitt, hairdresser, of New Bond-st., against George Pitt Rose, a gentleman serving as Major in the Army, for goods supplied from 1834 to 1837, and also in 1839 by deceased's widow. The defendant was remarkable for the peculiar choice mustachios which he wore, and that would account for some of the items in the plaintiffs' demand. There was little doubt his person was known to many of the jury, as sometimes he appeared in horizontal mustachios, and at other times with them tastefully twisted, and inclined to his forehead. The jury would see by the account that the claim is principally for "cire au moustache," which is a kind of wax they place upon moustachios to give them a fine colour, and to stiffen them (a laugh.) John Budges examined: Was foreman to the late Mr Truefitt. Knew the defendant, and went to him in 1837, in Berkeley-sq., to request payment of his account of 12 guineas. Capt. Rose referred witness to a Mr. Lewis, in the neighbourhood of Russell-sq., but upon witness asking that gentleman for the amount, he said he thought Capt. Rose must be mad to send witness to him for the money (laughter). In March last, Capt. R. called upon Mrs. Truefitt, and wished her to alter the colour of his mustachios, and he promised to pay his account in two or three days, as he said he was "surprised" his solicitor had not paid it before. Witness had forwarded "cire au moustache" for the defendant to Portobello Barracks, Dublin, and to the Carlton Hotel, Regent-st. John Young, formerly porter to Mrs. Truefitt, proved the delivery of goods on 15th March last. The Under-Sheriff: Was that "cire au moustache?"—The witness gave an inquiring look and remained silent. The Under-Sheriff: Was it wax to make the hair stiff?—Witness: Yes, it was. The Under-Sheriff: You never used it yourself, did you?—The witness shook his head, and passed his hand along a smooth chin. Bridges, the foreman: We don't trust the porter with the "secret," sir, (loud laughter). A juror asked to look at the plaintiffs' bill. The Under-Sheriff: The most of the charges appear to be for "cire au moustache." There is, in addition, razors, 1l. 4*s.*; "eau de Portugal," 10*s.* 6*d.*; hand glass, 1l., and ivory shaving brush, 15*s.*; that, I suppose, was tipped with silver? A Juror, to Bridges: Are these your "uniform" charges?—Bridges: Yes, and I have heard the defendant say that he wouldn't mind giving a hundred guineas if his mustachios were black instead of red (general laughter). The jury found for the plaintiffs for the sum of 13*l.* 3*s.*, being the full amount claimed.

ITALIAN OPERA.—L'Elisir d'Amore was performed for the second time on Saturday night. With some few exceptions, the opera does not contain songs of that peculiar excellence which make an indelible impression upon the memory, but it is throughout so full of pleasing music, that it is impossible to withhold from any part of it the tribute of applause. La Gitana, one of the most beautiful ballets ever produced, concluded the performance of the evening. How shall we do justice to the incomparable dancing of Taglioni? Every term of admiration has been exhausted, and it is in vain attempting to describe the grace, the lightness, and at the same time the perfect chasteness of her dancing. The most prudish moralist could not complain of it.

HAYMARKET.—A new entertainment, called the Organ of Order, has been produced; and well sustained by Farren, Strickland, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam; the latter of whom, in the character of a Frenchwoman, sings a capital ballad, and is nightly encored. The piece itself consists of practical jests played by Strickland, an old joker, on Farren, who is no joker at all. Kean is engaged for six nights more.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, June 25.—Earl STANHOPE presented several petitions in favour of universal suffrage, vote by ballot, short parliaments, &c., and spoke at considerable length in illustration of the causes that led to so much dissatisfaction.—Extended conversation arose; Lord Brougham, Lord Melbourne, and the Duke of Wellington took part in it.—Lord MELBOURNE remarked that he was against the prayers of the petitioners, and that when the Reform Bill was under discussion he had said that it would not realise, but disappoint expectations, and that if it passed it must lead to large ulterior measures.—The petitions were laid on the table.

FRIDAY, June 28.—A long discussion took place on the Jamaica Bill. Eventually it was agreed to hear council this evening, to have the second reading on Monday, and to go into Committee on Tuesday. Mr. Burge appeared at the bar, on behalf of the Assembly of Jamaica, and addressed their Lordships at great length.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 24.—Lord J. RUSSELL brought forward the Education Grant—namely, 30,000*l.* for public education in Great Britain for the current financial year.—Lord MAHON said that he felt it to be his duty to meet the proposal with a direct negative. He complained of the misrepresentations of the sentiments entertained by the opposition on this question, and denied that they were against education, or the amount of the grant. If the grant were proposed as heretofore it would not be opposed.—The subject led to an extended discussion.—Mr. M. J. O'Connell, Mr. Litton, Mr. Cresswell, Mr. Shell, Mr. Goulburn, and Lord J. Russell (in reply) took part in the debate that followed.—The numbers of the division were—Ayes, 273; Noes, 273; Majority, two!—The result was received with tremendous cheering by the opposition side.

TUESDAY, June 25.—Lord MORPETH announced that, in consequence of the communications from all parts of the House, the railway plan with regard to Ireland was abandoned, and the field would be thus left open to private competition and speculation.—In answer to a question from Sir R. Inglis, Mr. LABOUCHERE stated that Government had come to the determination of adopting steps that would probably lead to the establishment of a colony in New Zealand; but the measures were still under consideration. He also said that the New Zealand Company was recognised by Government, who would, in any future steps they took, consider themselves bound, in making grants, to acknowledge the rights of parties to property in that country, unless fraudulently acquired.—Mr. WARD moved a series of resolutions regarding the occupation and cultivation of waste lands in the British Colonies, by means of emigration, &c., which led to considerable debate, Mr. Labouchere and Lord Howick admitting (though the adoption of the resolutions might lead to practical inconvenience) that benefit might result from observing the principles recognised by them in the future conduct regarding the appropriation of colonial lands, and the encouragement given to emigration. It was recommended that they should be withdrawn. The resolutions were then withdrawn.—Capt PECHELL rose to bring forward his motion as to the allowance made for the tonnage of slave ships taken by Her Majesty's ships, when, there not being 40 members present, the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, June 27.—Lord PALMERSTON, in reply to inquiry from Mr. Hume, said that accounts had been received from Constantinople, which did not actually state that hostilities had commenced, but that there was great apprehension they might soon be expected to commence. There never had been any treaty or formal document drawn up between the Sultan and the Pasha of Egypt, but an arrangement was made by which the Sultan undertook to nominate Mehemet Ali as the Governor of certain pashalics, but the execution of that agreement had not been embodied in any convention; the fact was merely communicated in the annual list of pashalics.—Sir R. PEEL stated, in answer to a question from Lord John Russell, that it was not intended to take the sense of the House again on the education vote. Upon this, the resolution for the vote was reported and agreed to.—The Beer Bill was considered in committee, and received amendments, which totally change the nature of the measure.

FRIDAY, June 28.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated that he did not mean to press the second reading of the Bill which provided for the union of the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada this Session. Despatches had been received from the Governor of Upper Canada, communicating some important circumstances with respect to the state of that Province, which induced him to think that it would not be expedient, unless absolute necessity should compel the adoption of such a course, to have any discussion in that House on the question, lest some unforeseen mischief might be produced in the Province. It was the intention of the Government, then, having proposed their Bill, and having laid it before the House, to send it out to Canada, accompanied by instructions, with a view to obtain as general a concurrence as should be possible in the plan, which might be of such general benefit to both Provinces, and he hoped that at an early period in the ensuing Session of Parliament they might be prepared with a plan which would be likely to lead to the permanent settlement of the question.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—In the Chamber of Peers the Bill for a supplementary credit of 900,000 francs for military pensions was carried by a majority of 109 against 2; the Bill for pensions and indemnities to the National Guards and troops wounded in the insurrection of 12th and 13th May, as also the widows and orphans of those that fell, by a majority of 111 against 3; and the Bill for the levy of 800,000 men in the class of 1838 by a majority of 110 against 2. The whole of the Polytechnic pupils have now been released, and have returned to their studies.

CANADA.—A Return of the Sums paid, or directed to be paid, to Sir Francis Head, as Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada, as Outfit, Pay, or Allowance.

and helter-skelter, down the muddy ride, come floundering on the field.'"

Next to the writings of Nimrod, there is nothing that claims precedence of this delightful volume. Besides very characteristic portraits of Mr. Meynell, and Mr. Lorraine Smith, there are numerous head and tail-pieces from original designs by the Rev. C. Radcliffe, engraved on wood by E. Landells, and a fund of valuable information for every sportsman.

With another, and a very sensible passage, we close the book :—

"He who excels in anything is never in a hurry. The beauty of riding over a country is in doing it quietly. It should appear as the pleasure which it is, rather than as a labouring effort to man and horse. It is only young hair-brain—Messrs. Harum, Scarum, and Co.—that are tearing up the ground, here; making the splinters fly, there; dashing, splashing, cracking. Now, well on the back of one unfortunate hound, then over another; slamming a gate in the face of one man, begging pardon of the next; bruising their own knees, losing their hats (their heads have been long gone), and ending their sport with a regular 'grasser,' which disposes of them, less to their own satisfaction than to that of their dearest friends, for the remainder of the day. Observe the Rev. Mr. Mallard, who does honour to his cloth alike in the field as in his parish. He is never out of his place with the hounds, but you can hardly tell how: he is never in a fuss. Look at Mr. B; he seems calmer than still water; but who can beat him? Who are going better than Lord C. R. and Mr. G., if half so well? But they are never at their wit's ends, and, consequently, never lost. Nothing will turn their heads, and they will turn from nothing, they have been going brilliantly, straight as arrows, rather wide than otherwise of the hounds; they have been nearly in a line with the head of the pack. They must have gone the pace, but they have pulled up on the first indication of a check; and behold their horses are not blown, not covered with blood and foam, like some which have been doing wonders. They know well what they are about, for they ride well to hunt, and they have learned to know when hounds are running with or without scent. They have a pretty shrewd idea how far hounds carried, and where they overshot it; they know the points, and can render a good account of all the incidents in the run. These are sportsmen. A novice in the art of riding to hounds should learn early to depend entirely upon his own eye and judgment—to follow no one—and become acquainted, as soon as possible, with the country; to take his own line, and keep it."

Many good instructions follow: and, Young Sportsmen, we advise you to get the book.

Solomon Seesaw. By J. P. Robertson, author of "Letters on Paraguay" 3 vols. Saunders and Otley.

WE wish we could give to the present volumes like praise to what we bestowed on the "Letters on Paraguay:" that publication satisfied us. Mr. Robertson was a very intelligent traveller; but we are now equally convinced he has but secondary talent for a work of fiction. We admit the style of his three volumes to be good, and the characters frequently graphic and humorous; but, as a whole, the work is a decided failure. Indeed, the illustrations, by "Phiz," are the only portion we can commend.

Thirty-six Years of a Seafaring Life. By an Old Quartermaster. W. Woodward.

THIS narrative of a "chequered life" will be read with interest; the yarn is well spun out with adventures, cares, and troubles, written with the excellent design of proving to seamen that every thing depends on their own good conduct, sobriety, and attention to orders, and that every man may, if he conducts himself properly, confidently look forward to something better than mere pauper's allowance when sickness and old age shall have made him unfit for active exertion. No one should doubt that the plain blue jacket of the seaman covers a heart largely endowed with the best and warmest affections of our nature, and one that readily and gratefully responds to kindness and good treatment; and to exhibit this to those in authority over him, has been the second object of the Old Quartermaster, whose book we sincerely wish may prove to him a profitable speculation.

Argentine. An Autobiography. Smith and Elder.

WE presume this is a first attempt. The story is that of a young English nobleman, and though too sentimental and occasionally romantic, it is not badly constructed. The style is far from inelegant.

H. B.'s—We have a fresh batch from the prolific pencil of this Prince of Caricaturists. One, "Gulliver and his Nurse"—Lord Melbourne and the Duke, in the situation described Chapter V. of the "Voyage to Brobdignag." The Queen is in the background, dreadfully alarmed for her favourite; but it is evident that the nurse will rescue him from his dangerous predicament. Another, "Child's Play." The Queen in the circle, and round her, linked hand in hand, the Duchess of Sutherland, Lady Normanby, and the ladies of the bedchamber, all shouting in chorus, "Can't get out! can't get out!" "A New Version of Can't Get Out," played by Peel, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, &c. &c.; and Brougham is looking in at the window, wondering at the game, and saying that he understands "Can't Get In" perfectly. But by far the best of the set is, "Curious instance of (Ministerial) Resuscitation, effected by distinguished Members of the Royal Humane Society." The premier, en costume de nuit, lies on a sofa bed, sans night-cap, and with hair much tumbled; in short, very like a man who, having made a night of it, has got considerably floored, and is "coming to" by dint of restoratives. He is surrounded by the first and fairest of the land, the chief of whom, with an air of tender solicitude, is supporting his head with one hand, while she holds a smelling-bottle to his nose with the other. Another lady is feeling his pulse, a third pouring out a cordial, and all are ministering, in some way or other, to his wants. The likeness of Lord M. is excellent, and no one can mistake the expression of his countenance, which says, as plainly as language can speak, that were it not for the ladies he were indeed "a lost mutton." An illustration of the "Complete Angler," represents Warburton throwing out a bait to catch a gudgeon (Lord John Russel), a most exquisite little fish, swimming off, but still hankering to rise. The Duke says, "There was a nibble but no bite," whilst Peel declares that the angler is an old hand at the work, and will be sure to hook his fish. In these dull times, the H. B.'s surpass all publications, and must actually afford relief to Ministerial cares.

Polytechnic Institution.—This excellent institution has recently added to its valuable collection of objects, both of scientific and of general interest, a most curious model, which explains in a very beautiful and novel manner that hitherto unsolved problem, the intermitting spring. Our space precludes us from giving any detailed notice of this interesting novelty;—we can only say, that it adds one more to the numerous attractions which render this institution more worthy of a visit, especially for the young at this holiday season, than almost any other in the town.

East India Intelligence.

The overland mail from India arrived on Wednesday evening, bringing news from Bombay, May 8—Madras Apr. 20—Bengal, Apr. 25. The Hugh Lindsay st. had been compelled to put back to Bombay on the 4th May, after having been 17 days at sea, and met with strong westerly gales, which exhausted her stock of coals to such an extent as to prevent the probability of her reaching any port to get a fresh supply. On her return, the Berenice was immediately prepared, and sailed on the 8th.

We have received, via Simla, letters from the Bengal column of the Army, dated 1st April. It had reached Quetta on the 26th March, and was to have halted there for the arrival of the Shah, Sir John Keane, and Mr. M'Naghten. Accounts had been received from the Shah's camp to the 30th March; he was then at Keerta, two marches within the Bolan Pass, and expected in about a week to overtake the Bengal column; Sir John Keane was then with him. Letters stated that he was then at Abigoom, all well. Sir Alexander Burnes had proceeded to Kelat with a Commissariat Officer. Orders had been issued by Sir W. Cotton authorising the purchase of forage, through their own means, by officers commanding corps, and it was believed that it would be procurable if sufficient quantity. Supplies of all sorts were expected in the Pisheen Valley, but three marches from Quetta, and within the territory of Candahar. The inhabitants of Pisheen were said to be well-disposed towards us, and it is believed that the Chiefs of Candahar had not taken any means to obstruct our progress, except by endeavouring to excite religious prejudices against us. The troops were in perfect health. The Camel Battery surpassed all expectations. The great want is that of camels, many having died, but cafilas of 8000 were following the Army at no great distance. There had been snow above the pass on the 17th and 18th March. Very decided measures had been resolved upon for dealing with the predatory Beloochees, in prosecution of which Mr. Ross Bell had been deputed to Shikarpore. The Army, it was hoped, would be collected at Candahar before the end of April. It is not improbable that our next accounts will announce that the King has been reseated on the throne at Candahar, which is one of the royal cities. The other three are Cabul, Ghuznee, and Peshawar, the latter of which is now in the hands of the Sikhs, but will probably be restored to the kingdom of Cabul on Runjeet's demise. The whole of the three armies will rendezvous at Quetta.

By accounts received from the Bombay column, dated Daudur, 5th April, we find that it had left Gundava on the 31st March; advanced to Gujan, five miles; next day to Shoonar, fifteen miles; next to Soonee, twenty miles; next a halt; next to Nowshana, eighteen miles; and arrived at Daudur on the 5th. They had been annoyed with small bands of plunderers; but the annoyance had lessened in consequence of several parties having been severely dealt with by the cavalry and Cunningham's horse. Sir John, with Mr. Macnaghten and Shah Soojah, had got through the Bolan pass, which was found more practicable than had been anticipated. From Daudur to the foot of the pass is ten miles, the length of the pass sixty-six; and from thence to the final halting-place ten miles. The great difficulty is want of supplies and forage, the whole of which are obliged to be carried forward. Thermometer at Daudur 102°; whereas in the Bengal camp, in the mountains, there had been a snow-storm.

Since the above, we have accounts from the advance field force, dated Daudur, 8th April; they speak of the Army being in high spirits: the first division was to have started for the Bolan pass the next morning, consisting of the Horse and Foot Artillery, Park Engineers, left wing 19th N.I., H.M.'s 17th, and Cunningham's Horse; and that General Willshire, with the Queen's, &c., were to follow on the 11th, leaving a wing of the Bengal troops to come after when they can get carriage. The following appears to be the line of route:—From Daudur to Cundye, 11 miles—cross Bolan stream six times, depth two feet; Gurmab, near Kutah, 10¾—cross river seventeen times, three feet water, Babeenance, 9; Abegoor, 8¾; Lin Bolaun, 9½; encamping ground near some rain-water, two miles and three-quarters in advance of the head of the Bolan defile, 12¾; Seriah, 15½; Quetta or Shawl, 10.

Extracts of letters have been received from the Commander-in-Chief's camp. The troops with him and Shah Soojah had reached within one march of the top of the pass without any Beloochee annoyances; not so the Bengal 35th N.I., which followed him some days in the rear, escorting camels loaded with stores. Its rear-guard was attacked on the march by about 500 horsemen, whom they thrashed soundly, killing between twenty and thirty, and having only six sepoys wounded.—Bombay Times, May 8th.

Sir Willoughby Cotton's division got safely through the Bolaun pass on 21st March, the chief of Kheiat rendering material assistance. They intended to halt in the valley of Shawl or Quetta, until joined by Sir John Keane.—Ibid, May 4th.

On the night of 21st March the River Indus overflowed, and carried away the bridge of boats, destroying a considerable quantity of grain and flour in charge of the Bengal Commissariat Department. Capt. Stockley had been obliged to throw himself into some kind of fort, while en route from Shikarpore to the advance with 500 camels and one month's provision for the force. He escaped from the body of Beloochees that attacked him, but the camels were all taken. It is reported that Brigadier Dennis had despatched a regiment from Shikarpore after them. Capt. Outram had met with an accident by a fall from his horse near the Gundava pass. —Ibid. April 20th.

A letter has been received from Cutch, which gives intelligence that the cholera had broken out with great violence at Kurachee. Col. Powell, of the 40th, had died, and Mr. Magony, of the same regiment, was not expected to live. Capt. Hand, of the 2d Grenadier reg., in taking his morning ride four miles from camp, was cut to pieces by some Beloochees. Lieut. Clarke, of the same corps, escaped by the fleetness of his horse. The following are the particulars extracted from a private letter, dated Camp, Kurachee, 27th March :—

"About 8 o'clock A.M. on 21st inst., young Clarke was observed galloping into camp; and just as he reached the quarter-guard of the 40th reg., fell off his horse, streaming with blood, and was picked up and carried into his tent by some soldiers of the 40th. We all rushed to his tent, and found him lying in great pain from the effects of a matchlock bullet, which had passed through the upper part of his thigh, but fortunately without injuring the bone or rupturing any large artery. He appeared very much excited, exclaiming, 'The villains! they have killed Hand!' There is a small hill plainly visible from the camp, distant about three miles, in the direction of which young Clarke had been out with his rifle, and two followers looking for deer. He had observed Hand at the top of the hill, mounted, and looking in the direction of the camp, which was plainly visible from where he stood, and where he was plainly seen by Clarke. A short time afterwards, on Clarke again looking up, he could not see Hand; but the little hillock near which he had last seen him was covered with armed men, who immediately disappeared from his view. Thinking there might be something wrong going on, Clarke immediately made towards the table-land, and ascended; but, on reaching the top could not see any signs of Hand, but saw the men, 15 or 20 in number, making off as hard as they could, one on a camel, and another on a horse, but which he did not then recognise to be Hand's. He mounted his horse, and galloped off in the direction he had seen them; but, from the rocky nature of the ground, did not overtake them until they had gone nearly a mile, when he suddenly came upon them in turning the corner of a hill, and halloced out, asking what had become of the Sahb. They immediately stopped and discharged their matchlocks at him, one of which struck him in the thigh, just grazing the pommel of his saddle. Feeling himself wounded, he turned his horse's head, and rode back as fast as he could, and reached his tent. A party immediately mounted in pursuit for seven or eight miles, but could not find any trace of them, but they suddenly came on the body of poor Hand, lying on the other side of the table-land, immersed in a pool of blood, covered with wounds. The light companies of the 40th and 2d Grenadiers, who were ordered out, succeeded in falling in with one of the gang, who, upon being examined, said that he belonged to a gang who had gone to the hill in question, for the purpose of plundering any one who might wander out from the camp. He said that poor Hand was murdered merely for the sake of his horse You may form some idea what a lawless state the country must be in, when a person taking a quiet morning ride, within sight of a camp, is set upon and murdered, merely for the sake of his horse."

The Lord Lowther.—We regret to state that a disturbance of a very serious nature occurred on board the Lord Lowther on her passage from England, the inquiry into which has occupied the attention of the Beach Magistrates for the last few days Several of the officers and crew of the Lord Lowther have been committed to take their trial at the Admiralty Sessions, and a Court of Inquiry was yesterday assembled to investigate the conduct of some of the Military officers whose names are implicated in the charge made by Captain Yates. Pending the decision of the tribunals we forbear all remarks.—Madras U. S. G. 5th April.

The following very general conspiracy against the Government is stated to have gained much credit in the Upper Provinces :—

A conspiracy has been announced by the Government in the Secret Department to the head of every political office in India. Dost Mahomed Khan, the King of Persia, and Maun Sing, of Jodpoor, are at the head of it, but its ramifications include almost every chief of note. The Nawab of Bhopal was the last to join it. His agreement was to murder Mr. Wilkinson, the Political Agent at Bhopal, and to march instantly to join Holkar in an attack on the cantonment of Mhoro. His share of the spoils was to be the country from Rueseen to Ratghur. The Bundelcund chiefs were to make a simultaneous attack on Saugor. The signal for the insurrection was to be the approach of the Persian and Afghan armies, who, it was presumed, would advance unchecked, as our troops would have had enough to do to meet the outbreaks on all sides of India. This conspiracy was discovered by an active magistrate in the Madras Presidency, who apprehended two men calling themselves pilgrims to Mecca. They subjected themselves to suspicion on matters they seemed to have no business with; this led to their apprehension. At the first examination nothing was proved against them, but they were put into confinement and the matter reported to Government. Before any reply was received, the whole of them most extensive and minute instructions was found sewed up in their clothes, much of which instructions was in cypher. The report is that the number of emissaries thus employed amounts to 200. For the truth of this rumour we cannot vouch, but if the facts are as stated, this discovery was probably the motive of the vigorous measure taken against Dost Mahomed and the Persians by the Government.

It is our painful duty to announce the decease of Maj. Haig, of the 31th L. I., Officiating Adjutant General of the Army. This melancholy event occurred on the 1st April. Major Haig had for some weeks past been seriously ill, but a favourable change subsequently took place, so that his medical attendants had sanguine hopes of his recovery till the middle of last week In the death of Major Haig, the Government has lost a valuable public servant, whose zeal and abilities were equally conspicuous.—Madras U. S. Gazette.

It is with much pain we announce the death of Lieut. D. Ramsay, 3th regt. Bengal N. I., which took place at Dandpr, 20th March. This promising young officer fell a victim to the privations under which our troops in that district are suffering, to which his strength was unequal. —Agra Ukhbar, April 27.

Further accounts from the Army on the 9th March mention that the Cavalry were obliged to pass the desert by wings. The 1st brigade had been separated for three days for the same cause Water was very scarce. Forage is said to be so scarce that many of the officers have been obliged to carry kirbee finely cut up for their horses.—Bombay Times, April 17.

Jhansi.—The inquiry at Jhansi has, we hear, been brought to a finale, and that the state will be left to the management of the lawful possessor.—Agra Journal, April 6.

The reason of the non-arrival of the Madras mail by the last overland mail has been accounted for by a notice from the Postmaster General, stating that the Atalanta had sailed from Bombay when it arrived there.

Newmarket.—Lieut. James Oatly, of sporting celebrity, has been ordered down under arrest to Dinapoor, to attend his trial for maltreating natives when on his way up the country from Calcutta, and for having made a mistake in an affidavit sworn before Brigadier Hamptons It is generally supposed that the gallant sportsman take. the field with the odds very considerably against him.—Delhi Gazette, April 6.

Some Parsee youths having renounced the religion of Zoroaster and embraced Christianity, has caused considerable sensation in Bombay. The Parsees have held meetings and passed very strong resolutions, one of which is to raise a subscription to send two European gentlemen to England to present a petition to Government to prevent them in future sending missionaries, or in any way interfering with the religion of the natives.

I shall next observe on the advantage of having competent Superintending Generals,—how much it is in their power to check every evil that may exist in the management of a regiment. Formerly the black list of punishments was comparatively but little noticed. The half-yearly inspection was usually a little jubilee—a brilliant display of well-practised manœuvres, a few questions of form, succeeded by a compliment to the corps, and an entertainment to the General. To a regiment not well prepared, this was no doubt agreeable and convenient, but the improved system of later years must always gratify good officers and a Commandant whose paternal management will bear investigation. It requires more than a single day to discover the real state of a corps, even when most favourable; but when otherwise, all the arrangements demand the most indefatigable and inquisitive attention;—and should corporeal punishment not be at once abolished, I believe that nothing can promote its gradual dissolution so effectually as a system of records and reports, embracing every particular of the crime, sentence, character, and services of each person tried. These, signed by the Commanding Officer, Judge-Advocate, and Surgeon, and investigated by the District General, would enable the Commander-in-Chief to form a tolerable judgment of the management of every corps in the service. The late Duke of R——— passed three whole days with one corps a short time before his lamented death, and looked into everything thoroughly; above all, the system of rewards and punishments, to which he was pleased to ascribe the absence of severity on one side, and of desertion on the other.

It has already been shown that a change of Commanding Officers may at once alter the whole scene, and that a corps is always liable to this contingency. What can more strongly imply the necessity of a more general and established code by which all should be guided? If the newspaper reports are to be relied on, in the debates of the Session of Parliament, 1836, it was stated that a regiment, having fallen into irregular habits, or from some other cause, was drilled under the burning sun of a hot climate (East Indies) until the men absolutely wished the punishment changed to the sentence of a Court-Martial. Is it possible that it could have been otherwise? In the latter case, the punishment only falls on the guilty, but the former sweeping measure does not spare the most innocent, or the most efficient, from an indiscriminate community of suffering. Can anything be more unjust? It is not difficult to perceive that such evils grow out of early neglect of the true principles of authority. A young Ensign first joins, we may suppose, with every warm and generous sentiment, but he hears the men ordered by others of every rank; he sees them applied to various purposes, to which they submit,—insensibly, his feelings become blunted, and he imbibes an inclination to command, and fancies it a love of his profession. But what, I would ask, can be more humiliating to a man of mind than to see a fine soldierly-looking fellow stand cowed before him? What can speak more forcibly of the state of a corps than this silent accusation? Thank God! we may hope it is of rare occurrence. I have known the sharpest officers appealed to frankly by the men, and answer in the same tone, and never yet heard a complaint of disrespect where this manly, generous course was encouraged and adopted. Such officers need never drill their men into seeking for the merciful alternative of a flogging; they make allowance for the rugged variations of human temper and human frailties, and, in return, their very wishes seem to be anticipated in the prompt obedience of those they command.

It is, then, quite clear that judgment and humanity may accomplish much in this interesting cause; still, discretionary powers leave a Commanding Officer liable to error, and those under him to its consequences. But it may be asked, if the sailor and soldier are as worthy of legislative protection as any other class of Her Majesty's subjects, are they not equally liable to the degradation the law inflicts on the civil culprit at the cart's tail? This, however, is easily answered. Let the soldier who disgraces his uniform suffer the punishment he incurs, or work as a convict, but never have the power to tarnish it again. I presume not to offer an opinion respecting the discipline of the other service. Prompt and decisive measures are indispensable at sea; and I know not of any abuse of power in that, or any other branch of the Queen's service, for which men of talent and experience cannot find a remedy.

WE beg to direct the attention of our readers to the following communication, addressed to Messrs. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden, London:—

"Gentlemen—I consider it almost an imperative duty to state the valuable efficacy of your excellent MACASSAR OIL. For the last 18 years I have been bald, occasioned by a most dreadful fever whilst in India. I have used almost every means to procure a head of hair again, but all my efforts seemed fruitless, until, accidentally, a friend advised the use of your valuable 'HAIR RESTORER' (I can give it no better name), and after using a 3s. 6d. bottle, every symptom of a new head of hair began to show itself, to the joy, not only of myself, but my children. I resolved on having another, and obtained a 7s. bottle; and before the whole of which was used, I had, and have now, as handsome a head of hair as ever man enjoyed, and I earnestly recommend that all who have not tried this excellent Oil will not fail to do so. I am, Sirs, your most grateful and obedient servant,

"J. WALKER, Colonel.

"Whittley Lodge, near Taunton, May 10, 1836."

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL prevents Hair from falling off, or turning grey; changes Grey Hair to its original colour; frees it from scurf, and makes it beautifully soft and curly.—Caution: Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL."

LOCOMOTIVE TRAVELLING by MANUAL LABOUR.—On Monday last Mr. COLES exhibited his PATENT CARRIAGE at the Egyptian Hall, in the presence of the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor and Friends, when the following experiments were made, viz., six ounces weight looped on to the carriage by a string, and passing over a pulley, propelled, on a level surface, nine pounds weight upon common wheels. The Patent Wheels being set in motion, the same propelling power drew eighteen times greater load, viz., 168 lbs. Mr. Coles will give a LECTURE on LOCOMOTIVE TRAVELLING, at the Theatre of the Mechanics' Institution, on the 5th of August, the 2d of September, and the 7th of October next, between the hours of Four and Eight in the Evening of those days. Cards for admission may be had at the Theatre, Southampton-buildings; of Mr. Wyld, Geographer to Her Majesty, 210, Regent Street, and of W. H. Clark, Stationer, 6, Charing Cross.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would indnce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Districhsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London any where but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 13*s.* each.

SARSAPARILLA.

FRANKS'S SARSINE PASTE, or ALKALINE COMPOUND OF SARSAPARILLA.—This Compound contains the active principle of Sarsaparilla, in combination with other Vegetable alteratives and tonics in the most pure and concentrated form. It will keep in all climates, and not deteriorate by age.

In Rheumatic Gout, and all Neuralgic Affections—in Dyspepsia, Eruptions of the Skin, Scrofulous Affections, enlarged Glands, Morbid Secretions, &c.—in General Debility, and where the constitution has been impaired by the continued use or abuse of Mercury—and, in fine, wherever it is desirable to administer the full benefit of Sarsaparilla, this form of that valuable Vegetable will be found of the greatest service.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Package.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove — "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffeacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 85, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE FREQUENT ROBBERIES OF PLATE.—CAUTION.—It having been represented to RIPPON and BURTON, that several persons are vending a spurious metal as their NICKEL SILVER BRITISH PLATE, they assure the public that the genuine article can only be had at the Warehouses, 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street. The Nickel Silver British Plate, manufactured by Rippon and Burton, is, by a chemical process, rendered superior to any other so called, in appearance and durability; it is equal to silver, all the articles being solid and of wrought material, they improve with use, and are warranted to stand the test of that strong acid, aquafortis. CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. This Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 18*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*; teak ditto, 20*s.*; furniture for ditto, 20*s.*; japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6*s.* each; japanned drawers, 31*s.* each; mahogany ditto, 44*s.*; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Rouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 73, Welbeck street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vaile, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

PORTSMOUTH, July 5 h.—(From our own Correspondent).—Winchester arrived on Sunday from Shearness, and will probably proceed to North America next week. An officer and a party of marines for service on the Lakes; Commander Fitzgerald to join Magnificent; Lieutenant O'Brien, as a disposable officer, and some Mates (if they can be induced to volunteer) also from Lake service, are to go out in the Winchester. Pantaloon went to Milford on Sunday evening. Horatio transport arrived from Bermuda on Monday, and has since gone to Woolwich. Britannia has been hauled out of the basin, and is again at her moorings with the flag flying; there is still much painting and internal fitting required. Revenge has been moved to moorings off the Hard; it is reported that she will go to Spithead on the 20th; but she cannot obtain any seamen: the general service men put on board of her are almost lumber. Lily is out of dock, and fitting alongside the hulk. Clio is to go to South America when ready. St. Vincent is in the basin to be inspected and caulked. Apollo troop-ship is alongside the dock-yard, and has this day taken in the baggage of seven companies of the 84th regiment, who embark early in the morning to be conveyed to Dublin; after landing them, she is to take some detachments to Cork and bring back the depot companies of the 58th regiment, to join the head-quarters; the remaining three companies of the 84th will then be put on board and taken over to Ireland. The Apollo will be employed all the autumn in moving troops; her active and intelligent Master, Mr. Kailey, in this week been engaged in suggesting the internal fittings of the Sapphire and Rattlesnake, two troop-ships, nearly prepared for service. Hastings is to be paid wages to-morrow, and will probably go to Plymouth early next week, and then to Lisbon. Avon steamer returned from Plymouth on Wednesday, bringing up the Cornwallis' marines; she is to take the third and last detachments of the 60th Rifles to Cork to-morrow. The 59th regt. move into this garrison from Haslar Barracks to-morrow morning, as soon after the 84th quit, as can conveniently be managed. Scaflower has returned to Guernsey. Ships in Port—Hastings and Winchester at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Revenge, Excellent, Royal George yt., Clio, Lily, Apollo, Avon, Messenger st.-v., in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, July 4th.—(From our own Correspondent).—June 28th—Arrived Hydra st.-frigate, Com. Anthony W. Millward, from Portsmouth; she was paid wages on 29th, and on 30th she sailed for the Mediterranean. She has taken out some marines to fill up the vacancies occasioned by sickness in the ships on that station. 29th—The Druid, 44, Capt. Lord H. J. S. Churchill, made the signal for going out of harbour; in casting, the hauser snapped, and she ran foul of Belleisle, 72, Capt. J. T. Nicolas; fortunately there was a dock-yard lump between the two ships, otherwise serious consequences must have taken place; the damages sustained were trifling, only the boat's davits were carried away, the anchor-stocks broke, and a small part of the bulwarks splintered. Druid was towed into Sound on the 1st inst., but has since come into Barnpool, to be fitted to take out Capt. W. Hobson, appointed Governor of one of our settlements in New Zealand. The America, 50, was hauled out of dock, having had her copper cleaned and repaired. Arrived the Hamoaze lighter from Holyhead, with old stores. 30th—Arrived Duck lighter, from Chatham, with stores from the dock-yard. July 2d—Sailed the Falmouth and Duck lighters, the former for Woolwich, and the latter from Pembroke and Holyhead, with stores. Arrived the Avon st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Charles H. Townley, from Liverpool. The Cornwallis, 72, Capt. Sir Richard Grant was paid off. Her marines were landed at the dock-yard, and marched to Royal William Victualling-yard, and embarked on board the Avon st.-v., and she sailed the following morning for Woolwich. 4th—Belleisle, 72, Capt. J. T. Nicolas, was towed into the Sound by the Carron st.-v. The Ferret, a brig (in name), lately laid down in this dock-yard for the packet service, is to have some alterations made, and she will be a 10-gun brig when finished. Artificers have been put to work on her this week as well as on the Spartan, 26, and the Hindostan, 78, is progressing rapidly. Reports are very current that the Akonhir and Albion, two new ships, ordered to be laid down in this dock-yard as 90's are to be 68's, with all 68-pounders. We give this merely as a report, but we have some reason to think that this will be the case. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Pandora, Carron, st.-v. In the Sound, Hercules, Belleisle, Childers. In Barnpool, Druid.

MILFORD HAVEN, 3d July.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Pantaloon brig from Chatham is hourly expected at this port, with the relief for the detachment of Royal Marines at Pembroke, but there is this year to be no increase of the force; the reason is, the scarcity of men at the divisional head-quarters. The Monkey steamer, employed as an extra packet on this station, has been ordered to the coast of Ayr on a surveying expedition under Lieut. Robinson. She left on Saturday last for her destination. The Cyclops is positively to be launched at Pembroke on Wednesday the 10th inst., she being much wanted. Another large class steamer is forthwith to be laid down at that arsenal. The Camel lighter, with Naval stores, arrived on the 24th, and is now under weigh for Plymouth, with unserviceable stores. A certain number of the sawyers at Pembroke-yard are weekly employed by task and job instead of day-work. It is supposed the former system will again come shortly into general use. It is very strange that there was no salute fired from the fort in this port on Friday last, the anniversary of our beloved young Queen's Coronation; the workmen of the arsenal had a half-holiday, but that was all the mark of respect paid on the occasion.

On Saturday, 29th, Lord Minto, Sir C. Adam, Sir W. Parker, Lord Dalmeny, with Mr. Tufnell, examined the schools of Greenwich Hospital, according to annual custom. Several premiums were awarded, and twelve boys selected for skill and ability, who will be sent to the Packet Service, to be brought upon the list of Masters only. After examination, the schools broke up for the usual summer vacation of six weeks. The above members of the Admiralty Board were entertained at dinner by the Governor, Vice-Adm. Sir Thomas Hardy, who, we regret to add, is in a very infirm state of health.

We understand that Sir William Beatty is about to resign his appointment as Physician at Greenwich Hospital, and retire on superannuation. His situation will not be filled up. Sir Richard Dobson will superintend the two medical departments. It is also confidently reported that four Commanders are to be added to the Hospital.

Mr. Doubrain, Inspector-General of Coast Guards, Ireland, is on a tour of inspection round the coast.

Lieut.-Col. Sir F. G. G. Lee, R.M., has been ordered to join the battalion under Col. Parke, C.B., on the north coast of Spain, in lieu of Lieut.-Col. Powell.

The Nile, designed by Sir R. Seppings, was laid down in 1827. She is a sister ship to the Rodney, 92, launched at Pembroke in 1833, and now on the Mediterranean station. The London, 92, building at Chatham, is also a sister ship of the Nile.

Lieut. Franklin, R.N., who for several years past commanded the Coast Guard station at Hove, has been appointed second officer in command of the British Queen steamer.

Upwards of sixty petty officers and able seamen have been entered at the rendezvous for the ships lately commissioned within the present week.

The Hydra steamer took 40 supernumerary boys to Malta, for the disposal of Adm. the Hon. Sir R. Stopford.

H.M.S. Powerful has sailed for Kingstown from Cork, and thence proceeds to Malta.

The Queen Dowager has directed a handsome silver salver to be presented to Mr. J. D. Jones, late Supernumerary Purser of the Hastings, as a mark of Her Majesty's approval of his attention to her comforts during the voyage to and from Malta.

A splendid dinner was given at the Royal Hotel, Falmouth, on the 22d ult., by the passengers who came to England by H.M.S. Petrel to her Commander, Lieut. Crooke; the party was exceedingly convivial, Capt. Brooke, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, presiding on this pleasing occasion. All united in testifying as to the excellent accommodations and superior sailing qualities of the Petrel, together with the hospitable entertainment of her Commander during the passage from Halifax.

Mr. Lluze, Gunner, and Mr. Chapman, Carpenter of the Royal Adelaide, have been superannuated; the former on 35*l*., and the latter on 80*l*. per annum.

THE TRINCULO.—A suit was brought in the Admiralty Court on Tuesday by the Commander, officers, and crew of H.M.S. Trinculo, for salvage services rendered to the Majestic, which was found deserted off the Portuguese coast, and, after much hard labour carried into Oporto. The value of the ship and cargo was stated at about 2,150*l*. The Court awarded a moiety of the value of the ship saved to the Commander and crew of the Trinculo.

TRAFALGAR.—A most characteristic letter from Lord Collingwood to Admiral Sir Peter Parker, written shortly after the battle, is given in the U. S. Journal of this month, and from which we take the following passage:—

"It was a severe action—no dodging or manœuvring. They formed their line with nicety, and waited our attack with great composure. They did not fire a gun until we were close to them, and we began first. Our ships were fought with a degree of gallantry that would have warmed your heart: everybody exerted themselves, and a glorious day they made of it. People who cannot comprehend how complicated an affair a battle is at sea, and judge of an officer's conduct by the number of sufferers in his ship, often do him a wrong. Though there will appear great offence in the loss of men, all did admirably well, and the conclusion was grand beyond description—eighteen hulks of the enemy lying amongst the British fleet without a stick standing, and the French Achille burning, but we were close to the rocks of Trafalgar, and when I made the signal for anchoring, many ships had their cables shot, and not an anchor ready. Providence did for us what no human effort could have done—the wind shifted a few points, and we drifted off the land."

At Newport, before a full bench of magistrates, Daniel Amier, steward of the yacht Elizabeth, belonging to the Hon. Col. Moreton, was fined 100*l*. which he immediately paid, for having in his possession (concealed) on board the Elizabeth, on 8th June, off Pembridge, 1231lbs. tobacco, and which was seized by Thomas Morgan, Commander of the Adder, revenue cutter, together with the yacht and three of the crew; but as the steward took the whole blame on himself and paid the penalty, the yacht and the crew have been liberated.

16th—Lieut. Stoney and Ens. Wilkins embark for Bengal on the 15th inst. This proves that no intention exists of relieving the 16th reg. from India for another year. Lieut. F. Cassidy has arrived from Bengal.

51st—We understand that several officers are about to retire and settle in Van Diemen's Land, which will cause a considerable promotion.

52nd—The late Lieut. and Paym. Winterbottom.—It is proposed by those officers who have served in the 52nd Regt. to record their respect for their late brother officer, by placing a tablet, with an inscription, in the church of the parish of Saddleworth, in Yorkshire, where he was born; and further to request permission to place a similar memorial in the chapel, or such other place in the Royal Hospital at Chelsea as the Governor may be pleased to allow. These two objects, it is considered, may be effected by a subscription of one sovereign from each officer, which Messrs. Cox and Co., with their usual kindness, have consented to receive. A committee is to be formed for carrying the proposal into effect, when satisfactory answers, addressed (at the U. S. Club) to Col. Fergusson, who commanded the 52nd at the time of Lieut. Winterbottom's death, shall have been received from the several officers to whom a circular notice has been sent.—U. S. Journal.

[The depot has been ordered to halt at Newbridge until required in Dublin to embark for Portsmouth, to join service companies].

67th—Major Orange has passed a Medical Board at Barbadoes, and returns to Europe. Quartermaster Mew has six months' leave to proceed to Europe. It is expected he will retire, and that Ens. Crispin, late Band-master of the reg., will be his successor. Major Harpour, Acting Judge Advocate, has been rather unwell. The departure of this talented and excellent man, whenever he leaves the West Indies, will be most deeply regretted: never was an officer more universally esteemed.

73d—Misplaced Sympathy.—A few days ago, as a party of the 73d reg. were escorting a deserter through Auchterarda, on the route to Glasgow, a number of the inhabitants of that town and neighbourhood collected round them, evidently with the intention of rescuing him; and as he was on the watch, he burst into the crowd. The escort endeavoured to follow; in so doing, one of them was knocked down, and the other laid hold of, while a way was made for the delinquent to make off and escape. Thus two innocent men were ill treated, and lost their prisoner, which, in a Military view, is as great a disgrace as could befal them, besides being subject to Military law, and consequent punishment.—Dundee Advertiser.

Major Lloyd and Captain Bamford, 73d, are on their return from U. Canada, with the intention of retiring from the service; which will give promotion to Captain Eyre and Lieuts. Combe and Sandeman. The latter officer has come home on leave. Capt. Dawson returns to England on sick leave.

A detachment, consisting of 1 Officer, 1 Serjt., 30 r. and f., of the depot, embarked at Cork for Spike Island July 1st; same day 2 Corporals and 8 privates embarked for Camden and Carlisle Forts (entrance to Cork Harbour), to relieve similar detachments of 37th depot, ordered to join head-quarters at Spike Island, the depot being under orders to move to Waterford, to relieve the 68th depot, under command of Major R. H. Huey.

76th Depot—The detachment from Newry to Armagh, 28th June.

77th Depot—under command of Major Wilson, embarked at Belfast on 1st inst., in the St. George for Bouness, en route to Carlisle.

83d Depot—is ordered to Belfast from Carlisle, and on arrival in St. George steamer, will occupy barracks there till further orders are given to march to Derry, to relieve 64th depot.

84th—The Hampshire Telegraph has "honourably" omitted to notice the Report of the Court of Inquiry; but, in reference to the hearing before the Recorder, impudently asserts, "that its observations on the case were fully borne out by the Recorder's summing up." We take the following from the Portsmouth Herald, and fully agree with our respectable contemporary that as no moral guilt existed, the sentence is remarkably severe. In these Radical times the Hampshire Telegraph may, with impunity, further attack Mr. Blackwood, because he has "Honourable" before his name:—

"The trial of the Hon Henry Blackwood, Patrick M'Cormick, Thomas Green, and John Carroll, the officer and men of the 84th regiment, for an assault and false imprisonment committed against several policemen of the borough, commenced this morning. The trial lasted six hours. Mr. Blackwood was convicted of false imprisonment, for not having sent the policemen on to the station-house earlier than he did; and the men were found guilty generally of the assault and false imprisonment. The Recorder, in passing sentence, said he acquitted all parties of moral guilt, though not of legal guilt, and it would therefore be his painful duty to pass such a sentence as would vindicate the civil power. He could make no distinction, between the parties, and therefore sentenced all to one week's imprisonment. The sentence excited general surprise as remarkably severe. Where no moral guilt existed, imprisonment till the rising of the Court would have been sufficient to vindicate the civil power."

We are glad to add to the above, that the Secretary of State has ordered the Recorder's minutes of the trial of Lieut. the Hon. H. S. Blackwood, and the Serj. and Corporal of this reg., to be sent to the Home-office for inspection, and that an order was sent down to the jailor of Portsmouth jail to release Mr. Blackwood and the Corporal—the Serj. to remain the full time sentenced, viz., one week. This interference on the part of Lord John Russell has given general satisfaction, and looks like a box on the ear to the party that instigated the proceedings. It is some satisfaction to us that we drew the attention of the authorities to the matter. What says the most liberal Hampshire Telegraph? We pause for a reply.

Seven cos. will embark in the Apollo troop-ship on Saturday, and are to be conveyed to Dublin. The 3 remaining cos. will be moved shortly.

87th Depot—A detachment, under command of Lieutenant Charles T. Graves, joined head-quarters at Boyle, from Sligo, June 26th; they have been replaced in Sligo by a detachment of 64th, from Derry.

88th—Ens. P. J. Young has proceeded on leave of absence for two months. Col. O'Malley shortly retires, to be succeeded by Major Eden; the Majority will be purchased by Sir W. P. Gallwey, Bart., and the company by Lieutenant Ormsby.

92d—The Duke of Cambridge has appointed Major Hugh H. Rose to be one of his equerries.

95th. The following is from a well-informed correspondent at Colombo, dated 15th March, 1839. "We have got the two new regiments out, the 91th and 95th; the latter came in the Jupiter, 74, commanded by a Master in the Royal Navy, between whom and the Colonel there has been a most awful kick-up. There is a Court of Inquiry being held now. The statement is that the Master ordered up 40 sailors to put the Colonel in irons for some supposed or real insult, when the Colonel ordered up 100 men with drawn bayonets, and drove them over the side; they were all but coming to bloodshed. It is a serious matter for both.—Bombay Times, April 6.

95th Depot—embarked on 24th June in the St. George st. for Carlisle, and sailed at 7 o'clock in the evening.

Provisional Battalion—It is now many years since this battalion was formed, and although it consists of officers not only belonging to the 25 corps in India and Australia, but of the Colonial Corps also, still these officers are compelled to mess in a room of the same size as that assigned to one of the four-company depots. It is shameful that 40 or 50 officers should not have an adequate mess-room provided for them.

1st West India Regt.—(From a Correspondent.)—"As all affrays are soon made the subject of animadversion, and often misrepresented, I shall just give you an account of one that occurred at St. Lucia, on Sunday, 12th May, 1839. It appears that some of the 14th regiment were drinking at the canteen on the night in question, when an Artillery soldier came in who was intoxicated. After a short time, it seems, the Artillery soldier was turned out of the canteen by two of the 14th soldiers, and severely beaten; another Artillery soldier come down, seeing his comrade ill-treated, and asked some of the West India regiment what the Artillery soldier had done? The 1st West India regiment said that it was a shame the poor man should be beaten so shamefully, and unfair that two men should beat one man; upon which the men of the 14th regiment struck a Corporal of the 1st W.I. regt., and a general row commenced. Luckily, Lieut.-Colonel Bush at this moment had returned from his ride, saw the scuffle, and ran to the spot, and immediately put a stop to it by sending his own men to their barracks, but leaving the 14th on the field. On the 14th of May a Court of Inquiry was ordered, which lasted three days. It was, observe, a picked Court, that is, officers of experience were said to be selected; however, I observed on it the officer of the day on the 12th May (who ought to have been the first to put down the row), and an Ensign of about a year's standing. The decision appears to have been satisfactory, as they seem to have come to the conclusion that the row ORIGINATED with the 1st W. I. regiment taking the part of the Artillery man, whereas it would appear that it originated with the Artillery man being drunk, and having been beaten by two of the 14th regiment, instead of being sent to the guard-room by the Serjeant on duty over the canteen. Poor 1st W. I. regiment! Look at the orderly manner they retired to their barracks when ordered, and how obedient they were to the orders of their Commander."

2d West India Reg.—Proceedings of the Court-Martial on Capt. William Augustus Hill:—

First Charge.—For having falsely, calumniously, and maliciously, traduced the character of his Commanding Officer, Lieut.-Col. William Burke Nicolls, of the said reg., in asserting to several of his brother officers, while stationed at Nassau, New Providence, between 9th Oct. and 15th Nov. 1838, that he, the said Lieut.-Col. Wm. B. Nicolls, his commanding officer, stated to him, Capt. W. A. Hill, "that he would send him to Honduras, to serve under a greater rascal or scoundrel than himself;"—such conduct, on the part of the said Captain Hill, being scandalous and infamous, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, subversive of good order and Military discipline, and in breach of the Articles of War.—The Court having most maturely deliberated upon the whole of the evidence brought forward on the part of the prosecutor, and on that adduced on the part of the prisoner, is of opinion, that, with respect to the first charge, he, the prisoner, Capt. W. A. Hill, 2d W. I. Reg., did assert to several of his brother officers, while stationed at Nassau, N.P., between 9th Oct. and 15th Nov. 1838, that he, the said Lieut.-Col. W. B. Nicolls, his commanding officer, had stated to him, Capt. W. A. Hill, that he would send him to Honduras to serve under a greater rascal or scoundrel than himself; but the Court do acquit the prisoner, Capt. W. A. Hill, of having falsely, maliciously, and calumniously, traduced the character of his Commanding Officer, Lt.-Col. W. B. Nicolls, 2d W. I. Reg., and the Court doth acquit the said prisoner of conduct scandalous and infamous, and unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, as stated in the latter part of the charge.

First Additional Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, while stationed at Nassau, Bahamas, some time between the 23d June and 2d Dec., 1838, endeavoured to cause or induce Lieut. J. Findley, of the said reg., to forge the name of Lieut.-Col. W. B. Nicolls, (his Commanding Officer) to a public document received from the Right Hon. the Secretary of War; such contertict signature being intended as a voucher to an abstract of examination upon the public accounts of the Right Wing, 2d W. I. Reg., during the period he, Capt. Hill, was acting as Paymaster; all such conduct being scandalous and infamous, highly prejudicial to Her Majesty's service, and in breach of the Articles of War.—With respect to the first additional charge, the Court is of opinion that he, the prisoner, Captain W. A. Hill, 2d W. I. Reg., is not guilty, and doth, therefore, acquit him of the same.

Second Additional Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer, in having, while stationed in Nassau, Bahamas, in the month of Dec. 1838, repeatedly disobeyed the lawful commands of Lieut.-Col. W. B. Nicolls, 2d W. I. Reg., his Commanding Officer, as appears from Capt. Hill's official letters, dated 21st, 24th, and 27th Dec. 1838, in reply to letters written to him by the Adjutant, by order of the Commanding Officer, in refusing to submit or deliver up for his, the said Lt.-Col. W. B. Nicolls' examination, certain abstracts of examination (stated by Capt. Hill, in his several communications, to be in his, Capt. Hill's possession) received by him from the Right Hon. the Secretary of War, upon the public accounts of the Right Wing of the Corps, from 1st July, 1835 to 31st Dec., 1836, during the period the said Captain Hill was acting Paymaster to the Right Wing of the reg.; all such conduct being in violation of Her Majesty's Regulations of the Army, and in breach of the Articles of War.

With respect to the second additional charge, the Court is of opinion that he, the prisoner, Capt. W. A. Hill, 2d W. I. Reg., is guilty; and the same being a breach of the Articles of War, the Court doth, therefore, by virtue thereof, sentence and adjudge the prisoner, Capt. W. A. Hill, 2d W. I. Reg., to be publicly and severely reprimanded.

Remarks on the Decision of the Court by the Com.-in-Chief.—This Court-Martial was in error in allowing the prosecutor to give in his address on oath; he should have read his address, and then been sworn to the facts he wished to establish. The Court was further in error in allowing Capt. Hill's affidavit, refuting the first charge, to form a record on their proceedings, the prosecutor very naturally protested against this singular irregularity of a Court-Martial, admitting the oath of a prisoner on a criminal charge.

L. SMITH, Lieut.-General.
W. TURNOR, Acting Adj.-Gen.

ROYAL ARTILLERY—Major Fogo's company, 1st battalion, is about to proceed to Scotland, to replace Major F. Wright's company, 5th battalion, which is to return to Woolwich.—It is understood that Major Hardinge's company, 3d batt., at present in Dublin, is shortly to be brought to Woolwich preparatory to its going on foreign service, and that it will not be replaced by a company from this country, in consequence of the want of men for the duties at head-quarters. Second Captain Slater has arrived on leave from Canada, for the purpose of retiring from the service on h.-p.—Lt. Hamilton, R.A., sailed from Barbadoes on the 29th April, in the Express packet, Lieut. Croke, R.N. Lieut. Fitzmayer, R.A., succeeds him as Adjutant to the Artillery, holding also that of Quartermaster. Major Stewart is the Fire-Master. Dr. Parratt is in charge of the Ordnance Medical Department. Capt. Conkson, late in command of the Artillery at Trinidad, has been sent up to Barcadoes on the report of a Medical Board for change of climate, and has passed a Medical Board there, and is ordered to proceed to England. This officer has served a long period in the tropics, was six years at St. Kitt's, which island he only left in July, 1837, and in April, 1838, he got his succession to a company in the West Indies, vice Capt. Lawlor, retired on h.-p., and was ordered out instantly, the 2d Capt. holding a permanent post at Woolwich, never having seen his company. Major Houltain commands the Artillery at Antigua; Capt. Thorndike at St. Kitt's; Lieut. Rodwell at Tobago; Lieut. Ormsby at St. Lucia, where he is also Fort Adjutant. Capt. Ansel, 74th reg., commands the Artillery at Trinidad, until an officer is sent there in the room of Capt. Conkson, invalided. Capt. Ansel is also Assist. Engineer, vice Capt. and Brev.-Major Victor, gone home sick.

G. O., 1st July, 1839.—The Master General has approved of First-Lieutenant William being posted to the 6th batt., and First Lieutenant Domville to the 9th battalion.

A. DICKSON, D.A.G.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Distribution of the Engineer Department in the West Indies.—Barbadoes: Lieut.-Col. English, Commanding Engineer; Capt. Rutherford, Lieut. Mould. Antigua: Major Fenwick. Dominica: Assist. Eng., Lieut. Mackenzie, 1st W. I. Demerara: Capt. Hope, R.E. Berbice: Lieut. M'Causland, R.E. Grenada: Lieut. Dill, R.E. Trinidad: Assist. Eng., Capt. Ansell, 74th reg. Tobago: Assist. Eng., Lieut. Reilly, 1st W. I. Reg. St. Vincent: Lieut. Chapman, R.E. St. Lucia: Lieut. Lyster, R.E. St. Kitt's: Capt. Luxmoor, R.E. Capt. Jones is to be the paid Commissioner under the Shannon Navigation Act, now in progress. Lieut. Gide has succeeded Capt. Battersbee, in Dublin.

The Naval and Military Commissioners sat on Tuesday, at the official residence of Viscount Melbourne, in Downing-street, from twelve until two o'clock. We hear that the evidence as regards the Army still remains to be gone through.

General the Earl of Howden, better known in the service as Sir John Craddock, one of the oldest Generals on the Army List, is suffering, we regret to state, from severe attack of the dropsy.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Edw. Blakeney, commanding the Forces in Ireland, returned to Dublin, June 29, from a tour of inspection.

DOVER, June 30.—The Master-General of the Ordnance, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Hussey Vivian, arrived yesterday from Deal, where he had been superintending the Artillery practice on Sandwich Flats, and embarked this morning on board H.M.'s steam-packet Charon, for Calais, under a salute of 19 guns. The gallant and universally esteemed General is gone to Germany, by the advice of his physicians, for six weeks or two months, to try the effect of the baths, having suffered much from rheumatism during the last winter, which has lately affected his wounded arm.

Lieut.-Col. English, Commanding Engineers in the West Indies, will be relieved shortly by Lieut.-Col. Graydon. It is thought he will proceed immediately to Europe, in which case Major Fenwick, the next senior officer, will be brought up from Antigua to command the department. Capt. Rutherford is likely to return to Europe with Col. English. Both departments, Artillery and Engineers, are badly off for officers. It is not proper that Artillery and Engineers should be commanded by officers of the Line. There is little use in having Artillery and Engineers in the West Indies, if their services can be dispensed with, and the duties carried on equally as well by officers of the Line. Officers belonging to companies of Artillery in the West Indies should be made to join them, instead of being employed in other places, as is the case at present. The whole system requires to be changed, and nothing would contribute more to this end than seconding officers holding double appointments, in the manner as they are in the Engineer corps.

The troop-ship Apollo will shortly sail from Portsmouth for Dublin, with the greater part of the 84th reg., and will afterwards return to Portsmouth with the depot of the 58th reg. She will then receive on board the remainder of the 84th, and proceed with a depot from Plymouth to Jersey, where she will embark the depot of the 49th reg., and sail for Cork; having landed which, the Apollo will sail for Dublin, and disembark the remainder of the 84th reg. She will then convey from Dublin to Devonport the depots of the 53d and 75th regs.

A grand Ball was given at Barbadoes on the 16th May, to the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Forces, his personal and general Staff. A large Barrack-room was fitted up for the occasion, and was tastefully decorated with the most magnificent transparencies and devices, of a Military and Naval character, which elicited the admiration of every one present, and reflected the greatest credit on the Committee for this particular branch of the evening's amusement, consisting of Capt. Douglas, 14th Foot, Lieut. Fitzmayer, R.A., and Lieut. Mould, R.E. At 10 o'clock, supper was announced, and a more splendid and elegant display of taste and judgment in the arrangements was never more conspicuous. Every delicacy, both Tropical and European, that could be procured, was in profusion, and the tables literally groaned under the weight of the choicest wines and viands. The stewards, Lieut.-Col. Grant, R.A., and Major Harpour, Judge-Advocate, were indefatigable for their unremitting attentions to the numerous guests, and their courteous and urbane deportment called forth the applause of all parties. Upwards of 250 persons were present. The merry dance was kept up with great spirit and animation, until the bright rays of Aurora reminded the happy group that it was time to seek "Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep." His Excellency Sir Samuel Ford Whittingham expressed himself highly gratified.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK.—We give the following (from our excellent contemporary the Asiatic Journal) suitable addenda to our memoir of this excellent soldier and statesman:—

"We cannot suspend for a month the expression of our esteem for the great talents of the departed nobleman, as a public man, for the amiable traits of his private character, for the simplicity of his manner, which rather embellished than detracted from his public virtues; and our deep sense of the benefits which his rule conferred upon British India. Opinions may and must always differ as to the wisdom and expediency of public measures; but there are few, indeed, who deny to Lord William the merit of having directed great powers of mind, with the purest sincerity of purpose, to measures which, in his own opinion, or in that of the authorities whose directions he was bound to obey, were calculated to promote the real interests of India. As Governor of Madras, his qualities as a ruler could be, in a certain degree, tested and appreciated, and his popularity, when he assumed the office of Governor-General, was a pledge of the good opinion which he had already earned from Europeans and natives. The unpalatable measures which it was his duty to carry into effect unavoidably created a prejudice against him in the minds of those who suffered from their operation, but his unwearied zeal and solicitude to forward, though with slender means, every object that could ameliorate India, almost outstripping, instead of lingering behind, the rapid tide of improvement which characterises the present age, must extort a tribute of admiration even from unwilling lips. In an estimate of Lord William Bentinck's services in India, we must take into view not only what he did, but what he undid—not only the beneficial changes which he introduced into every department of the Indian Government, and the impulse he gave to measures of public benefit, but the death-blow which the principles of his administration, and the straight-forward manner in which they were acted upon, inflicted upon the prejudices that had hitherto obstructed improvement in India. The abolition of Suttee was not the only triumph over prejudice which the future historian of British India will ascribe to Lord William Cavendish Bentinck. We have alluded to the simplicity of his manners, and every one who had the slightest acquaintance with Lord William will concede to him this trait of real greatness of character. M. Jacquemont, the French traveller, expressed his delight at finding that Lord Bentinck, on the vice-regal throne of India, exhibited the appearance and manners of a Pennsylvanian quaker."

The Master-General of the Ordnance, attended by Sir A. Dickson, D.A.G., Rl. Art., visited Deal on Friday the 28th ult., for the purpose of inspecting the experimental practice now carrying on there for the purpose of ascertaining the ranges of the different natures of Ordnance lately introduced into the service. Previous to this the practice had been with the 32-pounders for sea service; but on this occasion the new 56-pounder, 42-pounder, and 10-inch gun were tried, and the result has been such as to leave no doubt (had any before existed) of the great superiority of the 56-pounder over every other nature of Ordnance for the defence of our coasts, as it ranges one-third more than the other guns, and is easily worked. At 35 degs. of elevation, with a shell filled with lead, weighing about 63 lbs., and charge 17 lbs. of powder, the 56-pounder ranged 5000 yds. At 35 degs. of elevation, with a common round shot, and charge 17 lbs. of powder, the range was 5200 yds. At 15 degs. of elevation, with a round shot, and charge of 17 lbs., the range was 4030 yds. At 15 degs. of elevation, with a round shot, the 42-pounder ranged 3600 yds. At 15 degs. of elevation the 10-inch gun, with a hollow shot, ranged 3030 yds.

The following is the result of the experiments at Sandown Castle with three 32-pounder guns, of different lengths, with round shot. The length of the guns were 9, 8½, and 8 feet, fired respectively, with 8, 7, and 6 lbs. of powder. On reference to the following Table, it will be perceived that the shortest gun of the three (viz., 8 feet), fired with a charge of 6 lbs. of powder, gave a longer range than the 9-feet gun, fired with a charge of 8 lbs., with the same elevations. The experiments with these guns commenced on 17th inst., and terminated on 22d.

Nature and Length of Gun: 32-pounder — 9 feet. WEIGHT. cwt. qr lbs. 49 3 18 | 32-pounder — 8½ feet. | 32-pounder — 8 feet.

The above are the medium ranges of the number of rounds fired.

[These guns were cast on trial for the purpose of obviating the necessity of boring up guns, and we understand that Captain Sir Thomas Hastings, who has had three on trial, has reported most favourably on them.—ED.]

Last week a series of experiments were carried on at the Practice Range in the Marshes, with two 18-pound guns—the one of the pattern at present in use in the service, and the other a light one recommended by Capt. Anstruther, of the Madras Artillery, of the following dimensions:—Length, 5 feet 2½ inches—weight, 24 cwt. 2 qrs. 14 lbs.—calibre, 5 inches 16 100. Capt. Anstruther's gun has been constructed out of an iron 12-pounder, such as are at present used in the service, by being bored up to an 18-pounder within one foot of the breach, where a kind of gomer chamber has been formed, and cutting off 11 ft 9½ in. from the muzzle—the windage has also been greatly reduced. The carriage is made of malleable iron, and weighs 14 cwt 2 qrs. 14 lb., and instead of having firing and travelling trunnion holes, it has fore and after axle holes, to either of which it can be shifted at pleasure. The wheels (Jones's patent suspension) are reduced to 3 ft. 6 in. in diameter. At the practice, the range was 1200 yards.

Charge.	Elevation.	Recoil.
Old gun, 6 lbs.	2½ degs.	4 ft. 6 in.
New do, 4 lbs.	3 degs.	5 do.

After the 3d round the elevation was reduced.

Old gun, 6 lbs.	2½ degs.	5 ft.
New do, 4 lbs.	2½ degs.	5 ft. 5 in.

After the 5th round the charge for the new gun was then reduced to 3 lbs, with an elevation of three degrees. The results as obtained by the practice were very satisfactory, but from the shortness of its projection in front of the trunnion, we doubt whether it could be employed in garrison service with superior utility, as the explosion would be likely to damage the masonry of the embrasure. As the gun, however, is intended by its inventor for the Indian service, this objection will not be of vital importance. It will be seen, therefore, that the principal superiority of this gun is its lightness and portability, which, in a country like India, where the arsenals are generally inland, must be of incalculable advantage. The substitution of iron for wood in the construction of the carriage is also another improvement for service in a tropical climate.

THE BAYONET.—A Correspondent of the U. S. Journal thus writes:—"I one day thought I should like to have an opinion from a campaigner who had fixed and unfixed, carried and actually fought with a bayonet; accordingly I once questioned that fine old specimen of an English soldier, Benjamin Harris, late of the 95th, and who may be said to have done the State some service, and seen a squadron in the fields of Portugal, Spain, Walcheren, and other grounds. Upon questioning him as to his having ever witnessed a charge in the field? he answered, 'Many.' A further question, whether he had ever beheld the weapons cross, and men 'slain outright' in such charges? he plied, 'Never.' On asking if he ever recollected to have observed, after a charge, men who had apparently died in single opposition hand to hand? he said, 'Yes,' an incident strikes my mind at this moment which caused some talk amongst us Riflemen at the time.' And thus he tells the story. 'At Vimiera, perhaps it might be about 2 o'clock, I was with the Rifles skirmishing in the front of all. The French were very saucy, and firing upon us uncommon sharp: they greatly outnumbered us, and showed so much ambition that they appeared inclined to drive us off the face of the earth (or, they were to be believed). Their lights and grenadiers I remember remarking on that day. The grenadiers we called 'Bonny's Invincibles,' (the 70th, I think), all fine young men, wearing red shoulder knots, and with their large moustachios looking terribly fierce and savage, indeed most gallantly did they come upon us, seeming to be in a hurry to put us out of the way. In the main-body behind us there was the 2nd battalion 52nd, the 50th, the 2nd battalion 43rd, and also a German regiment, whose number I do not remember [the 97th, or Queen's Germans], besides other regiments which I did not recognise. I heard the whole line as it affronted at the Frenchmen's impudence crying out, 'Do—n them charge them, charge them!' They did indeed much outnumber us in skirmishers, and we were giving ground firing and retiring, but at the same time most wickedly inclined, and desirous of doing all the mischief we possibly could. I noticed Gen. Fane to call out to the regiments in rear to restrain them, telling them he wished them to keep their ground, and not advance at that time. At last he gave the word, and down they all came, through a tremendous fire, opened upon them, of cannon and musketry, and dreadful was the slaughter as they rushed on. I do not I never beheld anything more terrible than the charge of these regiments, and as they came up with us we sprang up, gave one hearty cheer, and charged along with them, to close upon our dead and wounded comrades, who lay thick on the ground. The 50th were next me as we went, and I recollect the furious scuffle which they rushed on that charge, appearing like a wall of men. The enemy could not stand the sight, and before we encountered they turned and ran for it upon seeing which, down poured our dragoons, and slashed away upon them, as they went off, most famously. It was after this day's work, whilst strolling about the field, just about the spot where this charge had taken place—I saw a soldier of the 43rd and a French grenadier lying both dead close together, apparently (I may say curiously) killed from thrusts of their bayonets. They appeared to have met together with so much hatred, that they had killed each other at the same moment. Several of our Riflemen looked at these bodies with much curiosity, and remarked the circumstance as well as myself.'"

WILLIS, the Artilleryman, who shot his Serjeant-Major at Woolwich, was executed at Maidstone on Thursday morning. While dressing he sighed deeply several times, but when breakfast was brought him he sat down and ate a most hearty meal. As the hour approached for his execution he appeared unconscious of what was going on. At 10 o'clock the Sheriff arrived at the prison-gates, and shortly afterwards was conducted to the cell where the convict was. The hour at last arrived, and the exterior was surrounded by thousands, amongst whom were a great many soldiers and women. The funeral knell announced the approach of the culprit, and at length he appeared on the scaffold with the executioner, his assistant, and the Rev. Chaplain of the prison. He was dressed in the clothes of the regiment which he belonged to, with the exception of the epaulettes and body-coat, which were taken from him when taken into Custody. After the executioner had adjusted the rope round the convict's neck, and secured it to the beam of the scaffold, and the Chaplain having given the signal, the drop went down with a loud crash, and the wretched man, after one or two violent struggles, ceased to exist. The body, after hanging the usual time, was cut down, and was interred within the precincts of the prison at midnight. Willis all along entertained a strong expectation that his sentence would be commuted, and upon one occasion he alluded to the case of the soldier Rickey, who was convicted of the murder of his officer, but whose sentence was subsequently commuted to transportation for life, and said that he expected the same mercy would be shown to him, as he considered Rickey as guilty as he was. Two men constantly remained with him in the gaol.

It is stated that a communication was made by Lord John Russell to Lord Bloomfield, the Commandant of the troops at Woolwich, to the effect that if the Military Authorities considered it advisable, for the sake of example, that the prisoner should undergo his sentence at Woolwich, his Lordship would give directions to that effect; but an answer was returned by the Commandant, stating that it was not considered advisable that the execution should take place at Woolwich, as from the feeling that prevailed in the regiment relative to the crime, such an example was not necessary. It was therefore arranged that the execution should take place at Maidstone as usual.

Major-Gen. Sir William Macbean, K.C.B., returned to Limerick, July 3, from leave of absence, and resumed the command of the south-western district.

Lieut.-Col. Mansel, K.H., Assist. Adjutant-General, having left Limerick for two months, on leave, Capt. Webber Smith, 48th, will discharge the duties of the district.

The Military Commission will, it is stated, recommend that Brevet-Colonels in command of regiments are to retire upon the allowance of 400*l.* a-year, and that, if they decline, their future promotion in the Army shall cease.—Limerick Chronicle.—Nous verrons.

SOMERVILLE'S WARNINGS ON STREET WARFARE.—THE ARTILLERY, THE INFANTRY, AND SPHERICAL CASE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Many thousands of pamphlets bearing the above title have recently been circulated through the manufacturing districts, under patronage of a statesman not less celebrated for versatility of talent than for eccentricity of character. There are some persons who think that the patron and the protegé in this case should change positions, and imagine that they can trace more of a nisi prius lawyer's tact than of a soldier's skill. Papers more pestilential it is impossible to peruse;—then ostensible object is to dissuade the Chartists from a premature recourse to arms; their apparent purport to preserve them from those errors into which insurgents are most apt to fall; their real intent to deceive the middle classes into a belief that no danger can arise from revolutionary movements, however well contrived; and that half-a-dozen six-pounders, with shrapnels, would subdue the largest city in a state of revolt; and that they are burdened with the support of an Artillery corps ten times greater than can possibly be required for defence of the land. Now these insinuations are likely enough to do mischief, and to contribute powerfully towards preventing that increase of our blue-coated brethren which is indispensable for protection of national interests, both abroad and at home.

Such and so unqualified is the pamphleteer's mendacity, that he states thirty-two batteries, of four guns each, to be horsed, manned, and ready, at a moment's notice, to march from Woolwich on any point menaced by danger. Three other brigades are described as stationed for defence of Edinburgh, and the force in every other garrison is represented as equally strong. Did the Chartists believe in these chimeras, I should be the last to disprove their existence, but, unluckily, their chiefs know the station of every gun as well as we do ourselves, and are not less perfectly aware that whilst the force at Woolwich is far from sufficient for even garrison duty, there is no other point in the island at which, in the event of a simultaneous outbreak, it would be possible promptly to parade more than six bouches à feu. Even at Waterloo, in the heat of war, the total number of cannon employed fell far short of that said by Somerville to be stationed at Woolwich in peace, and at no period of the last forty years have we owned more than two guns for every thousand men.

Equally absurd and extravagant are his descriptions of the effects of spherical case. Were they true, Infantry and Cavalry might both be dispensed with as useless incumbrances, apt only to get in the way. Even amongst Military men much misconception prevails on this topic, and with civilians it is universal. There is no magic to be found in the use of shrapnels; they are, in truth, the result of a union between round shot and common case, less effective than the last at close quarters, and inferior to the former at a long distance, but combining the qualities of each parent in a modified degree at a medium range. No man in his senses would think of assailing, with six or even twelve-pound shrapnels, a church, town-hall, or any other stone and fire-proof building, having the roof covered by mattresses and the windows stopped by wool-pack sand-bags or faggots, well and carefully bound. Neither would shrapnels suffice to capture a barricade, if the defenders constructed temporary casemates, either with beds placed in rear of the work or omnibi taken off their wheels, and having their tops covered with thick planks. Even thrown at houses, small shrapnels might, it is true, pierce the roofs, blow out the garret windows, and riddle the attic floors, but the garrison, safe in the cellars, would scoff at their effects; for the balls which they scatter do not possess more power of individual penetration than if discharged from the carbine of a Dragoon.

If shrapnels are so effective as to dislodge covered opponents, how came it to pass that Sir Archibald Campbell, with his powerful field and siege train, failed in every instance to dislodge the Burmans from their hastily thrown up works without an escalade? and how was it that Colonel Gore suffered defeat at St. Denis, and that at Grand Brule Sir John Colborne's cannonade served only to pave the way for Colonel Wetherall's storm? If the power of spherical case be so destructive, why did the fire of Sir Francis Head's heavy batteries fail to drive the Americans from their redoubts at Navy Island, situate as they were, too, within the most favourable range for shrapnels, yet too far for allowing their reply, either with musketry or grape? And how, if shrapnels and rockets constitute the chief power of war, came Sir De Lacy Evans to be defeated by undisciplined Basques, without either rockets or shrapnels? Private Somerville was not slow to scamper away then. If the public are taught that miracles may be expected from any description of force, they will always be unjust in their appreciation of the wielders of that force when brought into play. True wisdom consists in rightly estimating our own power, and fairly calculating that of the enemy as well.

In the event of hostilities, Somerville recommends the populace to assail the soldiers with sulphuric acid. If they are resolved to draw destruction on their own heads, destiny must take its course; but can the scoundrel who instigates, or the fools who approve such miseries, be unaware that the use of such infernal compounds was discontinued in war, not from philanthropy, but from dear-bought consciousness—that instead of disabling, they invariably maddened the scorched and agonised assailants to deeds of superhuman valour, terminated by demoniac revenge? Assuredly, it was not tenderness that caused the defenders of Badajoz to refrain from employment of such means against British bayonets. Not they, but their reserve arose from the knowledge that, were such resorted to, not all their chevaux de frise could save them from impalement upon Saxon steel. There is too much reason to believe that the Chartist conspirators are still endeavouring to sow disaffection in the ranks, and that the Artillery in particular seem exposed to their designs. No watchfulness can, however, exceed that of the Officers and Serjeants belonging to that most gallant corps. ARTHUR.

ON OFFICERS WEARING THEIR PROPER UNIFORMS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Can you inform me if, in the new Naval Instructions, the positive order that was in the last code, that every officer on full-pay shall always appear in his proper uniform, excepting when on Admiralty or the Commander-in-Chief's leave, has been omitted?—as, to my astonishment, I have lately met, in the different sea-ports, officers belonging to the ships fitting out, walking about in public, in plain clothes!—and this in the face of their own Captains, and the Admirals at those ports! And further that, at a Public Ball a few days since, when both the Admirals were present, I saw some officers belonging to one of the ships dressed en bourgeoise, and this, too, in the immediate presence of their own Captain!

Surely, Sir, this new-fashioned system requires correction; and I trust that, for the good of the service, it will be at once applied. AN ADMIRER OF DISCIPLINE.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The value which of necessity attaches to authenticated facts, will be admitted by you as a sufficient plea for the accompanying observations, the more especially as my name has been alluded to; and as the interests of our Indian possessions have, upon many important occasions, been ably advocated in your paper, I beg leave to occupy a limited space therein, that your readers may rightly understand the true position of this question.

The East India Company have been opposed to steam communication with India, ab initio; if you doubt the fact, I refer you to the columns of the Naval and Military Gazette.

The Right Hon. President of the India Board, concurring in the opinions of the Lords of the Treasury, wrote to the Court of Directors, March 10, 1837, thus—"I am convinced that any plan which does not embrace a communication by steam packets with Madras and Calcutta, as well as with Bombay, will entirely fail to give public satisfaction, and to fulfil the just expectations of the people, both of England and of India."

It may, therefore be inquired, why such a scheme has not been put in practice, or even hitherto attempted?

It is stated in your paper of the 30th ult.—"The scheme proposed would be found prodigiously too expensive;" allow me to show that such an opinion is erroneous.

The East India Company received from Her Majesty's Government 50,000*l*., to reimburse themselves for a moiety of the expenses incurred by one year's packet service between Suez and Bombay only. This sum fell so far short of one-half of their actual disbursements, that several of the Directors protested against receiving it as such an equivalent. It will, therefore, be apparent that the sum solicited from Her Majesty's Government, conjointly with the East India Company, being no more than 100,000*l* per annum, for maintaining packets of size and power sufficient to insure a regular communication every twenty-eight days between London, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, and Bombay, and also with Alexandria, Malta, and Gibraltar, that there would not only be a very considerable saving of money to the East India Company, but at the same time they would gain incalculable advantages by such an extended intercourse. This arrangement has been submitted to H.M.'s government by parties whose guarantee would insure fulfilment, and it has been approved of by the President of the Board of Control;—the East India Company have hitherto demurred.

It is also stated in your Journal "that the public do not come forward to supply the funds." The British public have not been asked. When the Report of the Committee of Merchants arrived at Calcutta from London in April last, wherein the formation of a Joint-stock Company is recommended as the only means of working out this great national undertaking, a public meeting of the inhabitants of that city was immediately convened, at which 100,000*l*. was subscribed, and 10 per cent. deposit paid into the Union Bank there; and it is a remarkable fact, that many natives readily came forward with sums varying from 500*l*. to 2,500*l*., thus demonstrating how anxious they are for this boon, and their great confidence in our merchants here who are the projectors of the plan that has been propounded.

It will not be out of place to remark, that a contract has been entered into with a party to carry the mails between this country and Halifax for seven years, at a cost of 55,000*l*. per annum. A contract, I am told, is also about being closed with another party to convey the mails between London and the West India Islands for a term of years, at a charge of 250,000*l*. per annum. I would therefore ask, is India so unimportant a possession that she should be denied benefits that are in course of being conferred on Halifax and the West India Islands? It is no party question; it is one in which national interests are deeply involved. That the plan shall be carried into operation is a reasonable request made by the public of both empires; and let us hope that it will be adopted. Your obedient servant,

JAMES BARBER,
Agent for N.B. Steam Committee.

64, Cornhill, July 3d.

[We have not time to devote to a controversy with Captain Barber on this subject. It appears to us that his letter admits, though he attempts to evade, the force of the observations in our last. The public has been appealed to, to form a Company to bear the charges, with a admitted loss on the calculations of 50,000*l*. or 60,000*l*. per annum. The subscriptions in Calcutta extended only to a single act, not an annual payment of that amount. The East India Company only undertook, at the suggestion and in concurrence with the Government, to make the experiment of carrying the mail overland to Bombay for two years; and if the plan answered, it was then contemplated to extend it. The term of trial not having been completed, and as it is evident, from facts already stated, that the Company do propose—in fact, are progressing with the ulterior object—we ought, in common fairness, to wait the official result.—ED.]

PAY OF FIELD OFFICERS IN INDIA.

SIR,—In your Gazette of 1st inst., there is inserted the first portion of a letter, headed "H.M.'s Service in India—No. 15," wherein the writer states, that "in Europe the pay of a Lieut.-Col. is four times that of an Ensign, and a Major three times,—while in India, a Lieut.-Col. has ten times the Ensign's pay, and the Major five times."—Now, Sir, I have compared the above statement with the table of Indian pay and allowances granted to European Infantry, as published in the East India Register for 1839, and find as follows, viz.:—

Lieut.-Col.,	in garrison,	rupees	745 :	in the field,	1020
Major,	do.	do.	575	do.	780
Captain,	do.	do.	3 3 3	do.	411
Lieutenant,	do.	do.	199	do.	254
Ensign,	do.	do.	155	do.	200

In addition to the above monthly pay and allowances, there is, of course, the allowance for commanding the regiment. I have thought it right to send you this correct statement, in order that the other may not be allowed to go forth uncontradicted. AN EAST INDIAN.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

SIR,—The report of the examination at the Royal Naval School, which appeared a short time ago in the Times, gave an unfavourable account of the classical proficiency of the pupils; and this was mentioned as a matter of comparatively minor importance. Now, Sir, if you will allow me, through the medium of your columns, to make a few suggestions on this head to the managers of the school, you will bring the subject before the eyes of many who are interested, and produce an investigation that may be useful. The Naval School possesses many inestimable advantages, and ought certainly to be a thoroughly good school. It has been supported most nobly by many who have no private interest in its welfare. It is rich in means; and these means are at the disposal of the very people who of all others must be the most zealous in its behalf—the fathers, namely, and friends of the scholars. There can be no reason then why the school should not be in all respects perfect; and I would most earnestly impress upon the minds of all who are concerned the absolute necessity of rendering the classical department faultless. The chief object of the school should be to enable officers to educate their sons as gentlemen, and eventually give them the profession of a gentleman. It is the classical education only that is expensive, and that alone from which the children of many officers with large families are excluded. In consequence of this exclusion the sons of gentlemen are often obliged to descend from their sphere; and men who might have become eminent in any one of the learned professions are compelled to smother their intellectual energies and seek a livelihood in drudgery. It has been the fashion of late years to question the advantages of learning Latin and Greek. But that is not the point; we know that without them, according to the present system of society, whether erroneous or not, the few means a man has of earning his bread are rendered still fewer;—we know that without them a man can neither be a clergyman, a barrister, or a physician;—that without them, in short, unless he have an independent fortune, he can scarcely be a gentleman. How great, then, are the advantages which the Naval School places within the reach of all who have the privilege of sending their sons there! Let them seize the advantages offered, and strain every nerve to promote their own interests, by organising at once a good system of classical education. I am, &c., PATER FAMILIAS.

We shall be glad of Tristram's overhaul of Cooper's History next week.

The Chelsea Pensioners' Library.—It is not to be imagined that the old fellows frequent the reading-room for the mere purpose of holding converse either with the matured wisdom of the mighty dead, or with the crudities of the passing day. The reading-room is to them a place of pleasant rendezvous, where they gather themselves round the fire in little knots, and hold that sort of conversation which, among old men who have mixed much with their kind, is most in favour; for here we are not only garrulous, but entertaining. We all have seen a good deal of the world; we have had in our own persons, and witnessed in those of others, ups and downs innumerable, and our memories are stored with legends of the good and the bad, of the brave and the coward, of the youth and the maiden, of the true and the false-hearted. In this room it is our especial happiness to communicate each to the other his thoughts on the events of his life; and, if it does so happen that the same story may be told more than once, why no human being cares a straw about the matter, or takes the trouble to charge the narrator with a lack of genius. In a word, we are the most contented, and, I verily believe, the most deserving class of Her Majesty's subjects, whose great aim is to let the sun of our mortal life go down as calmly as possible, in the earnest hope that it shall rise again with increased splendour in a better world.—Mr. Gleig, in Bentley's Miscellany.

To Readers and Correspondents.

In the case of Lieut. the Hon. H. S. Blackwood, we can refer with satisfaction to the Military Intelligence of this day, see 84th Regiment.

We must decline the communication of "A Staff Officer," respecting the various Memoirs of the Duke of Wellington. We knew, before the receipt of our correspondent's statement, who was the author of the piece of "quibbling criticism," and we admit such conduct to be "contemptible," but nevertheless our columns cannot be the channel of an exposé, which would lead to much disagreeable controversy, and without general interest to the services.

We have done the needful as regards our valued friend at Saltash.

We cannot but admire the naiveté of a correspondent who signs "A. B. C.," in suggesting that we should do, what we have already done at least half a dozen times, namely, expatiate on the insufficiency of the annual return of "Mates." If our correspondent had been a reader of this journal, or consulted any one who is, he would have ascertained that we have already recommended the return to be framed as he suggests; for in its annual form, it does not give the service of each Mate, and many, not actually serving on the first of January, are wholly omitted. We presume there are reasons why the officers who move for these returns do not adopt the proper course to get at the merits of the claimants. As regards the political distribution of patronage, we should like facts instead of assertions to prove that the present First Lord exceeds the portion which all reasonable men admit must be exercised. Surely "A. B. C." does not suppose that any functionary would appoint a political opponent to a situation of trust, such as a foreign command, where operations are required in strict accordance with the policy of the Government, and when a leaning the other way would disconcert their measures. Let "A. B. C." take the Navy List in hand, and trust to his own eyes, instead of adopting the clap-traps of disappointed claimants.

Lieut.-Colonel Durnford, late Barrack-Master at Chatham, has sent us a pamphlet complaining of having been improperly removed from his situation, and purposes appealing to Parliament by petition. Under these circumstances, we, for the present, refrain from commenting on the pamphlet, or the complaint in the petition. We are well acquainted with the whole case, and should the matter come before Parliament, we hope, for the ends of justice, that the correspondence between the authorities at Chatham and the Board of Ordnance, may be produced. The public has only one side of the question at present.

The Seringapatam, a freight-ship, was erroneously described in our last as H.M.S. Seringapatam, Capt. J. Leith. The mistake arose from printing a correspondent's communication without revision, in the hurry of going to press.

We give this day the new appointments of the Coast-Guard Inspecting Commanders.

We have not time this week to look into the matter referred to by "Scrutator." "A Serjeant-Major of the Militia Staff" shall have attention.

We regret that, through a mistake at the office, several of our friends did not receive the Gazette at the regular time last week. We rectified the error as soon as made aware of it, by letters from various parts.

An Extra Number of this Paper, which will contain the title-page, index for 1838, and other matters of interest to the services, will be published on Tuesday the 16th of this month. This will enable us to make amends to correspondents whose favours are in arrear. Orders will be received by all the Newsmen.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1839.

The contemptible practice of turning every event that comes to the knowledge of a portion of the press to party purposes has of late been so general, that when, last week, we read the account of an affair which has been modestly compared for energy and dignity to the deeds of "Blake and mighty Nelson," we strongly suspected it was either the hoax of some wag aware of the credulity of the public, or an exaggerated account of one of those "rows" which will occasionally happen when the boat's crews belonging to ships of rival nations meet, and which are usually settled by the Commanders on the spot, without in the least suspecting that "the meteor flag of England" is compromised on these petty occasions.

On inquiry, we ascertained that no such circumstance as that reported had occurred; that Vestal was, in fact, upon another part of the station at the date when it was said to have happened. As the truth was well known at the club-houses, and in all well-informed Naval circles, we thought the affair unworthy of notice. It appears, however, that it was attempted to work this up as a charge against the Naval Commander on the station; and the service will, therefore, feel obliged to Lord Ingestrie, who, by a question in his place in Parliament, has afforded the Secretary of the Admiralty the opportunity for explanation. (See Parliamentary Report.) We are also glad that in doing this, his Lordship took occasion to disclaim all party motives with reference to the matter—an amiable feeling, which it would gratify us to find more extensively cherished by members of the service. Officers employed abroad have very delicate and onerous duties to perform, particularly under such circumstances as have occurred with reference to the hostilities between France and Mexico. We therefore trust that their brother officers at home will, like Lord Ingestrie, be forward in taking measures that the truth shall be known, and mis-statements which affect their characters contradicted.

At a time when abuses are being daily exposed, it is very fitting that an intolerable system of pillage, which attends those on whom their Sovereign is pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood as a reward for public services, should be held up to public indignation.

It has happened at Buckingham Palace that no sooner has the newly-made Knight got up from his knee, and is making his last bow previous to retiring from the presence of Royalty, than a functionary in scarlet and gold thrusts a paper into his hand with this address,—"Here is your account!" This, on being examined, is found to amount to 108*l.*, "fees on being Knighted." To whom, think our gentle readers, do these fees go? to heralds, who proclaim the style and title of the new Knight, to secretaries who record his deeds, to emblazoners of his arms, to esquires who attach golden spurs to his heels? No,—the fees go, to the amount of a few pounds, to the Lord Chamberlain's office, the rest to the royal coachmen and footmen, and scullions, too, for ought we know to the contrary.

We hear of corruption at foreign courts—here is a disgrace fully corrupt system at our own. If Officers of the Army and Navy are to be the royal servants (when vails are universally abolished) on receiving an honour from the Queen,—"it is too bad."

Although we have too much reason to fear that very many will be disappointed at the Report of the Naval and Military Commission, yet we sincerely trust that whatever good it may recommend will at once be carried into effect.

So many plans have been submitted through our columns to the consideration of the Military Commission, that Officers of the United Service scout the idea that a beneficial change cannot be introduced into our system of promotion without great expense to the country.

The following Plan was drawn up about two years ago by the late Major Banner, of the 93d regiment; and we have reason to know that it was much approved of by those who had well considered the matter. The numbers are not quite applicable to the present day, a Brevet having taken place in the interim, but the principle remains the same; and we give the Plan publicity, as we find that the Commission are now engaged on the Military evidence.

A PLAN by which a Brevet might be granted to benefit nearly 1300 Officers in the Army, and at the same time effect a considerable annual saving to the country.—

Number of Officers
Proposed to be Promoted.
2 Generals to the rank of Field Marshal.
44 Lieut.-Generals, whose commissions are dated previous to 1821, to the rank of General.

Captains at present on full-pay in the different branches of the Service who have been upwards of twenty years in their present rank—

Infantry	42
Marines	6
Artillery	27
Engineers	25
	100

As there are only 35 Colonels receiving Lieut.-Colonels' half pay of the 73 proposed to be made Major-Gens., the remainder being on full pay, the amount of annual half-pay for 38 Lieut.-Cols., who would be added to the Half-Pay List by 73 Majors being appointed to Lieut.-Colonelcies Unattached, after deducting 3900*l* 15*s*, the amount of the annual half-pay of the 73 Ensigns, suggested to be recalled to full-pay, would be 3,632

Total Amount of Annual Expense . £36,649

The Funds for indemnifying the country for the expense incurred by a Brevet might be produced,—

By permitting 73 Majors, at present on full-pay, to purchase Unattached Lieut.-Colonelcies, each paying the regulated difference between a Majority and Lieut.-Colonelcy, viz., 1300*l.*, and replacing those Majors by the same number from the half-pay, which would produce . 94,900

By permitting 73 Captains, at present on full-pay, to purchase Unattached Majorities, each paying the regulated difference between a Company and a Majority, viz., 1400*l.*, and replacing those Captains by the same number from the half-pay, which would produce 102,200

By permitting 73 Lieutenants, at present on full-pay, to purchase Unattached Companies, each paying the regulated difference between a Lieutenancy and Company, viz., 1100*l.*, and replacing those Lieutenants by the same number from the half-pay, which would produce . . 80,300

By permitting 73 Ensigns, at present on full pay, to purchase Unattached Lieutenancies, each paying the regulated difference between the Ensigncy and Lieutenancy, viz., 250*l.*, and replacing those Ensigns by the same number from the half-pay, which would produce . . 18,250

Total proceeds of the Commissions proposed to be sold . £295,650

The proceeds of the sale of the Commissions above-mentioned to be at the disposal of Government, and, as it appears by the Abstract of a Return attached to this statement, that the annual half-pay of 857 officers, amounting to 38,745*l.*, was cancelled by the payment of 374,964*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*: consequently, if the sum of 295,650*l.*, the amount of the proceeds of the Commissions proposed to be sold, were similarly appropriated, 46,438*l.* annual half-pay would be cancelled, from which, deducting 36,649*l*, the amount of the annual expense that would be created by the proposed Brevet, there would remain an annual saving to the country of 9790*l.*

Number of Officers that would be benefited by the proposed Brevet:—

480 Officers promoted without purchase
292 Officers promoted by purchase
292 Officers brought from the half to the full pay without paying the difference

Promotions in the Artillery and Engineers:—

26 Lieut.-Colonels to be Colonels
26 Captains to be Lieut.-Colonels

War Office, April 16 (Signed) EDWARD ELLICE.

In the event of the foregoing plan being adopted, the General Commanding-in-Chief would be enabled, without expense to the country, to give promotion to a great proportion of old and deserving officers on full-pay in the junior ranks of the service: and as Lord Hill stipulated with officers, who are permitted to purchase unattached commissions, that they should pay the difference to be restored to full pay, in place of old officers being selected for promotion, the following number of the latter might, by the proposed plan, be promoted immediately:—

20 Regimental Majors of old standing, on full pay, to Lieut.-Colonelcies unattached, without purchase, and to be replaced by the same number from half pay of those recently promoted, paying the regulated difference, viz. 917*l.* each; the increase of half-pay, by such an arrangement, would be for each 1*s.* 6*d.* per day, or per annum for the 20, 547*l.* 10*s.*

73 Brevet-Majors on full pay to Majorities unattached, without purchase and to be replaced by the same number of Captains, recently promoted, paying the regulated difference, viz. 511*l.* each, the increase of expense to the country, by such an arrangement, would be for each 1*s.* per day, or per annum for the 73,—66*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*

73 Lieutenants on full-pay to Companies unattached, without purchase, to be replaced by the same number from half-pay of those recently promoted, paying the regulated difference, 365*l.* each, the increase of half-pay by such an arrangement, would be for 1*s.* per day, or per annum for the 73,—3,996*l.* 15*s.*

Total amount of Annual Expense of promoting 20 Regimental Majors on full-pay to Lieut.-Colonelcies, 73 Brevet-Majors to Majorities, and 73 Lieutenants to Companies Unatt.—5,210*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

The following sums, that would be paid by the officers restored to full-pay, to be placed to the credit of the country —

20 Majors, 910*l.* each	£18,080
73 Captains, 511*l.* each	37,303
73 Lieutenants, 365*l.* each	26,645
	£82,928

Which sum would liquidate, or cancel, annual half-pay to the amount of 14,037*l.*, from which, deducting 5,210*l.*, the expense that would be created by the promotion of 20 Regimental Majors to Unattached Lieut. Colonelcies 73 Brevet Majors to Unattached Majorities, and 73 Lieutenants to Unattached Companies, there would remain an annual saving to the country of 7,815*l.*, which, together with the 9,790*l.* before mentioned, would amount to 17,605*l.*

UNDER the head of Correspondence a letter will be found, signed An Admirer of Discipline, on the subject of officers belonging to ships in commission wearing plain clothes at public places, in the presence of the Admirals at those ports, and their own Captains!

Recollecting, as we well do, the customs of the old school, we can scarcely believe that those rules can have been so far departed from, as is represented, by the new; indeed, we imagine that the regulations continue the same as they formerly were, with regard to every officer in commission wearing the established uniform, excepting when on Admiralty leave, and therefore we must suppose that those in authority are wholly unacquainted with the circumstances to which our correspondent refers.

HE is a bold man who undertakes to give universal satisfaction, and a mistaken one who attempts it; nevertheless, we are not to be deterred from doing our utmost to benefit the majority. Greenwich Hospital has been the haven of hope to our gallant seamen since the days of William and Mary; but the preference shown in favour of applicants from the Royal Navy from among men maimed or grown old in the public service, excited the jealousy of their brother tars of the civil marine; and remonstrance led to the withdrawal of the monthly contributions of the latter for a separate investiture in an institution purely their own, forgetful that the greater portion of merchant seamen eventually serve in ships of war, and Greenwich their refuge, as all claim upon the civil establishment ceases if disabled in the fleets of Her Majesty. Since this separation four years have elapsed, and it is discovered that the amount of contributions to the civil fund is altogether inadequate to meet the demands; but a very simple process of common calculation might have demonstrated this result from the first—seamen constituting not only a very numerous class in themselves, but, moreover, are a body of men unceasingly exposed to every casualty incident to mankind; and whilst some are becoming incapacitated through infirmity or age, new hands are starting up, and both bearing a considerable preponderance over the number of deaths; whereas the contributions are derived from those only who are employed, which does not include all who are capable. Besides, the 50,000*l.* a-year collected has not only to meet the necessities of applicants, but the officials of such separate institution must be paid from the receipts; whereas, had that sum been added to the funds of Greenwich, where the working machinery is complete in its every detail, the whole amount would be distributable in pensions, the officials being already provided for.

Arrangements, however, may yet be made to embrace, under the fostering care of Government, both the Civil and Military Navy through the Greenwich Institution with satisfaction to all parties, with benefit to the British community, and with the utmost advantage to the nation, independent of the particular and grand object in view, viz, "To induce British seamen to dedicate themselves to the British service exclusively (either Military or Mercantile), and not wander capriciously in search of foreign pay under a foreign flag." To this end the funds of Greenwich may be made available, provided that every British seaman be eligible to its protection; it must, however, be imperative on applicants to produce testimonials of good conduct and (a to be specified) length of servitude in British vessels, under the hands of their several Commanders; in default of which documents no claim to be admitted, be the urgency of the case whatever it may. "Good-conduct" certificates would prove a salutary check upon insubordination in merchant vessels, as their Captains would then have some curb over the refractory, especially if certificates are countersigned by the Mates (not only in corroboration, but to prevent the effects of prejudice), and the ulterior benefit to be derived from their production, as now to be proposed, will be too important to be wantonly thrown away.

Instead of the present system of "out-pension," a plan, embracing the local defences of our sea-coast, may be beneficially substituted. Our eastern shores especially (and which have caused so much recent animadversion as to exposure to Russian incursion, &c.) abound in fish of the finest quality, and present numerous sites for the profitable prosecution of this source of national wealth, and for the establishment of such "nurseries for seamen;" for the fishing-boat is the cradle of the sea-boy.

It is, therefore, suggested, that eligible positions be selected on which Government may erect small fortresses, forming a chain of batteries, with suitable accommodation for pensioners (with a strip of garden-ground for each, as occupation when otherwise unemployed), including a Captain, and Lieutenants, &c., who shall superintend the establishments—that boats and nets be supplied to each station proportioned to the numbers of these veteran garrisons, and a school matron for the children be selected from the widows of warrant officers. Stations for the prevention of smuggling have been somewhat similarly chosen, without half the benefit to the nation which these veteran garrisons cannot fail to effect: first, as a national defence; secondly, as affording public benefit in an extended supply of food, peculiarly advantageous to the poor in regard to price—occupation to old and young, to women and children, and the consequent inculcation of habits of industry; and, lastly, inducement for British seamen to dedicate their youth and manhood to the service of their country, whereby alone they can qualify for this solace of age or decrepitude.

This would be a scheme of "sea fencibles," whose cost to the country would be nothing beyond that of the erection of batteries, as the customary pension would come from the funds of Greenwich, and, aided by the Coast Guard, would constitute a formidable opposition to any invading force, and afford time for the assemblage of a perfectly efficient body of troops; whilst, on the other hand, they may materially assist the Coast Guard in the prevention of smuggling. If the funds of Greenwich are insufficient, increase them by five per cent. on all monies derivable from freight or passengers in every denomination of Her Majesty's ships and packets. The increased "prize-money" awarded to seamen by Sir J. Graham's Bill, if distributed to the crews, will prove fatal to the service and to the individuals themselves, with but very few exceptions; but if the men are paid as formerly, and the difference transferred to Greenwich Hospital, for the extension of pensions, a general benefit will accrue. If, after all, there be still a deficit, it is the interest of the nation to contribute by Parliamentary grant; for without some efficient inducement this migratory class of men will naturally seek employment where payment is highest, rather than in the ships of a nation proverbially parsimonious in its remuneration for labour.

Seamen are the only "citizens of the world;" none so independent of country or clime—none so unbiassed by nationality; for British sailors, of all men, have least cause to be enamoured with "nationality;"—in peace unpitied, and in war oppressed, they are hunted down by the press-gang, and, at reduced wages, consigned to forced servitude, which ends only with life or the termination of war; and this because they are Britons! But, the war ended, it has been [illegible] to see the survivors starving [illegible] wherefore, the locality of their birth-place [illegible] sanctified by parental residence, is the only [illegible] tie upon their wanderings; they mingle with all nations, civilised or savage, and serve under every flag proffering inducement. Hence our difficulty in manning the Benbow, Powerful, Revenge, Lily, and Clio, &c.; and hence the desertions (as reported) from Cornwallis, at Halifax. The temporary advantage of extra pay overpowers the promise of reward, in prospective, of some sixpence a-day twenty years hence, especially since the new institution of the "Merchant Seamen's Fund" flits before their imaginations as a delusive vision, representing the "harbour of refuge" as open when-soever the merchant seaman may find it necessary to lay up at moorings. The proposed scheme, however, will dispel the vision, and the advantages held out, though likewise prospective, are too important, comprising as they do "a government location—lucrative occupation for self and family, ashore and afloat, and the quarterly payment of pension besides;"—these are too important to be lost through a wandering habit or continued misconduct. Thirty thousand British seamen (according to Captain Marryat) would not serve under the flag of America did she not proffer inducements beyond those held out by their own country; and this number under one flag alone! Restore to the Royal Navy the pensions of warrants' widows, and thereby induce seamen to aspire to warrants' rank; and re-establish the probationary time of qualification for seamen's pension. Verily, the parsimony of modern economy will entail on the nation a ruinous expense!

Whilst discussing the matter of Captain Simmons's last pamphlet on "The Present Armament of the Navy," several weeks ago, we intimated our intention of returning to the subject, and we now redeem our promise.

The "boring up" of 24-pounders, not the heaviest guns of that class, and even extending the operations to 18-pounders, some of which (Bloomfield's) are bored up to the calibre of 32-pounders, having proved a safe practice, has already been extended to several hundred pieces of sea ordnance.

This was proposed, more than twenty years ago, by Sir Howard Douglas, and it formed—with the valuable suggestions for decreasing and assimilating the windage,—the principal features of his clever work on Naval Gunnery. Sir Howard not only gave the opinion that "boring up," or "reaming out," as he more appropriately styled it, was a practicable and safe plan for increasing the calibre, but he furnished the amount in weight and thickness of metal, which it would be necessary to abstract from each piece.

The long interval that has elapsed between the date of the suggestion and the operation being carried into effect, is but one more proof of the necessity for the control of Naval ordnance being in the hands of Naval officers; who having time and opportunity, should also have the means to accomplish improvements. We give this opinion, and we but repeat what we have often expressed before, without intending to reflect in the smallest degree upon the zeal and ability of the Ordnance Department; but we consider it as unreasonable to expect Military officers to possess a knowledge of the improvements of which a ship's armament is capable, as that sea Captains and Admirals should be well calculated to direct the operations of a siege, or acquainted with the nature of field guns, and all the paraphernalia belonging to them.

Engineer and Artillery men have quite enough to occupy their minds in speculating on and perfecting improvements in their own profession; and the fact, that we have ships' guns of various denominations—Miller's, Gover's, Congreve's, Bloomfield's, Dickson's, &c., all and every of which were considered the best of their day, so long as the designer maintained his influence, and that these are now again altered and finally intended to be superseded by others of newer pattern;—these facts, we repeat, are sufficient to show that some plan is wanting for securing an uniformity of purpose, and which we conceive can never be effected until the matter is placed entirely under Naval control, like every other branch of the Naval Service.

The question has been asked—occasioned by the fact of "boring up" the guns alluded to—how comes it, that if this is found safe and practicable—if these enlarged bores sustain the full charge, and, owing to decreased windage, are actually improved in range,—how comes it that, for this century past, heavy—unnecessarily heavy—guns have been placed in ships, and every attempt to increase the calibre made, not by such an alteration as the adopted one, but by substituting carronades and other inferior pieces, of larger calibre certainly, but greatly diminished range?

Gover's guns, and Bloomfield's also, were cast some thirty or forty years ago. We are certain as to the former, because the razed ships in Lord Gambier's fleet, in Copenhagen in 1807, had Gover's 24-pounders on their main decks. If these old pieces will stand the increase of calibre, produced by boring up, we are to assume that no material improvement has taken place in the composition of gun metal. We ask, then, is it not a reflection upon the parties who have controlled those affairs, that now only, at the eleventh hour, when, owing to the instruction afforded on board the Excellent at Portsmouth, and the deference which for the first time is paid to the opinion of the officer who so ably presides over that establishment, the matter is in course of accomplishment; and whether we are not justified, on the part of the Navy, in seeking to place the armament of ships under the control of sea officers?

There were many, very many, cases last war, when, as ships got old, their force was obliged to be reduced, by substituting lighter guns for those they originally carried; and, in the encounters with Americans, our frigates fought under disadvantage, because it was considered that they could only sustain a battery of 18-pounders, although their guns were nine feet long and 42 cwt.; whereas it now appears that 27 cwt. (the weight of Bloomfield's 18-pounders) may be, and actually is, bored up into a 32-pounder. Surely, then, a better arrangement might have secured a gun of more than 18-pounder calibre for a frigate, capable of sustaining pieces of 42 cwt.

But, what's done can't be help't—"better luck next time," as Jacob Faithful says. What we would now intimate is, that the boring-up system, having been tried and proved safe upon light 32-pounders, should be extended to the heaviest guns of that class, those on the lower decks of ships of the line.

Surely a piece of 65 cwt. or of 56 cwt., such being the weight of these guns, is capable of sustaining a higher calibre than 32-pounder (in fact the 9 feet 6 inches 42-pounder is only 65 cwt.); and, always supposing the range and capacity of the gun to be preserved, it would be a material improvement if the weight of metal, on the lower decks, could be made to throw a greater weight of shot. The 32 pounders existing can certainly be bored up to 42-pounders, and new guns of their weight (65 or 56 cwt.) can, we should imagine, by a judicious disposition of the metal, be made 68-pounders, of greater range than the present 32-pounders, and calculated to supersede them.

The advantage of this increase would be prodigious—in fact, tantamount to another deck; and those who are aware of the superiority attained by the momentum of heavy bodies in Naval actions can best appreciate it. We suggest, therefore, that a 32-pounder should be bored up to a 42, then to larger calibre, to ascertain to what extent it can be done with safety. We shall return to this subject shortly.

When the Act 1 and 2 Victoria, cap. 47, was passed last year (July 27), we lauded the measure as likely to prove beneficial—indeed, it was intended so to be—to the captors of slave vessels. It appears, however, that as the tonnage is measured under the regulations of the new Act, and in vessels of the character employed in the slave trade produces a low result, this measure, instead of being beneficial, will actually prove injurious to the officers and men employed on the Coast of Africa. All that appears necessary to amend this, and to procure a revision of the Act, is to explain the nature of the case, and we are glad to find that Captain Pechell, in moving for Mr. Woodhead's Memorial to the Treasury, in behalf of the Commander, officers, and crew of H.M.'s brig Buzzard, has signified his intention of doing so.

The want of space alone prevents our entering into the detailed matter of Major Tulloch's Report, but we consider the deductions from it so valuable that we shall submit them, as much at large as possible, to the public:—

Mediterranean.—The results of this Report tend to render questionable many of the theories regarding the influence of certain climates and localities in inducing diseases, and modifying the operation of others. The mild climate of the Mediterranean has hitherto been supposed favourable to the cure or prevention of pulmonary affections. The isolated cases known to civil practitioners have led to conclusions which, when submitted to the test of extensive calculation on large masses, have proved erroneous. The relative influence of climate on disease in different countries can be best estimated by a comparison of the proportion attacked annually out of a given number of residents. This comparison has placed beyond doubt the interesting fact, that, except in the Ionian Islands, the liability of troops to consumption in the Mediterranean is even greater than in the United Kingdom, and the deaths are fully as numerous. Indeed, temperature can have little influence on this disease; for it is more prevalent in the Mediterranean than in North America, where soldiers are exposed to night air with the thermom. below zero. We also find that pleurisy and inflammation of the lungs are nearly twice as prevalent in the Mediterranean as among the same number of troops in the United Kingdom, and that in the mild climate of Malta they are twice as fatal. These facts (and the appendix of the Report give ample proof of their accuracy) clearly show that residence in the Mediterranean is erroneously recommended to patients labouring under pulmonary complaints.—The results in this Report as to the relative prevalence of fevers of the remittent and intermittent type, in the Ionian Islands, afford strong confirmation of the doubts expressed in the West India Report regarding the uniform agency of emanations from a marshy soil or excessive vegetation in producing those diseases; for though sometimes more prevalent in the vicinity of such causes, yet, in the rocky, barren, and rugged islands of Vido, Ithaca, and Cerigo, they are more common than at Corfu, where these supposed sources of fever abound. In some colonies where remittent fever prevails, particularly in the West Indies, it has been attributed to excessive moisture, because there the unhealthy and rainy seasons happen to correspond. We have a striking contradiction to the effect of moisture as an exciting cause, in the fact that, in the Ionian Islands, this disease always appears and prevails at the period when there is least rain. We also find that this disease generally appears in June, when vegetation is yet in luxuriance, and that it diminishes in September, when vegetation is scanty, and, from the fall of moisture, is rapidly hastening, with the approach of winter, to decay.

The uniform appearance of remittent fever in June, in the Ionian Islands, might lead to an opinion that it was induced by high temperature; but the West India report has thrown a doubt on this, and it seems that this disease has raged when the temperature has been lower than when it commenced. It has also been most prevalent in those years when the temperature has been lowest.

The origin of this disease may long baffle research; but an important step in the inquiry will have been gained by thus establishing that none of these agencies sufficiently account for its existence and operation.

In a future number we shall examine the report on British America, where we now have a large force assembled, and of which many of our readers may be desirous of obtaining the interesting information Major Tulloch has collected.

We learn, with great pleasure, that Mr. John Edye has been appointed, under an Order in Council of 17th of last month, Chief Assistant to the Surveyor of the Navy, to control the Department, and act for and perform all the duties of the Surveyor in his absence. We are certain that the announcement of this gentleman's promotion will be gratifying to the whole service; and it affords a proof of the discrimination of the Board of Admiralty in recommending to Her Majesty's gracious consideration Mr. Edye, who has laboured so earnestly and successfully in the science—the practical science—of Naval Architecture. Mr. Edye's work on "Naval Displacements" has been, by order of the respective Governments, translated into the Russian, Dutch, and Turkish languages. In consequence of Mr. Edye's advancement, two other talented gentlemen have been promoted, namely, Mr. G. P. Parker, who has become Chief Clerk, and Mr. Chas. Laing Second Clerk, in the Surveyor's Department.

With great pleasure we announce the promotion of Lieut. Newton Fowell, and Mr. Elliot, Mate, of H.M.S. Niagara for gallant conduct in the affair at Prescott, on the St. Lawrence, on which occasion Mr. Elliot was wounded. The promotion of these gentlemen, as well as the officers who were present at Ava, must satisfy the service that every one who has the good fortune to meet with an opportunity of distinguishing himself is now sure of preferment. In Mr. Fowell's case, particularly, this is manifested, for we recollect that gentleman, although possessed of the strongest claims, having passed several years, been twice wounded on the Coast of Africa, and second officer of the Pickle, when she so gallantly captured the Calero, and when the Lieutenant in command of the Pickle was promoted. Notwithstanding all this, and his plea of seventeen years' service in the East and West Indies, and on the Coast of Africa, his merits were disregarded until Lord Auckland became First Lord of the Admiralty, when Mr. Fowell was one of his first promotions.

Seeing that the principle of rewarding good conduct before the enemy is now established and acted on, we hope it will never again be abandoned, so that officers may be assured, that when they have the good fortune to fall in with an opportunity to distinguish themselves, they are certain of promotion. Had such always been the case, the Navy List would assume a very different form from what it now presents.

The selection for Coast Guard appointments will also show that the boons coveted by Commanders, and for which the claimants may be said to embrace all those upon the List, are generally bestowed for long and active service, distinguished from long service upon half-pay.

The Court.

The Queen held a Court on Thursday, at which Baron de Cetto, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the King of Bavaria, had an audience, to take leave for a short time. Sir G. H. Seymour, Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Belgians, was presented to the Queen, on his arrival from Brussels. Sir E. C. Disbrowe, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Netherlands, had an audience, to take leave.

Her Majesty honoured the Italian Opera with her presence on Saturday and Tuesday.

Col. Cavendish, Clerk Marshal, has relieved Col. Wemyss in attendance on Her Majesty, and has taken the Equerry's duty for the ensuing month.

We are authorised to give the most positive denial to a report which has been inserted in most of the public papers, that the Countess of Lichfield informed the Queen that the Duchess of Montrose and Lady Sarah Ingestrie hissed Her Majesty on the race-course at Ascot. Lady Lichfield never insinuated or countenanced any such report, and there could have been no foundation for so unjust an accusation.

Lady Flora Hastings.—We regret to state that the apprehensions entertained of the issue of her Ladyship's severe and confirmed disease have been unhappily realised. Death terminated the sufferings of the patient yesterday morning at two o'clock. That wounded sensibility should have produced such mournful consequences, was, perhaps, not to be anticipated; and those with whom the calumny originated, which has crushed this gentle flower, may not hold themselves responsible for it. We wish they could prove that they are not the cause. To them, or any one of them, we will not say—

> "A ministering angel shall she be,
> While thou lies howling"

Lady Flora Hastings, Lady of the Bedchamber to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, was born on the 11th of February, 1806, and was the eldest child of Francis, second Earl of Moira, K.G. and K.C.B. Lady Flora has left a mother, brother, and three sisters, to lament her untimely end.

The decease of Lady Flora Hastings has cast a deep gloom throughout the Palace, and has set aside all contemplated gaieties. The Queen and Duchess of Kent were deeply affected yesterday on receiving the distressing intelligence.

On Wednesday, after the Queen had become convinced of the necessity of countermanding the ball at the Palace, announced for Friday following, in celebration of the anniversary of H.M.'s coronation, Her Majesty expressed a desire to be admitted to an interview with Lady Flora Hastings. Some preparation and delay having been indispensable, this interesting and important interview did not take place till Friday. What passed during this interview can be known only to those to whom Her Majesty may have been pleased to reveal it. It lasted for an hour, and no third person was present. We should commit a great sin against all that is kindly and generous in human nature were we to conclude this brief narrative without recording the words which fell from the lips of Lady Flora Hastings when she was last apprised that the Queen had expressed a desire to see her. They were, "Oh! I am so glad. I should so like to show Her Majesty that I entertain no rancour, notwithstanding what has passed." Lady Forbes, one of the ladies now in waiting upon Her Majesty, is a connection of the family of the Marquess of Hastings, and is naturally the medium of frequent communication between Her Majesty and the chamber of Lady Flora.—Morning Paper.

The Queen paid a visit to Lady Flora shortly before her dissolution, and remained with her a considerable time: the interview, we understand, was of the most affecting description, and afforded Lady Flora great consolation. The considerate kindness and attention shown by Her Majesty to Lady Flora throughout her illness, were most gratefully acknowledged by her Ladyship. We understand that a post mortem examination of Lady Flora Hastings took place last evening, at Buckingham Palace, by Dr. Chambers, Dr. Holland, and Mr. Merriman.

In Mr. Leslie's picture of the Queen partaking of the Sacrament in Westminster Abbey, which he is now painting, is a portrait of Lady Flora Hastings, which she sat expressly for at the desire of Her Majesty, and which, we believe, is the only portrait in existence of her Ladyship.

It is absolutely false that any question was raised respecting the removal of the remains of Lady Flora Hastings from the Palace. Some natural uneasiness was felt upon this point by the family, but as soon as it was known to exist, they were instantly informed that no custom or usage would be insisted upon on the present occasion, and that all the necessary and proper time would be allowed for the performance of the last solemn rites.—Globe.

Sir John Conroy.—We have reason to believe that the Duke of Wellington negociated the retirement of Sir John Conroy, with a view to propitiate a more cordial and affectionate understanding between two illustrious females; the young lady insisting upon the dismissal of the Comptroller of her mother's household, as the sine qua non to a perfect reconciliation. It is generally believed that Sir John Conroy, on his part, obtained the promise of a peerage.—Argus.

Sir John Conroy and his family have left town on a Continental tour. The cause and circumstances of his retirement from the post in the Duchess of Kent's household, are as follow:—The want of cordiality between the Duchess and the Queen is notorious, and a notion was getting general in certain quarters that the banishment of Sir John from her Majesty's presence was the cause of it; this reached his ears, and he wrote to the Duchess, stating the report, and, therefore tendered his resignation. The Duchess wrote in answer, that when the Duke of Kent was on his death-bed, he advised her to confide entirely in him (Capt. Conroy), and in all matters of doubt and difficulty she could not consult a wiser or more prudent counsellor—that her experience had fully justified the character she had received of him—that she had ever found him a most able, zealous, and faithful servant—and declined to accept his resignation. Sir John acknowledged such a letter as it ought to be acknowledged, but, at the same time, again tendered his resignation—upon which the Duchess consulted the Duke of Wellington and Lord Dunfermline. These noblemen, after maturely considering the case, each wrote to Sir John a most complimentary letter, in which they stated his conduct did him infinite honour, but that as his feelings were so strong on the subject, they should advise the Duchess to accede to his request—so Sir John ceased to hold office. The Duchess paid a farewell visit to Lady Conroy, at Kensington, before the departure of the family.

During the visit of the Queen Dowager at Malta, Her Majesty heard that the second son of Sir Robert and Lady Peel, Mr. William Peel, was on board Admiral Sir Robert Stopford's vessel. Accordingly the young Midshipman was immediately introduced, and had the honour to receive an invitation to dine with Her Majesty. The Queen Dowager appeared much pleased with the frank, yet courteous, bearing of the young sailor, and in a recent interview with Sir Robert Peel, Her Majesty gave a most flattering opinion of his son's dawning talents.

Despatches from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith, Governor of Jamaica; from Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Colborne, Governor of U. Canada; and from Major-Gen. Sir G. Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope; were received on Sunday at the Colonial-Office. Despatches were received on Monday from Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar; others were received from Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, Governor of Malta; from Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands; also from the Bermudas. On Tuesday despatches, dated Feb. 4, were received at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, Governor-Gen. of India; despatches, dated April 20, at the Colonial Department, from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope: and despatches, dated 23d ult., at the Foreign Department from the British chargé d'affaires at Madrid. On Wednesday despatches were received at the Colonial-Office from the Governor of British Guiana; also dated 6th Feb. from the British Minister at Hobart Town. Despatches, dated 12th ult., were received yesterday at the Foreign Department from the British Ambassador at Constantinople; and despatches were forwarded yesterday for the British Ministers resident at the Courts of Berlin and Vienna.

The eldest son of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Willoughby Gordon will shortly lead to the altar Lady Mary Ashburnham, youngest sister of the Earl of Ashburnham.

The Queen has appointed S. W. H. Ramsbottom, Esq., to be Provost Marshal General of the Island of Grenada; and Edward Jackson, Esq., to be Attorney-General of the Island of Trinidad.

Captain Sir Thomas J. Cochrane, Kt., has addressed the Conservative electors of Colchester, in opposition to Mr. Gibson, who resigned his seat for the purpose of appealing to his constituents, in consequence of his recent independent votes in Parliament.

Lieut.-Col. Mudge, R.I. Engineers, and Mr. Featherstone, are appointed to proceed to New Brunswick, and report upon the means of adjusting the Boundary Line.

The Rev. John Vane has been appointed one of the Deputy Clerks of the Closet to Her Majesty, in the room of the Bishop of Peterborough.

Sir C. Metcalfe has broken up his establishment at Ferne Hill, near Windsor, and sails in a few weeks to assume the Government of Jamaica, in the room of Lieut.-Gen. Sir L. Smith, who replaces Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Nicolay in the Government of the Mauritius.

The Duke of Wellington's contemplated splendid fete, at Apsley House, in honour of the marriage of the Marquess of Douro, will not take place.

The Lieut.-Governor of Bombay, Major McPhail, has arrived at that colony.

Lord Farnham has been chosen a representative Peer for Ireland, in the room of the Earl of Caledon, deceased.

General De Lacy Evans.—A malicious report was circulated on Wednesday morning at the west end, that Sir De Lacy Evans had died suddenly. We are happy to state the gallant officer is in excellent health.—Sun.

The Earl of Lucan.—We regret to announce the death of this nobleman, father of Lieut.-Colonel Lord Bingham. The late Earl was in his 74th year, having been born in Dec., 1765. Lord Bingham, who is in his 40th year, married the Lady Anne Brudenell, daughter of the late Earl of Cardigan. By the death of the late Earl there is a vacancy in the Irish representative peerage.

The Approaching Tournament.—The practising is continued twice a week, Tuesdays and Saturdays in public. The scene of action is at the back of the Eyre Arms Tavern, near St. John's Wood barracks. The ground chosen is oblong, and of about four acres in size, along the centre of which is placed a barrier, with a frame for the working of a figure in armour, which is propelled along the railroad by the strength of three men, in the opposite direction to that which the knight takes in charging it. It appears absolutely necessary that the horse should be perfectly obedient to the rider's will, in order even to approach the figure. None of the horses are as yet sufficiently trained. There is, however, no want of esprit on the part of the riders, and their horses are evidently good, both for strength and speed. Lady Seymour is to be chosen Queen of the tournament.

The Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry.—Reports have reached town confirmatory of the fears entertained respecting this estimable Prelate. It is with feelings which will be participated in by all, of whatever party, who knew his Lordship, we announce that the great and good Doctor Butler is now numbered among the illustrious dead.

The Goldsmith's Company gave a grand entertainment at their Hall, on Wednesday, to the Duke of Cambridge, Sir Robert Peel, and some leading Conservatives.

The Grand Caledonian Ball took place at Willis's Rooms on Monday. Nearly 800 persons were present, and the greater portion in fancy costume.

Royal National Institution for the Preservation of Life from Shipwreck.—The tenth dinner of this institution took place at the London Tavern yesterday. Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Adam in the chair, supported by Vice-Admiral Sir George Cockburn. The following is a List of the Gold Medallions and Silver Medals that have been voted by the committee since 1838, to persons whose humane and laudable exertions in saving lives from shipwreck have been deemed sufficiently conspicuous to merit that distinction:—Gold Medallions to Capt. T. Ross, R.N., Inspecting Commander Coast Guard, Sword's District, Ireland; Lieut. H. A. S. Symmes, R.N., Coast Guard, Yarmouth, Isle of Wight. Lieut. S. J. Lett, R.N., Coast Guard, Rosslare, near Wexford. Silver Medals to Mr. Jones, Chief Officer, Coast Guard, Sword's District, Ireland; Mr. Begg, Master of a Collier, ditto; Lieut. W. Parsons, R.N., St. Alban's Head, Dorset; Mr. Andrew Richardson, Master of the steam-packet Royal William; Joseph Walker, Brigg, Lincolnshire; Mr. Henry Kennedy, Belfast Lough; Capt. James Berriman, St. Ives; Capt. Michael Welch, ditto; Capt. Richard Paynter, ditto; Capt. Edward Richards, ditto; Capt. Thomas Richards, ditto; Mr. Grandy, Mate of the Harpy, revenue cutter, Mill Bay, Plymouth; Mr. Jones, Coast Guard, New Town, Wicklow; Lieut. John Holland, R.N., Inch Bank, Loughswilly; Capt. Thomas Jones, Port Talbot, near Aberavon; Capt. John Howell, ditto, Capt. Charles Sutton, ditto; Mr. Arthur Rees, ditto; Capt. Joseph Foley, ditto; Lewis Jenkins, pilot, ditto.

The Nelson Memorial.—At a meeting of the Committee on Wednesday, the following noblemen and gentlemen were appointed to form a sub-committee to superintend the erection of the monument:—the Duke of Wellington the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquess of Lansdowne, Lord Colborne, the Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Right Hon. J. W. Croker, Sir Robert Inglis, Sir J. Barrow, Mr. Charles Wood, and the Chairman (the Duke of Buccleuch), and Deputy Chairman (Sir George Cockburn), of the Committee.

A New Projectile.—Very early on Thursday morning, a new projectile was tried at Kingston on a pleasure-boat. It was launched from the land, lifted the boat out of the water, and shivered it literally to splinters. The explosive power was but about 2 lbs., and more effective than forty times as much of powder as used at present. The effect far surpassed the promises of the projector, Capt. Warner, as was admitted at once by the parties engaging for it. The explosion shook Kingston, and was supposed to be that of a powder-mill at Hounslow.

Strange Suicide.—Edward Knight, an old veteran of Waterloo, committed suicide last week under curious circumstances. He was a bookbinder by trade, and exceedingly fond of drink. His employer at length threatened to discharge him in consequence of which he joined the tee-total Society, and afterwards became a remarkably steady man. He got drunk, however, on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, and being jeered for his want of firmness, he took six-pennyworth of laudanum. This, however, had no effect; so he went home, and having procured a rope, made a noose, into which he thrust his head, and caused his own child, a girl six years of age, to pull at one end, whilst he pulled at the other. This also proved ineffectual, the child not being strong enough. He then went to the top of the stairs, taking with him an iron bar and a chair, and, having placed the rope across the iron bar, he kicked away the chair, and became suspended by the neck, in which situation his wife found him after some hours.

Serious Riot at Birmingham.—The Chartist meetings which have taken place in the Bull-ring were put a stop to on Thursday night. At eight o'clock, the usual hour of meeting, there was a large assemblage of the people, accompanied by banners, &c. To the great surprise, however, of the mob, a party of the London police arrived, sent from the Home-office, and immediately proceeded to arrest the leaders and disperse the meeting. This the mob resisted, and the police were temporarily defeated. For about ten minutes the fight was fearful, and it is feared that in more than one instance the consequence will prove fatal. Fortunately, the 4th Dragoon Guards, headed by Colonel Chatterton, and a portion of the 1st battalion Rifle Brigade, arrived in time to afford protection to the civil authorities. The mob then took to flight in all directions. Several of the London police are seriously injured, and it is feared that one inspector is fatally wounded by a stab in the side. A magistrate, in expectation of his death, took his deposition. The town was in a state of great excitement. Accounts received last night announce that Dr. Taylor and eight others were committed, and sent under an escort to Warwick gaol. A fresh supply of police had arrived from London, and more troops were sent for.

HAYMARKET.—On Monday evening a new afterpiece, called Foreign Airs and Native Graces, was brought out. It is from the fruitful pen of Moncrief, and there is much cleverness about the authorship, although without pretensions to originality in the plot.

COL. CHARRETIE AND MR. SANGUINETTI'S DUEL.

ALTHOUGH for the act, no defence can be good,
'Twere yet more deplorably cruel,
Had brave Sanguinetti been deluged in blood,
Or Charity lost, in a do ill!

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, July 1.—The Archbishop of CANTERBURY moved an Address to Her Majesty, praying that she would be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before the House copies of the Treasury minutes of 30th Aug. 1833, of 2nd March, 1834, and 5th July, 1839, relating to the application of certain sums of money granted by Parliament for the purposes of education, and also for a copy of the Order in Council, appointing a committee of the Privy Council, on the application of such grants, and of any reports made by such committee. The most reverend prelate then gave notice, that on Friday next he should submit a motion on the subject to which those documents related. (The Address was agreed to amidst considerable cheering).—The order of the day for the second reading of the Jamaica Bill was then moved by Lord NORMANBY. A discussion of some length followed.—The Earl of HARROWOOD moved that it be read a second time that day three months.—The Duke of WELLINGTON condemned the policy of Ministers in regard to Jamaica, but advised their Lordships to go into committee, that they might consider the various clauses of the measure, and make such amendments as might appear proper, with the view of sending it down to the other House in such a shape as that it might be sent out to the Island of Jamaica with some hope and prospect of being effectual.—Lord HARROWOOD withdrew his amendment, and the bill was read a second time.

TUESDAY, July 2.—In committee on the Jamaica Enactments Bill, Lord LYNDHURST moved, as the wisest, most politic, and most conciliatory course, the omission of the first clause, that which empowers the "Governor and Council of Jamaica to make laws, ordinances, &c."—Lord GLENELG supported the clause, contending that with the present temper of the House of Assembly it was absolutely requisite.—The Marquis of NORMANBY also opposed such proposition, and added that, though he had been charged with having uttered unconciliatory and not wisely-tempered sentiments, after reflection on them he did not regret anything that he had said on this subject. He would not say that the time might never arrive when the House of Assembly could legislate on these matters, but he held that it had not yet come, and that, therefore, the generous people of England would not consent to leave the emancipated negroes in such hands.—A long discussion followed, in which the Earl of Harewood, Lord Brougham, Lord Melbourne, Lord Seaford, and Lord St. Vincent took part.—The committee then divided; Contents, 80; Non-contents, 149.—Majority against the clause, 69.

FRIDAY, July 5.—The Jamaica Government Bill was read a third time and passed. National Education—The Archbishop of Canterbury moved an Address to Her Majesty not to allow further steps to be taken in a measure so fraught with importance to the best interests of the people without giving to that House an opportunity to express its opinion on the subject; and the Marquess of Lansdowne moved, as an amendment, the previous question. At half past three the House divided, when there appeared—for the original motion 219, for the amendment 108—majority against ministers, 111.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 1.—Lord INGESTRIE inquired of the Secretary to the Admiralty, if he was in possession of any information respecting an outrage on the British flag said to have been recently committed in the Mexican Sea, and if the Admiralty had any knowledge of a Midshipman having been ordered to receive a reprimand by Commodore Douglas, and if so, if the Admiralty coincided with that order?—Mr. C. WOOD stated, that he had received no information of any transaction of that sort, for the very best reason, for, as far as he could understand, no such transaction had taken place. If the dates given in the papers to which the noble Lord had called his attention were correct, it was impossible that it could have taken place, because the Vestal was not at Vera Cruz at the time. He was sorry to be obliged to communicate a report which was not sufficiently authenticated, but he did so lest there should be a charge of an attempt to conceal anything. The statement he was about to make he had received from an officer who came from the spot, and he could not vouch for the extreme accuracy of the account. Two British officers went out in a Mexican fishing-boat to learn to catch turtle, and hoisted the British ensign. That boat went into the French quarters, where the French guard-boat found and took out of it a Mexican subject who was with them. Some communication took place with the French Admiral on the subject, and in the course of 24 hours the whole of the persons who had been arrested were liberated. With regard to the other question, he conceived that if any irregularities or indiscretions were committed by subordinate officers, the Commander of the station had a perfect right to animadvert upon them.

WEDNESDAY, July 3.—The British Flag.—Sir F. BURDETT wished to ask whether any steps had been taken towards an inquiry into the outrage stated to have been lately committed upon our flag, by a French officer taking a Mexican subject from under its protection.—Mr. C. WOOD said that, believing that that there was not a syllable of truth in the statement, but that it was a mere newspaper story, without the slightest foundation, he saw no necessity for making any inquiry on the subject.

FRIDAY, July 5.—Penny Postage.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the subjoined resolution:—

"That it is expedient to reduce postage to one uniform rate of one penny, subject to regulations with respect to weight to be hereafter fixed; that the parliamentary privilege of franking shall be altogether abolished; that official franking shall be placed under strict regulations; and that this House pledges itself to make good any deficiency in the revenue, should the alteration cause the expenditure to exceed the receipts."—The consideration of the resolution was postponed to Friday next.

What does the Queen intend to do?—It may be the intention of Her Majesty to put herself at the head of the radical party; if so, she must prepare herself for taking another step some few years hence; she must prepare for placing herself at the head of the revolutionary party. Before executing this last task, it would be well if she would reflect on the fact, that she herself, her throne, her prerogative, and her religion, are the real objects of attack; and that, though for a time the revolutionary fury may appear to be directed elsewhere, yet that they ultimately will be attacked. The revolution to which by heading the radical party she would lead the country, will not be a revolution of dynasties, but of institutions:—she is an institution; and the very first that would be sacrificed. It may be that several counsellors of Her Majesty have suggested to her, that by heading a revolution she will cover her name with glory, and secure to it a brilliant immortality—but the history of the monarchs that have headed revolutions is not of a nature to invite imitation of their proceedings. The monarch and the people, however unanimous at first, must at last quarrel; the monarch will tire of concession, but the people will not relax in their demands; each successive concession, while it will provoke the appetite for others, will disarm the sovereign of a portion of his power to resist; until the sovereign, having been converted into a puppet, as a puppet will be found to be expensive, and be gotten rid of. If the people of England turn republicans, there is one republican virtue they will be sure to exercise, that of economy, namely;—and if they succeed in reducing the power of the sovereign to a name, they will insist on the benefit of that reduction. Though one portion of that picture of England pourtrayed by Mrs. Shelley, in the romance of "The Last Man," should be realised, and England become a republic—assuredly another part of her vision, that of the Earls of Windsor, will not be so. Those advisers of Her Majesty, who counsel her to become the chief of the radical party, and who believe that they may do so with security to themselves, should beware!—Monthly Law Magazine.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—According to the French papers, the garrison of Paris just now amounts to 60,000 men of the line, in addition to thirteen legions of the National Guard, two regiments of the Municipal Guard, and two thousand town-serjeants.

TURKEY.—The Turkish General-in-Chief.—Hafiz Pacha is to attack the Egyptians as soon as the fleet is on the Syrian coast. If Hafiz should triumph, his reward will be without bounds, but the Egyptian army is much superior in number and discipline, and is better commanded. Hafiz is brave, but he has no other military qualities. He is ignorant of the art of war, and his army scarcely amounts to 60,000 men, including the irregular troops. Ibrahim alone has 45,000 men, with more than 100 cannon. The sympathy of the Syrians for the Turks is the great chance for Hafiz.

RUSSIA.—The camp near Borodino will consist of 200,000 men. At the review at Warsaw, there will be at least 80,000 men under arms.

LISBON, June 24.—The Crocodile, having on board the Duke de Nemours and suite, arrived here from Cadiz on Thursday last, and the Lightning British Admiralty steamer on Saturday from Portsmouth, bringing the Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha, his two sons, and his daughter, on a visit to their Majesties. The Duke de Nemours paid a visit to the British Admiral, Sir John A. Ommanney, this morning, when the squadron fired a royal salute on his going on board and leaving. British ships-of-war in the Tagus—Donegal, Ganges, Implacable Espoir, and Lightning.

EGYPT.—A letter from Constantinople, dated June 12, brings the important intelligence that a bull of excommunication had been launched by the Sultan against his rebellious vassal Mehemet Ali. In consequence, Mehemet Ali has been deposed from the Pachalik of Egypt, and Ibrahim from that of Syria. A formal communication had been made on this subject to the European Ambassadors. The bull of excommunication was to have been read in the mosques on 14th June. The fleet sailed in two divisions on 8th and 9th, and was to rendezvous at Gallipoli, where they would take in extra stores and 10,000 additional troops. Before the sailing of the last division, the Sultan went in state on board the Mahmodie; and, after prayers had been offered up for the success of the expedition, he addressed the officers and men, and exhorted them to do their duty as if he himself had been with them. Captain Walker, who virtually directs all the manœuvres of the fleet, was invested by the Sultan with the rank of Rear-Admiral. The latest accounts from Syria represented Hafiz Pacha as still occupying his position on the Euphrates. It was said that 4,000 deserters from the Egyptian Army had already joined his ranks. It was reported in Constantinople that the destination of the fleet was direct for Alexandria.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The intelligence from Cape Town is still of a gloomy nature. Malignant measles were carrying off the inhabitants at the rate of 24 per day. The colonial servants are insolent and restless (thanks to sudden emancipation), provisions are scarcer and dearer, and more farmers were about to emigrate. We trust that the attention of Government and of the country will be directed towards a languishing but most valuable colony.

THE SOLDIER'S FUNERAL.

HEARD ye the sound of the muffled drum
And the trumpet's mournful blast?
They tell that the soldier's time has come,
His dreams of glory past!

Saw ye yon bier, on whose sable pall
A sword and helmet rest?
No more by that helm, at bugle call,
Shall the soldier's brow be prest!

Saw ye yon noble war-horse led
The funeral rites to grace?
Dark plumes are waving o'er his head,
And he walks with measured pace.

Oh! never more shall the soldier guide
His gallant steed again!
Nor mingle more in youthful pride
'Midst yonder glittering train.

Slowly, with arms reversed, they tread
As they follow to the grave,
Him who, now numbered with the dead,
Was the bravest of the brave.

Heard ye yon musket's echoing peal?
'Tis the soldier's last farewell!
But he cannot now its sadness feel,
Bound down by death's dark spell.

They turn again—yon martial train—
From the soldier's lowly tomb,
While the shrill fife gives some joyous strain,
To chase the church-yard's gloom.

They are gone! and in his earthy bed
Is he left unwept alone?
Lingers no mourner near the dead
O'er the beloved—to moan?

Oh! saw ye not yon hooded pair
In mourning garments clad?
And marked ye not their grief-worn air,
Think ye they are not sad?

The mother weeps her darling son,
Her hope, her joy, her pride!
He was the widow's only one—
For him she would have died.

Her thin grey hair neglected strays
Across her aged brow,
While kneeling on the grave she prays
O'er him who fills it now.

Though tearful is that sunken eye,
Yet holy peace is there—
For she trusts with him above the sky
Soon a heavenly home to share.

Her pilgrimage is nearly past,
Her every earthly woe;
Like the ancient tree that falls at last
When wintry tempests blow.

But the young mourner at her side—
Her frame convulsed with grief;
Oh! how shall she long years abide?
What yield her heart relief!

For he to whom that heart was bound
With love's devoted ties;
Lost—lost to her—beneath the ground
In the dark coffin lies.

And she is left all desolate
To tread life's weary way;—
What marvel she repines at fate,
And dares for death to pray!

What marvel that she wildly cries
For the grave its prey to yield;—
Oh! what avail are tears or sighs,—
His earthly doom is sealed!

Sealed—'till the last deep trumpet shake
All earth with its awful sound;
Then shall the dead, arousing, wake,
While nature sinks around.

Literary Notices.

Travels in North America during the Years 1834, 1835, and 1836. Including a Summer Residence with the Pawnee Tribe of Indians, in the remote Prairies of the Missouri, and a Visit to Cuba and the Azore Islands. By the Hon. Charles Augustus Murray. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

WE never perused a more interesting book of travels than the present. Our author, whether he figures in the hospitable circles in the different cities of the United States, or camps with the savage Pawnees near a thousand miles from any habitation of civilised man, is alike animated, graphic, and vigorous. In the most critical and dangerous situations, his cheerfulness never forsakes him: nothing less, indeed, than this dominant quality could have sustained him in the perils to which he was exposed during his residence with the Pawnees, and particularly in his bold attempt to escape from them, and find his way across a trackless desert, without guides, to the frontier post of civilization. Mr. Murray's sketches of life among the red men are exceedingly various, and are worthy of the most careful study. He travelled with them, hunted with them, camped with them; and his numerous anecdotes of their manners and customs, coupled with his own singular adventures among them, constitute the most striking Indian story we are acquainted with. During his travels in the United States, Mr. Murray was personally introduced to Gen. Jackson, Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, Judge Marshall, Mr. J. F. Cooper, and other distinguished Transatlantic personages. The portion of his book which is connected with these famous individuals, will be referred to with great interest.

Sir Harris Nicolas's History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. John Hunter.

THE fourth part of this very superb work nearly concludes the history of the Garter. The proceedings of the Order during the reigns of the sovereigns George III. and IV., William IV., and to the present time, are faithfully recorded; but we must confess our regret that the learned antiquarian and historiographer has not enriched this portion with copious biographical and other notes, referring to the individuals introduced into the Order during the last half century. We have already remarked on the very valuable notes in the three preceding parts of the work, collected with great care from the early historians of the Order; and we think Sir Harris would do well to follow their example, in writing that portion of the history of this, and the other British Orders, which may be considered as entirely new and most generally interesting. It is not, however, too late to remedy the omission, and we should rejoice if our remarks lead to such an improvement. In giving the history of the Order of the Bath, Sir Harris does not, we presume, intend to pass over the achievements of the distinguished individuals of our own times; but the regulations of that Order excluded officers of certain ranks, however prominent their services; and we could point to one who was pre-eminently distinguished, who was most severely wounded on the field of battle, but whose only Order is that of the Garter. Now, in writing history, it seems to us scarcely correct that the individual who has so distinguished himself should be as little noticed, in a work of this description, as the man whose life has been a continued scene of dissipation and debauchery, and whose rank and riches alone made him a member of the Most Noble Order.

The plates with the present portion are perhaps superior even to those in the preceding parts: they consist of the Collar of the Guelphic Order, the Badge of the Garter, and the Medals of the War, which are most exquisitely represented.

A Sketch of Native Education in India, under the Superintendence of the Church of Scotland. By James Bryce, D.D.—W. H. Allen and Co.

THE design of the learned author of this "sketch" of a matter requiring the most elaborate examination, is simply to keep the great subject of Native Education before the Christian world, not in any one isolated and detached point of view, in which it may present itself when seen by the moralist or the missionary, but as identified with a vast diversity of interests, and affected by the complex operation of no less vast a variety of elements, many of which are too apt to be overlooked on a superficial view. The exertions of the Church of Scotland towards educating the native population of the East, the zealous endeavours of the missionaries, their desire to combine religious with secular instruction, and the opposition they have experienced from the "New Literary Society?" are points dwelt upon with no less energy than talent. Dr. Bryce is well known to Orientalists, and his writings will always command notice, and we regret that our limits prevent us, at this moment, giving to them that full consideration which we are sensible they deserve.

St. Stephen's; or, Pencillings of Politicians By Mask. H. Cunningham.

"MASK," whoever he may be, has a wonderful good opinion of himself. It is to save Dame History a vast deal of trouble—a great deal of raking in old chests, and dusting her fingers among old magazines and newspapers, that our author has taken the pains to strive off for her use a series of descriptions and biographies, which will dovetail nicely into her narrative, and save her all care upon the subject. The sketches include the Duke of Wellington; Lords Grey, Lyndhurst, Brougham, Melbourne, Londonderry, John Russell, Palmerston, Howick, Normanby, Holland, and Stanley; the Duke of Buckingham; Sirs R. Peel, C. Wetherell, F. Burdett, J. Graham; the Archbishop of Dublin, and Bishop of Exeter; Messrs. D. O'Connell and Hume;—and we are told very gravely that nine-tenths of them ought to be exceedingly obliged to the incognito for having taken up the pencil of a historical painter; for it is highly probable that by his aid, and by his aid only, will the good people who may happen to exist some hundred years hence, have an inkling that such persons ever lived upon the earth—"Depend upon it," says "Mask," "most famous politicians, she (History) will take my assistance in vastly good part, and that the only history of you that will ever be read, will be taken from these pages." This is modest; but, notwithstanding the egregious vanity of the author, some of his sketches have spirit, and occasionally truth. That of the Duke of Wellington, however, is absurd from beginning to end; and we, therefore, shall not quote a line, but content ourselves with a portion of some of the other notices:—

Sir Robert Peel.—"What do you think of him? Was there anything original, philosophical, Burkitts, in the speech you have just heard? Not a syllable; it had neither brilliancy of conception nor manliness of argument; but it had tact, very great tact, and that is so much better than brilliance or logic, that had Burke started from his grave to reply to it, he would have been coughed back again in ten minutes. Sir Robert lavishes no sous upon agile opera girls, and figures in no amorous confessions of frail Harriets. He has ever been a man of unquestioned propriety; he throws away no auxiliary to ambition; and he well knows how much 'respectability' is worth in England. He was a good boy at college, and jagged hard. He took a double first-class—no very great thing to do, as examinations then went, and what half-a-dozen very mediocre men upon an average do every year, not that the difficulty is trebled; but still a very 'respectable' achievement for a gentleman commoner of Christ Church, in days when champagne and scarlet coats were the order of the day, and Latin and Greek were voted vulgar. Perhaps it was this early performance which first inspired him with that extraordinary estimation of his own powers—that religious awe of himself which seems always to absorb him. He appears sometimes quite wrapped in self-contemplation, and, doubtless,

"'The more he thinks, the more his wonder grows,
That one small head can carry all he knows.'

Brougham, in one of his pamphlets, sneers cruelly at this 'his deep and devout veneration for himself, destined, among other things, by reverently dropping the voice upon naming the object of his adoration.' No one who has ever heard the Right Hon. Baronet pronounce the pronoun 'I' in one of his speeches can fail to feel the full force of this sarcasm.

"Peel is one of the weeds thrown up from the populace by the fierce agitation which the expenditure of a thousand millions of money created in our society. George the Third, with his old German notions of long descents and interminable quarterings, could not forget the Peel spinning-machines. It is an old story. No less than three of the near relations of Sir Robert have married ladies bearing the Christian name of Jane. I forget what year it was in that the old King was told that — Peel had just married Miss Jane —. 'Ods bobs!' exclaimed the royal wag, after congratulating the bridegroom, his pig-tail absolutely wagging with suppressed fun, 'Ods bobs, Liverpool, how these Peels do stick to their Jennies!'"

Lord Melbourne.—"Look at him attentively. He has the air of a good-tempered, jovial, gentlemanly man; no fool, but hardly a conjuror. He certainly is not the man whom Theophrastus would have chosen to be Prime Minister. If he have profundity of thought, the penetration to foresee remote consequences, the ready fertility in expedients to meet sudden contingencies, the mind to map the course of the great vessel of state, and the eloquence to persuade others that that course is the best which could be devised,—if he have all these, which are popularly looked upon as the requisities for a Prime Minister, nature has certainly not made his face an index to his mind.

"Lord Melbourne is an old man without domestic ties to keep him at home, of gentlemanly manners and a well-stored mind—precisely one of those men whose society women delight in; with whom they can take liberties without danger, and form a familiar friendship without scandal. An agreeable and elegant-mannered old man will always be a favourite with a young woman who is neither a flirt nor a fool, whether her sphere be a cottage or a Court. What a relief, then, must such a friendship and the conversation of such a man have been to a woman of genius yoked for life to Mr. Norton!"

Sir James Graham.—"Sir James is a very fat man, with some thousands a year of income, who has been a very violent Radical, and is now a very violent Tory. There are his recommendations to notice. Intrinsically Sir James is a man of very small ability, either for good or for evil. He consists of a very huge frame, with very large endowment of oily matter; dark hair, full round face, a good sized nose, and feet of a size which were mercifully moulded by Dame Nature for his particular accommodation, in order to uphold a weight of body which they alone could have sustained. Graham's intellect is as obese as his body. Coarse and ungainly—sufficiently removed from anything like elegance to prevent the absurdity of pretending to it unworthily—he affects the plain style of the farmer; and because he can talk in a straight-forward manner that which he intends to say, Sir James, who never ventured upon a figure in his life, or ever uttered a sentence which was worthy of remembrance, actually thinks himself an orator. Yes, reader, the rough-looking mountain of flesh is actually consumed by vanity; and being exceedingly stricken, he does not even strive to conceal his infirmity. Like many stupid people who find that, from sheer stupidity, they do things unlike other people, and that, by the help of a strange luck, their blunders have sometimes been to them success, Sir James, finding that his farmer-like harangues and plain violent Radicalism were listened to, and replied to, and talked about, conceived the notion that there must be something surprisingly eloquent in what he said. The Hon. Baronet awakened suddenly to the agreeable consciousness that he [illegible] talking eloquence all his life.

"Jamie would see his shadow [illegible].

"Sir James Graham, to the infinite astonishment of every one, was put over the Admiralty. A man who [illegible] no more of a ship than that it was an inconvenient vehicle [illegible] to make sea-sick people sick, was intrusted with the control of [illegible] navy of Great Britain. He set about reforming with an [illegible] and a manner peculiarly his own—turned the Admiralty [illegible] windows in no time—and, doubtless, would never have stopped [illegible] he had cut down every 74 into a frigate, and built up every [illegible] boat into a 120-gun ship, if he had only been left alone, and [illegible] to pursue his senseless whim for mere change unchecked. His unlooked-for elevation had absolutely turned his head. Feeling that he had no very deep thought or design to go upon, he appears to have imagined that his impulses were infallible, and, verily, he gave them a full trial. There are none so vain as your very stupid people, whom a few incidental successes have rendered confident as to the superiority of their own capacities.

"Enough of Graham. It is a strong argument against popular discrimination that such a talentless and principleless person could ever hoist himself for a moment to the height of a popular favourite. Stripped of his disguise, he has fallen to his proper level. There let him lie."

The Life of the Duke of Wellington, compiled from His Grace's Despatches. By G. Soane. Vol. I. E. Churton.

WE are far from agreeing with Mr. Soane that, because the Duke has given to the world his Despatches, there now needs neither historian nor biographer of that illustrious man; the Despatches are merely auxiliaries for a good history of his brilliant career. The compilation before us, professing to furnish the spirit of the Despatches, appears to us, on a cursory inspection, to be well-executed, and is, therefore, a useful book of reference, especially for those who cannot afford to purchase Colonel Gurwood's twelve volumes.

Life of Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby. By Caroline A. Halsted. Smith, Elder, and Co.

A very excellent Biography, containing many historical details of the highest interest, most carefully condensed. The style of the fair author is remarkably clear and agreeable.

East India Intelligence.

On Friday, 28th June, at the examination at the East India Company's College at Haileybury, the following gentlemen passed and received appointment in the Company's civil service as Writers. For Bengal—Messrs. Bushby, Brodhurst, Lautour, Riddell, Fletcher, Ross, Berford, Melvill, Inverarity and Winefield. For Madras—Messrs. Levinge, Phillips, Ratcliff, and Goldie. For Bombay—Mr. C. E. Stewart.

Letters have been received in Bombay from Lieut. Pottinger, dated 4th Feb., and our accounts from the Army contain intelligence regarding him of a still later date. We are happy to state that he was then well and in high spirits, having recovered all his former influence with the Shah and his ministers. The misunderstanding had been of a very serious nature; so much so, indeed, that at one period Lieut. Pottinger's life was placed in serious peril. The history of the affair is this:—The Minister sent his brother to Lieut. Pottinger, requesting an advance of money to his (the Minister's) quota of troops. This he refused, unless some decided change was made in the system of extortion and tyranny pursued towards the people of the city. High words ensued, which ended in imposing upon Lieut. Pottinger the necessity of turning the Minister's brother out of doors. The house was soon surrounded by soldiery, and one man (we believe a servant or retainer of our gallant countryman) was seized and his right hand cut off, but whether in an affray or by order, does not clearly appear. The people and syuds unanimously took up the part of Lieut. Pottinger, and after various messages and visits the Shah was made to comprehend the true nature of the case. He promised to pension the mutilated man, to punish the persons who had wounded him, and to send the Minister to apologize in the public Adawlut, whither Lieut. Pottinger was to proceed escorted by all the ministers of Government. He agreed also to order those changes in the system which had been demanded. Lieut. Pottinger declares that both King and people are ready to throw themselves into our arms, and that we can establish our rule, or our influence, as it may seem best to us, from the Oxus to the sea.—Bombay Times, May 8.

Mr. J. W. Alexander has resigned the office of Commissioner of the Court of Requests, Bengal, on the ground that he has conscientious scruples touching the administering idolatrous oaths.—Calcutta Englishman, April 20th.

The following is an extract of a letter received from Berhampore, dated 16th April:—"Brev.-Maj. Bacon, 65th N.I., died at a short distance from this station on the night of the 14th inst. He had been long in a delicate state of health, and it is not improbable that the extreme heat of the weather accelerated the fatal termination. This vacancy promotes Brev.-Capt. J. Whiteford and Ensign C. M. Rees."—Hurkaru, April 20th.

Nusserabad.—Orders for the arrest of Cornet Chapman, accompanied by descriptive rolls of him as a deserter, have been sent to the neighbouring stations. No trace of this unfortunate youth has been discovered. The extent of his fraudulent operations is not known, though fresh disclosures are daily coming to light in the shape of bills returned dishonoured, and angry letters from tradesmen and agents, shewing already defalcations to the amount of 50,000 rupees. The whole affair is one of much regret, the unfortunate officer having been very popular for his gentlemanly manners and general social qualities. No suspicion that he was embarrassed existed until lately; for though he lived expensively, maintaining a handsome domestic establishment, a racing stud, and giving racing cups, &c. &c., the fortune he represented himself to possess at home was considered sufficient to cover all.—Agra Ukhbar, March 21st.

Col. Benson has been obliged to quit Burmah in consequence of ill health. By this arrangement the duties of Resident will devolve on Capt. M'Leod, together with all the hopes of success in settling matters amicably with the Burmese Court without the necessity of going to war.—Maulmain Chronicle, March 27th.

A letter just received from Ferozepore informs us that the station is considered as one of the healthiest and pleasantest in India. Runjeet Sing's health is likely to keep them on the qui vive, and they have not given up all hopes of the Cashmere shawls and other little et cetera.—Delhi Gazette, April 3d.

On the 22d March an attack was made on the Government Treasury at Malwan by a body of about 200 men; but the attempt was frustrated by the gallantry of a small party of the 18th reg. Madras N.I. and the local police.—Bombay Times, March 30th.

A special Court of Proprietors of East India Stock was held on Wednesday at the East India House, to take into consideration the propriety of petitioning both Houses of Parliament, praying the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the commercial relations between Great Britain and India, especially with reference to the reduction of the duties levied in the ports of the United Kingdom on articles the produce and manufacture of British India. After some discussion it was agreed that the resolutions should be referred to the Court of Directors, who might be instructed that they should draw up a petition which they would submit to the Court. The Court then agreed to the Bill for allowing the rules and regulations of the Courts in India, and adjourned.

A mail from India, viâ France, arrived at the East India House on Friday morning; left Bombay, 20th May, per Atalanta. The latest dates from Bengal, 8th, and Madras, 9th May. The passengers per Atalanta from Bombay, were—Mr. and Mrs. Rawlinson, Donna Joaquima Roza de Azavedo, James Anderson, Esq., Mr. H. Blanker, Mrs. Anderson, Maj.-Gen. Sullivan, Lieut. W. L. Walker, 4th reg., G. S. Vigne, Esq., Rev. Mr. Davis, Capt. R. Lowe, R.N., Mrs. Mills, and a native servant. The Company's despatches only having arrived through their special messenger, no private letters have been received. Rumours, however, are current, but with almost the certainty of truth, that the advanced division of the Army of the Indus had been attacked by the Afghans within 15 coss of Candahar, and were overborne, but Col. Sale's brigade coming up very opportunely turned the scale in our favour, and ended in a complete rout.

It is likewise very currently rumoured that these despatches bring accounts of the demise of Runjeet Sing, which, if true, will very materially change the present views and intentions of the Indian Government.

COURT OF INQUIRY

By Maj.-Gen. Sir J. F. Fitzgerald, K.C.B., 1st May, 1839. The Commander-in-Chief has had under consideration the proceedings of a Court of Inquiry assembled to inquire into certain points connected with the conduct of Capt. Duff, 15th N.I., while in command of a detachment at Vingorla, and after an attentive perusal of everything therein recorded, it affords him great satisfaction to express publicly his entire concurrence in the opinion of the Court, which is in every respect highly honourable to Capt. Duff.

But in doing justice to that officer, Maj.-Gen. Sir John Fitzgerald regrets that, from the papers before him, it becomes his duty to notice with great disapprobation the conduct of others of the same regiment, junior to Capt. Duff, in respect to the manner in which they have conducted themselves in the matter lately under investigation.

As one of the younger officers, whose name appears on the proceedings as having permitted himself to make insinuations against Capt. Duff, was not examined, and therefore had not an opportunity of explanation, the Commander of the Forces will not further advert to it; and from the short standing in the service of Ens. Rait, the Major-General is willing to attribute the impropriety of conduct in that officer to inexperience and want of consideration.

But the same grounds of excuse cannot be extended to Capt. Crispin and Lieut. Morris, who appear, for reasons best known to themselves, to have endeavoured to bring the professional character of their senior brother officer into disrepute, thereby indicating acts inspiring grievings, both as officers and private individuals, as render it unnecessary for the Commander of the Forces to make any further remarks.

In concluding these observations, Major-Gen. Sir J. Fitzgerald cannot too strongly impress the indispensable necessity of officers placed in command of maintaining the strictest control, and of checking at the instant the slightest mark of disobedience in whatsoever kind; as on this principle hangs the mainspring of Military operations, for from the head all orders should emanate, and the inferior officer must naturally expect the zealous and active co-operation of all ranks.
